The Colonials and the Rams met to close out the regular season and URI put an end to GW's seven–game win streak. When the Colonials defeated Massachusetts two games ago, sophomore center Yinka Dare dominated the paint, scoring 24 points and grabbing 20 rebounds in the upset win. If Dare is ready to go, he should give Al Skinner's Rams all sorts of problems on the interior.

However, Dare is known to ride the performance roller coaster, and if he is soaring down from a peak to a valley, the Rams could win two in a row against the Colonials.

No. 2 Temple vs. No. 7 Rutgers.

This could be the biggest mismatch of the quarterfinals, with the Owls having beaten the Scarlet Knights in two games by a combined score of 162–101. Temple will use its 2–3 match–up zone in an attempt to shut down Rutgers offense, which isn't all that potent anyway. Both Temple Coach John Chaney and GW Coach Mike Jarvis want another crack at John Calipari and the Minutemen. If they are to get their wish, it will have to happen in the A–10 Championship in the William D. Mullins Center — that is, if the high seeds survive that long.

Freshmen lead women over Bonaventure

By SEAN P. HAYDEN
Collegian Staff

Let it snow, let it snow, let it snow!

The weather outside was frightful, but that was no matter, as a pair of freshmen each parlayed a hot hall of basketball to lead the University of Massachusetts women's team out of a four-game skid and over Atlantic 10 foe St. Bonaventure, 66-51, last night at the Curry Hicks Cage.

Beth Kuzmeski shot 6-10 from the field (5-7 three-point land) in the first half for 17 points and finished with 21, while fellow freshman Crystal Carroll registered a double- double with 17 points (6-7 in the second half, 15 points) and 10 rebounds.

Ironically, the last time these two teams hooked up, the duo had enjoyed their most productive games to that point, with Kuzmeski throwing in 25 and Carroll 15 in a 81-68 win at St. Bonaventure Jan. 15.

The Bonnies (14-11, 8-7 A-10) were led by Suzie Dailer's 21.

"It's funny because they've both been struggling the last three or four games," said Massachusetts Coach Joanie O'Brien. "Tonight was good for them.

"Beth's been struggling shooting the ball and I was so happy for her just to hit a couple — more so for her confidence than for anything else."

The Minutewomen (12-12, 6-8 A-10) were in control throughout and led by 10 at the half, 31-21. Most important, however, they avoided the second-half letdown that has plagued them all season long, outscoring St. Bonnie's 35-30 in the second stanza.

"That's not something we really think about too much," O'Brien said. "We used some of our size and some of our speed and cut down on what they were trying to do.

"The thing with St. Bonaventure is they play so hard and if you let down at all, they're going to come back."

Massachusetts' dominance in the paint was evident in the fact it outrebounded the Bonnies 52-28 and its inside trio of Carroll, Octavia Thomas (eight points, 11 boards) and Melissa Gurile (16 points, six rebounds) outscored St. Bonnie's frontline 41-11.

Not only were the Minutewomen hot on offense, but they also excelled on defense, limiting the Bonnies to a 27 percent (14-52) night from the field.

"I was real, real happy with our defensive effort," O'Brien said.

Minutewoman Notes: Gurile scored her 700th career point at 16:10 of the second half on a turnaround jumper, joining Thomas and making her only the fourth player in Massachusetts history to go over the 700-point mark within her first two seasons ... Kuzmeski broke the team record for three-pointers made in a season with her 43rd, breaking the previous record held by Sue Serafini set during the 1989-90 season.

Tomorrow is Senior Day for the Minutewomen as seniors Maleeka Valentine, Cherie Muza, Francie Hansen and Jessica Gould will be honored before the Temple game, slated for a 2 p.m. start at the Cage.

Women's gym looking for revenge

By ANTHONY GUIDO
Collegian Staff

Tonight, Senior Night, the University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics team will look for revenge against the University of New Hampshire in its last home meet of the season, in the Boyden Gymnastics Center.

In the New England Cup on Jan. 15, UNH defeated UMass by three points in what was the first meet of the season for the Minutewomen.

"We felt we were a little closer than the three points indicated. It'll be nice to get them in our backyard," Coach David Kuzara said.

It will be a special night for seniors Margaret Furtado and Angela Jent, in front of the home fans for one last time. Kuzara stressed the comfort of a young program having two seniors available for all events if necessary.

"We want to make it a memorable night for our two seniors. I think Margaret is ready to explode, she's won the all-around once but she is ready to put it all together," Kuzara said.

"In a way it's sad, but exciting. We are about equal to UNH, it's tough for them to be here," Jent said.

"I'm excited; it'll be different, the crowd will be more into the meet for us," Furtado said.

UMass has had a solid week of training coming off last weekend's victory over Springfield College. UNH enters the meet ranked 22nd, with UMass at 29.

"Being ranked 29th isn't where we want to be. We are a team with an attitude, and that is dangerous for our opponents," Kuzara said.

UNH has struggled in its last few meets, but it makes the Wildcats even more dangerous. Kuzara expects both squads to be able to get their scores close to the 190 range.

"There is a lot of pressure on them; they come in as the favorite in our building," Kuzara said.

Traditionally, UNH has struggled in meets at Boyden, but they are calling this year's team the best ever in school history.

"Pretty soon we'll be the favorites that everyone will gun for. Right now it's UNH, but I wouldn't want to come in here if I was them," Kuzara said.

The meet, originally scheduled for the Curry Hicks Cage, is now set to be held at 7:30 p.m. in Boyden Gymnasium. After the UNH meet, the Minutewomen go on the road to face tough Atlantic 10 competition, startling with Rutgers on March 12.

The battle for the Atlantic 10 crown begins

Game-by-game tournament preview

By ARTHUR STAPLETON JR.
Collegian Staff

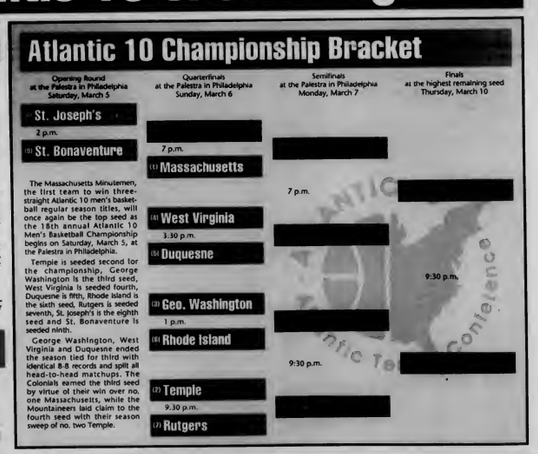
Over the past two years, thanks to strong performances by teams such as Massachusetts, Temple and George Washington in the NCAA tournament, the Atlantic 10 Conference has jumped on the national map of college basketball. This season, the league has had two squads (the Minutemen and the Owls) ranked in the Associated Press Top 15 all year long, along with Top 25 appearances by GW and West Virginia.

The winner of the post-season tourney these last two years has been put as a No. 3 seed [Massachusetts] in the East Region of the NCAA Tournament, a place teams from the once-dominant Big East Conference used to fill annually. But unlike in the past two seasons, the A-10 will probably send only two teams [Massachusetts and Temple] to the Big Dance in two weeks.

That is, of course, unless another team steps in up this weekend and defies the odds by walking away with the A- 10 post-season crown and the automatic berth in the NCAAs. Here is a look now at the first round of action in the A-10 tourney, beginning with the classic eight-nine game.

No. 8 St. Joseph's vs. No. 9 St. Bonaventure.

St. Joe's and St. Bonaventure in what some would like to call the "Bonnie Invitational." The winner of this one gets the unfavorable task of facing No. 1 seed Massachusetts, something that the Bonnies know all about — they were bounced out by the Minutemen in last year's tourney.



The squads split their contests in the regular season. A key match-up will be the ability of the Bonnies to hit the glass against St. Joe's and the league's leading rebounder, Carlin Warley. The Hawks led the A-10 in rebounding margin; they averaged five caroms better than their opponents.

Even though the Bonnies beat both GW and West Virginia this season, St. Joe's still has the better victory; the Hawks handed Massachusetts its first of two conference losses on Feb. 15.

Atlantic 10 Championship Bracket

The Massachusetts Minutemen, the first team to win three-straight Atlantic 10 men's basketball regular season titles, will once again be the top seed as the 18th annual Atlantic 10 Men's Basketball Championship begins on Saturday, March 5, at the Palestra in Philadelphia.

Temple is seeded second for the championship, George Washington is the third seed, West Virginia is seeded fourth, Duquesne is fifth, Rhode Island is the sixth seed, Rutgers is seeded seventh, St. Joseph's is the eighth seed and St. Bonaventure is seeded ninth.

George Washington, West Virginia and Duquesne ended the season tied for third with identical 8-8 records and split all head-to-head matchups. The Colonials earned the third seed by virtue of their win over no. one Massachusetts, while the Mountaineers laid claim to the fourth seed with their season sweep of no. two Temple.

Player of the Year candidates

Eddie Jones
Senior forward, Temple
19.3 ppg, 6.8 rpg

Lou Roe
Junior forward, Massachusetts
18.6 ppg, 8.3 rpg

Harry Moore
Senior forward, St. Bonaventure
19.3 ppg, 6.8 rpg

The race for this award is wide-open. Roe came out of the gates strong, gaining A-10 Player of the Week honors for the first two. However, since that time, opponents have attempted to bottle him up inside with double and triple teams, forcing Roe's teammates to carry the scoring burden for a majority of the stretch run. Jones is the favorite because of all the hype; because he is on the last-place team, Moore probably won't get it, even though he may deserve the trophy.

Coach of the Year candidates

John Calipari
University of Massachusetts
• his Minutemen won an unprecedented third-straight A-10 regular season title
• looking to repeat as A-10 Coach of the Year
• directed Massachusetts to a 24-6 record this season and into the AP Top 10 for the first time ever

John Carroll
Duquesne University
• in the Dukes' return to the A-10 after a one-year absence, he guided Duquesne into a tie for third place

Freshman of the Year candidates

• led the A-10 in blocked shots with 92
• averaged 6.3 rebounds
• won Freshman of the Week award five times
• set an A-10 record by winning it three straight weeks

Tom Pipkins, guard
Duquesne University
• led all A-10 freshmen in scoring (14.7 ppg)

Serbian air attack

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — A NATO jet swooped over a besieged northern town Sunday after Bosnian state radio claimed Serb warplanes destroyed a bridge in an attack similar to the one that provoked NATO retaliation.

With Serb troops barring access to Maglaj, there was no way for NATO or U.N. officials to visit the site to check the claim that planes attacked the Muslim-held town about 40 miles north of Sarajevo. But NATO officers raised questions about the report. Squadron Leader John Jeffery, a NATO spokesman in Naples, Italy, said early warning aircraft did not detect any air attack on Maglaj.

"If we had, we would have taken action," he said. Such a raid would be a flagrant violation of the no-fly zone imposed by the U.N. Security Council over Bosnia. It also would be a challenge to NATO, which has been patrolling the zone since April and has begun showing a new resolve to act forcibly against warring parties in the former Yugoslav state.

Last Monday, two U.S. Air Force F-16 fighters shot down four Bosnian Serb fighter-bombers in central Bosnia that U.N. officials said were attacking Bosnian government targets.

Terrorist plot exposed

NEW YORK — The alleged mastermind of a plot to bomb the United Nations said he was told to kidnap Henry Kissinger as trade bait to free those charged in the World Trade Center bombing, according to secretly taped conversations.

Several hundred pages of transcripts, reviewed by The Associated Press, give the clearest view yet of an alleged conspiracy that prosecutors say included the bombing. Fifteen men will stand trial in the conspiracy case in September.

Four men were convicted Friday in the World Trade Center bombing. They face up to life in prison without parole at their sentencing May 4.

Whitewater dogs Clinton

WASHINGTON — The administration insisted Sunday there is no evidence of wrongdoing in the Whitewater affair and blamed Republican sniping for much of the furor that GOP Sen. Phil Gramm said is getting President Clinton "deeper in a hole" that threatens his presidency.

Three top administration officials, Vice President Gore, Chief of Staff Mack McLarty and White House adviser George Stephanopoulos, appeared on Sunday news programs to say that while mistakes have been made, the White House is cooperating fully in the Whitewater investigation.

They said Republicans are trying to exploit the issue because of the successes of Clinton's programs and his rising popularity. McLarty, appearing later on CNN's "Late Edition," was asked whether Hillary Rodham Clinton was aware of White House meetings in which Resolution Trust Corp. officials discussed an investigation involving a failed savings and loan linked to the Whitewater land deal.

Childhood great honored

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. — To prove he's no grinch, Gov. William Weld said his administration is giving $600,000 to build a monument to children's author Dr. Seuss.

Thomas Costello, president of the city's Library & Museums Association, called it "a major step forward" in the effort to honor Theodor Geisel, better known by his pen name, and create a tourist attraction based on his work.

Dr. Seuss died in 1991 at age 87. The Springfield native wrote such children's books as "The Cat in the Hat" and "How the Grinch Stole Christmas."

City officials also hope to set up a walking tour and permanent exhibit in Geisel's honor.

The state money will help develop the sculpture and add lighting, signs and parking, Costello said.

Tuition increases focus of forum

By JUSTIN DOYLE
Collegian Staff

Tuition and fee increases was the main topic as the Student Government Association candidates for president and student trustee squared off in an open debate last Thursday night in the Cape Cod Lounge.

Russet Morrow of WMUA, Brian Gormley of the Collegian and Yusef Lateef from the Union Video Center made up the panel which asked candidates questions. The questions ranged from the legalization of pot to the battle over tuition increases.

Mitran Raphaely, presidential candidate spoke about her efforts organizing and planning the fight over the tuition and fee increases with the administration and now with the legislature.

"I am the chief organizer and educational campaign planner for this endeavor," Raphaely said. "I helped form the task force on economic accessablity, I ran around making sure everyone had food at the takeover, it's my job."

Jamie Bearse concentrated on specific issues including the proposal to change the budget for the university to a line-item. Joe Vozza was more concerned with student involvement in the campaign.

"If in all our effort we can get an increase in appropriations from the state to balance off the tuition and fee increases, perhaps we can get into research about getting a straight line-item funding from the state," Bearse said.

"We need to get the students more involved," Vozza said. "For example when the admissions takeover happened at the admission's building there were a 110 students there, there are 16,000 students on this campus."

Charles Lechner, president of the Radical Student Union, views the tuition battle very differently than the other candidates.

"I am a member of the task force on economic accessability, and I was disappointed that they made a decision not to fight for lowering tuition, only to try and gain the administration's support for no increase at all," Lechner said.

Al Lizana, the current student trustee running for re- election, agreed with other candidates who said that there are cliques within SGA.

"I would call it a boys club," Lizana said. "All the officers are men and all the people who get most of the credit are men. But, if you take a really close look at who does the work in SGA you will find there are many women there who work their fingers to the bone."

Diego Figueroa, the other candidate for student trustee talked about the need for reorganization of SGA.

"We need more participation of the students in SGA," said Figueroa. "We need to reorganize, we need to build strong foundations so we can work better for the students."

George Hardy, a candidate for president who answered questions at the debate, withdrew from the election.

State rep. seeks home for EPA's research

By GERI SAHN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts has a long history of being utilized for environmental research by the state and federal environmental agencies.

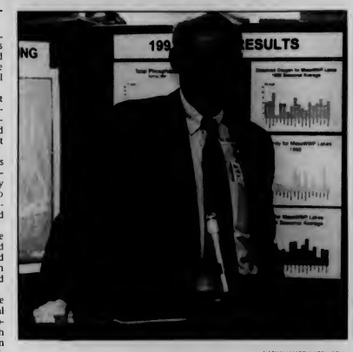
This research addresses a great deal of the environmental problems such as water pollution, biological diversity, air pollution and solid and hazardous waste brought up by federal and state priorities.

Just recently, United States Representative John W. Olver — who was also a tenured chemistry professor — filed legislation to improve research on these environmental problems and expand federal university support.

This bill was referred to the Committee on Science, Space and Technology and then be directed to the House Subcommittee on Technology, Environment and Aviation on Feb. 14, 1994.

The bill will permit the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency to create a program on campus. The EPA research teams will work with scientists from the University on enhancing environmental research.

The bill states the program will, "develop adequate, coordinated, cooperative research and training programs relating to the protection of the environment."



Last Friday, Olver held a press conference on campus at the UMass Environmental Institute, to discuss this legislation. He talked about the effect the EPA could have on the research done at the University.

"This legislation is a win-win-win. The federal government gets its research done in a cost-effective way, students and scholars get the support they need and all of us should get stronger environmental protection as a result," Olver said.

The EPA scientists will work with the University graduate students in order to form cooperative units as well as use University laboratories.

Olver said the program will provide a great deal of experience for the graduate students and will produce excellent research.

"As both a scientist and as a legislator, I know that without high quality data, decision makers can-

Figueroa shoots for change

By BRIAN GORMLEY
Collegian Staff

Sophomore Diego Figueroa is running for University of Massachusetts student trustee because he believes he can bring needed change to the Student Government Association.

Figueroa, the SGA finance committee chairman, said the SGA needs to "reconstruct its foundation" and set priorities.

"Change doesn't mean I will change the issues the SGA is working on. We are still going to fight tuition and fee increases," Figueroa said. "Change means a setting of priorities."

Figueroa said from going door-to-door visiting students, he has learned that people are mostly concerned with improving the quality of Housing, Health and Food Services. He said if elected, he will see to it that the SGA passes a motion demanding that these services improve. Then, he will work with the directors of these services to see what changes can be made.

Figueroa said the fact that the SGA is $127,000 in debt is evidence that the SGA needs change. He said because of the debt, the University is considering taking the power to allocate the $2 million of Student Activities Trust Fund money away from the SGA. SATF money is used to fund Registered Student Organizations and other student services.

Figueroa attributed much of the current student Trustee Al Lizana's success to the help he has had from the Student Center for Education Research and Advocacy's staff. He said Lizana is the first trustee to have the help of a staff.

"If Al Lizana didn't have SCERA this year he would have been an average trustee," Figueroa said. "He could have done a lot more with his staff."

Figueroa said in order to accomplish any of the reforms he is talking about, the SGA must establish a better working relationship with the university administration. He said the current relationship is too antagonistic.

"It all starts with good relations with the administration, right now we are looking at the administration as the bad guy," he said. "Let's try to make friends instead of enemies. I am sure they are able and eager to give us options.

"Right now if you are pro-administration [in the SGA] then you are a bad leader, they [senators] don't like you. We will be pro-students, but we will have good relations with the administration," Figueroa

Lizana voice of experience

By BRIAN GORMLEY
Collegian Staff

Senior Al Lizana said after a year of serving as University of Massachusetts Student Trustee, he has gained the experience and the trust of University administrators needed to be an effective advocate for student concerns.

Lizana said he should be re-elected because the Student Government Association has historically performed best when its leaders have been experienced. He also said the fact that the SGA has lacked a continuum of leadership has been one of its weaknesses.

"Rarely has the SGA had the opportunity to take advantage of a student trustee coming back to serve more than one year," Lizana said. "The SGA needs to hold on to experienced personnel and it needs to do a better job of passing on information to incoming leadership. The more time I have as trustee and the more experience I get the more I'll have to pass on to the successor when I graduate."

Lizana said it takes a year for a student trustee to really understand the position and to establish relationships with the other trustees and the University administrators.

"It takes about one good year to get a thorough understanding of what it means to be trustee, and by the time you do understand what it is all about, your term is over.

"I've done an outstanding job of executing my role as trustee and at the same time learning what it means to be trustee."

Lizana said an example of the advantage he has over a new trustee is his relationship with the president of the UMass five-campus system, Michael K. Hooker. He said relationships such as the one he has with Hooker take time to develop.

"I know Hooker very well and I am as honest and frank with him about the way students feel as any human being can possibly be. And when he sucks, I tell him," he said.

Lizana said some of his accomplishments as trustee this past year have included: the restoration of litigation rights back to the Legal Services Office, exposing the "hypocrisy" of a 7.3 percent increase in the President's office budget, and the pressuring of the administration to commit $200,000 to 40 new schol-

Farrakhan brings sure controversy

Discussion gives sharing of views

By RODNEY POWELL
Collegian Staff

As we all know, there has been much controversy surrounding the visit of Minister Louis Farrakhan. There is also much confusion as to the purpose of bringing Farrakhan to speak at the University of Massachusetts that goes along with all of the controversy. Those who are not in favor of his visit cannot understand why he has been invited. Also, many of those who are in favor of Farrakhan's visit tend to just accept it as being a "good thing." The concern is that many of us who have an opinion on this subject do not know the actual purpose, intentions and significance of inviting Minister Louis Farrakhan to speak at the University of Massachusetts.

News Analysis

Some students believe that Farrakhan's presence will only bring tension and cause heated controversey between various groups on campus. The proposal issued by Black Student Union, states that "the purpose of bringing the Honorable Minister Louis Farrakhan to the University of Massachusetts is not to divide people but to trigger a healthy debate among members of the UMass community on which is the best way forward to ending racism on campus and in America."

Also included in this purpose is: "Farrakhan does not only dramatize the brutality of racist oppression in the United States. He offers his own explanation for its existence and a program for its eradication."

As of yet, no one has come up with a successful plan to end racism, oppression and discrimination. We all have the right to express our ideas on what each of us think may be a solution or at least a helpful part of a plan to end these problems in

Visit presents myriad of choices

By JACOB W. MICHAELS
Collegian Staff

Why has there been so much controversy about Louis Farrakhan coming to speak at the University of Massachusetts? He has been brought here by many campus groups, including Phi Beta Sigma and the Student Government Association. Many groups have also signed a letter supporting a protest to take place while Farrakhan speaks.

News Analysis

These groups include the Newman Center, the United Christian Foundation, the ARC-Episcopal Chaplaincy and Hillel Foundation.

While these groups condemn the bigotry and hatred put forth by Farrakhan, they also feel it is important that his First Amendment rights weren't violated. According to Father Francis Lavell of the Newman Center, "We can all take great comfort from [the fact his rights weren't violated.]" He added that Farrakhan "has a right to express his views and everyone else has a right to assemble and say we disagree with those views. Both rights have to be protected."

Rev. Christopher Carlysle, of the ARC-Episcopal Chaplaincy, also said they are "repudiating his bigotry, not his right to speak."

Many people also stressed that the hurtful things Farrakhan says are the reason they are protesting. Rabbi Saul Perlmutter of Hillel said "My problem with Farrakhan is the same as my problem with David Duke and with any other leader who targets or scapegoats groups and sets them against one another as an intrinsic part of their message."

He said he is not happy about any speaker who comes and makes derogatory comments about homosexuals, Christians and Jews as Farrakhan does.

"Christians bring the family of mankind together. We're unifiers," Lavell said. "That man is divisive." He said we

When religion turns ugly

The world's collective spirit turned a little blacker last week as in Hebron, Beirut and New York, the faithful had their lives stolen from them in their most spiritual hours. These were no common murders; they were the most frightening kind. If people can be massacred while communing with the holy forces of the universe, what does that say for the mere mortals left behind to put the planet together again?

Brooklyn–born medical doctor Baruch Goldstein pushed his way through a packed mosque in Hebron, West Bank, dressed in the garb of an Israeli soldier. Aided by an automatic weapon and several magazines of ammunition which he quickly emptied into the Muslim worshippers, Goldstein murdered about 35 people and injured over 100 more before he was tackled and beaten to death.

"Benjie was always an extremist," said one Bensonhurst ex–neighbor of the religious vigilante. Now Goldstein's burial place has become a shrine where radical grade–schoolers and religious pilgrims alike come to honor their newest hero.

Just a few days after the mosque assault and a less– reported attack on Christians at prayer in Beirut, a van began to roll across the Brooklyn Bridge. By the time the van completed its journey, four Hasidic teenagers were struck by bullets, two of them critically. Rashad Baz is in police custody for attempting to kill 15 Jewish students who were inside the van.

Any faithful person must wonder where her or his God was hiding on these bloody days. But our reaction to this violence should not be to blame our faiths and our gods. If our faith is shaken by these massacres, then the zealots have achieved their goal.

What Goldstein and Baz have taught us is a grisly lesson. We have allowed our most sincere religious beliefs to become corrupted by concepts like neo–Zionism, Jihad, "family values" and ethnic cleansing, without considering for so much as a second the terrible cost in human lives and souls. Whether Jehovah, Allah or Vishnu, the gods must be ashamed.

All religious beliefs are worthy of respect, and no religious idea is more important than peace and the human community. Almost all of our major religions are based upon peace; it is time to put it into practice.

Peter J. Orvetti

For it is not just people like Goldstein and Baz who have forgotten why they hold their beliefs in the first place. Many of us have done the same. We have allowed peace and love to be superceded by territorial squabbles, and we have forsaken mutual respect for all of our many unique religions in the name of self–righteous holiness.

The blood of Hebron and Brooklyn cannot be wiped away with soap and a rag. It will remain, like the blood of Crown Heights and the blood that spills every day in the West Bank and Gaza, not to mention Ireland, Kashmir, Nagorno–Karabakh and a host of other nations where religion has led to genocide. But a continuation of our present attitudes toward religion will change nothing. Massacres have happened before, and will happen again.

Unless, that is, we all learn mutual respect.

All religious beliefs are worthy of respect, and no religious idea is more important than peace and the human community. Almost all of our major religions are based upon peace; it is time to put it into practice.

As long as extremists and those who refuse to honestly examine the bloodshed allow, the world's population will carry out holy wars as backward and as hypocritical as those of the Dark Ages. It is time for us all to open our minds to one another, and begin.

And God will look upon this first day of spiritual understanding, and God will see that it is good.

UMass students don't care

The University of Massachusetts campus has lost its excitement. Gone are the days of protest marches, building takeovers, and petitions. Nothing is being done because no one cares. Out of the 17,000 undergraduate students on campus, only 1 percent will ever affect the school in any way. A friend of mine who is a senior said that in some ways the indifference currently on this campus is good. "At least a building doesn't get taken over everyday anymore," he said.

The apathy shown by the student body recently at several rallies has been nothing short of disappointing. There are a small group of students who are trying to do things to, in their minds, improve the University. Unfortunately, they have very little hope of being successful.

Justin Doyle

Students at UMass have been unwilling during this entire school year to support or oppose anything but the mascot and the basketball team. I think it's sad that approximately 4,000 students show up to watch the last regular season game for UMass, yet only 120 students attend the Student Government Association's candidates debate. More students drove to New Jersey for the Kentucky versus UMass basketball game in the Meadowlands than walked to all the rallies held this year combined.

Student governments and organizations are useless against the administration because only a few students are willing to support them. Students seem more concerned with Lou Rice's performance this year than Chancellor David K. Scott's.

The whole idea of the democracy we live in is that representatives fight for what their constituents want. The simple fact is that this is no longer happening on campus. When Scott was chosen to become the new chancellor, he was the last choice. Yet, he has come into his position and had free reign of the University because of lack of opposition from the people who pay his salary.

Scott's plans are to hire more administration to run this school better. He is taking power away from the students and hiding himself behind vice chancellors and deputy chancellors. But, nothing is done to stop it.

The UMass president, Board of Trustees, and chancellor have been having a field day lately. They institute hiring freezes because of the "budget crisis," then, when they feel it necessary, they lift the freeze to hire a friend of Scott's. No one even raised an eyebrow at the combined yearly salary of $185,000 for Marcellette and Keith Williams. Scott wanted Marcie to leave Michigan State so bad he even made up a position for her husband. The school says they have no money for more professors and classes, yet they are spending nearly a quarter of a million dollars on unneeded positions.

Not to mention the fact that the president of all the UMass campuses, Michael Hooker, earns nearly $200,000 a year, and certainly deserves his title as the highest paid official in the state. I have to wonder what Gov. William Weld thinks about that situation. It is understandable why Hooker would be so unwilling to help the students at UMass by supporting a zero percent tuition increase. He might have to take a pay cut or even give up one of his condos.

A few students decided to stand up for their rights when a question of money arose. It is interesting how strongly you will fight for something when it directly affects you. One small problem; it's been done before. The chancellor was even more spineless then, and still nothing changed. Last time thousands of students got involved. They did a lot more than just "trample flowers," as the newspapers reported, but they still received the same result.

When students go to the administration with a few small threats, chanting rhymes and causing general trouble, they do nothing but scare uninvolved people. Hooker and the legislature laugh as Scott and his team cave into the students' demands. Scott is a puppet. Hooker and the trustees hold his strings and tell him where to go. Without opposition from a majority of the students on campus, Hooker will continue to hide behind Scott and make empty promises to frustrated students.

When enough students start standing up for themselves the administration will have no choice but to listen. It is all a matter of money. The rich (Scott, Hooker, etc.) get richer and the poor (students) get poorer.

The battle of students' rights has been a tradition at UMass. The administration used to listen to the students because everyone seemed to have a commitment to this school. Lately, the only commitment students have is to themselves.

But who cares, UMass won the Atlantic 10 Conference.

Letters to the Editor

Farrakhan will tell nothing but truth

To the editor:

I, a Black woman from the beautiful island of Haiti, am avidly encouraging you to listen to Minister Farrakhan's speech. First, I am going to ask you to do one of the hardest things you've ever done in your whole life: take a deep look at yourself, disposing of all your stereotypes about Minister Farrakhan and my people. Then, sit down for the educational opportunity of your lifetime.

Contrary to our honorable Chancellor David K. Scott and the majority opinion on campus, I know for a fact that Minister Farrakhan is not a preacher of hate. How do I know that? I know because I listen first, looking for the truth and nothing but the truth. Why? Because only the truth has set me free.

I am appalled that the chancellor would mail students a statement accusing Minister Farrakhan of being a hate preacher. Last time I checked, Mr. Scott was an authority figure in this institution, not someone who espouses the views of one University community over another's.

Today, I praise Allah because Minister Farrakhan's visit has caused the chancellor to let Black students see him coming out of his hypocritical nest. It is now proven that even the chancellor of our campus has made no effort to break the cycle. What cycle? The cycle of undermining Black leaders who speak the truth. Sick back into history and observe the striking similarities. Isn't it sad?

From the day he started, I wish that Chancellor Scott had been sending letters to students who have been victims of on–campus discrimination. This would have expressed to those communities his deepest concerns, his will to denounce their perpetrators. I, myself, wished that I had received a letter from him last semester concerning a racial incident in which my authority as an residential assistant was questioned and insulted on the basis of my skin color.

If he wants to have an open, honest, frank discussion, let's talk about the real reasons why he and the rest of the campus are alarmed by Minister Farrakhan's future visit. Why is it that Minister Farrakhan and other Black leaders are always labeled as anti–Semitic when they condemn all groups who took part in the 400 years of slavery, not simply the Jews? Is it that the world should remember the Holocaust and belittle slavery instead of remembering both?

Why does the majority of White Americans still highly praise historical figures who compromised with slave owners in the South to count Blacks as three–fifths of a person? Why haven't I read articles in the Collegian from Hillel denouncing the killings of Palestinians? Why aren't all entering students required to take at least one Black History course? Are the Black students on this campus anti–Semitic because they want to learn the undeviant history of their people? Why is it that the media emphasizes Minister Farrakhan's rejection of other Black leaders? Doesn't it remind you all of the Divide and Conquer strategy?

At last, to Chancellor Scott and each student, if you want to talk truthfully about anti–White, anti–Semitic, anti– Christian sentiment, then truthfully answer the above questions before the Black community on campus and go to Minister Farrakhan's speech with your ears open.

Religious leaders denounce bigotry

To the editor:

The planned visit and speech of Louis Farrakhan at UMass moves us to speak in urgent concern. The principles of openness and freedom required in an academic community can be invoked in support of Minister Farrakhan's presence here, but those principles also entail not only the right but the duty to speak out against the preaching of hatred and bigotry.

The rhetoric of ethnic and religious villification, along with the pseudo–scholarship used to justify it, must be challenged and rejected. The deadly effects of such language must be recognized and averted. The poisonous fruit of such seeds has taken the lives of millions, carnage is terrible whether inflicted on the basis of skin, culture, faith or sexuality. The victims of Hebron should be fresh reminder and warning of such evil.

Unlike Malcolm X, and unlike the mainstream of Islamic faith, Minister Farrakhan has thus far refused to dissociate himself from the words of hatred and prejudice. Much of his work has been devoted to the blessed mission of building up self–respect and disciplined love within the African– American community; that mission is tragically betrayed when it is carried out through the demonization of others and the teaching of racism under any guise.

As individuals, as leaders and representatives of religious communities in this town, we come together to decry the anti–Semitism and other bigotry associated with Minister Farrakhan and his associates.

We call, and pray, for a strong resolve on the part of the UMass community in repudiating that aspect of Minister Farrakhan's message, and for their willingness to work together toward mature valuing of both Self and Other. The alternative is a climate of fear and spiraling madness.

Sponsoring speaker counter-productive

Enough about Louis Farrakhan. It should be obvious to anyone that this man is a vicious racist, who inculcates black youth in the art of hatred, causes campus riots and finds his niche in the same corner with David Duke and Tom Metzger.

I am not going to inundate this letter with quotes, quotes which the supporters of the minister of rage will almost certainly claim have been "taken out of context."

Let's talk about issues more at home here in the valley. The supporters of Farrakhan claim that by bringing him here they are putting hot issues, like the tension between black– Jewish relations, on the table.

Fine, let's talk about the hatred that seethes below the skin of such organizations as Phi Beta Sigma, the chief sponsor of the minister's speech, who also happen to have sponsored demagogue Al Sharpton's speech last fall, brought anti–Semitic professor Leonard Jeffries in 1992, and sponsored Farrakhan round one in 1989.

The only common denominator between all these speakers is, hardly a big surprise, they all hate Jews.

We obviously don't need a Farrakhan or a Jeffries to make us aware of racism in the black community, we have a registered student organization that is doing a fine job.

Election Information

The candidates for office in the upcoming elections for Student Government Association President and Student Trustee submitted brief statements to the Collegian which have been printed on the facing page.

Elections will be held this Tuesday and Wednesday. On-campus students may vote in the dining commons, while voting for commuters will take place outside the Hatch. All University undergraduate students may vote for SGA President. Undergraduate and graduate students vote for the Student Trustee who represents the Amherst campus on the Board of Trustees.

All candidates for both positions will be present at a candidate's forum to be held this evening in the Southside Room at 7:30 p.m. The event is sponsored by Southwest Area Government and is open to the public.

Also, please note that George Hardy, who had been a candidate for SGA President, has withdrawn from the race.

Further information about the elections will be available in tomorrow's edition of the Collegian.

Diego Figueroa
Candidate for Student Trustee

A few days ago, someone asked me why I was running for trustee, and why I cared so much about the Student Government Association when in reality the SGA does nothing for students.

I was bewildered to hear this question. My first thought was of rage, how could this person dare say that we don't do anything for students?

Then I realized that the reason why students feel we don't do anything is because we have not made it our number one priority to make their everyday lives better.

Sure, we worked hard to get litigation rights back, don't misunderstand me, I think it's wonderful, but in reality if you gave students a choice between litigation and getting better services, I am sure the second option would win. It's all a matter of getting our priorities straight. I feel that I do have those priorities in order. I'm not only capable of doing this job — even Trustee Al Lizana has said it — I am committed and I have the desire to make students' lives better.

If I am elected to this position, I will make it my number one priority to work against the tuition and fee hikes. I'll continue to work with the plan SCERA (Student Center for Education Research and Advocacy) has drafted. But students must realize that the SGA cannot win this battle without the support of every student.

This is something that affects each and every one of us, no matter what race, sex, religion, age, grad or undergrad, etc. I will work to make sure that the services we get are the best. We can't allow this administration to walk all over us and give us the run–around. It's a fact that we need better housing, food and health services, to mention a few.

The simple fact that the Student Union building is falling apart is only a little demonstration of how much our administration cares about the students. I'm not making promises of things I can't do. I only know that I can deliver and I will work to get these things achieved.

I'm the best candidate because I represent a change and because I have the experience. As a senator for two years and as chair of the finance committee for one, I've learned about the needs of the students through the RSOs.

I've been a member of the Third World Caucus, the Campus Center/Student Union Board of Governors, and I am presently controller of the Latin American Cultural Center. But mostly, I have the desire to work for students.

I want to be the strong voice that tells the administration that we won't take it any more. I want to be the bridge between the students and the SGA as well as the administration. All I need is a chance.

When the elections are held on March 8 and 9, all undergrad and grad students can vote to decide who the next trustee will be.

The change is needed and I represent that change.

Al Lizana
Candidate for Student Trustee

As your current student trustee, it brings me pride and pleasure to witness the student body's rising interest in student government. The fact that there are so many candidates running for these offices means that we have returned value to the offices of the Student Government Association. The current leadership has begun to revitalize, empower and re–focus the student government. Now it is time to take student empowerment to a new level. It is a level of commitment and awareness where every student feels represented by the SGA, where every student feels responsibility for improving the access and quality of our University. I believe that my experience and dedication can help us rise to that next level.

My commitment to students and this University is reflected in my past and present record of results. In the first four months of my administration, we secured litigation authority back to the Student Legal Services Office. In addition, my vote and influence on the Strategic Initiatives Committee channeled $2.1 million to our campus, $60,000 of which went directly to the SGA, $210,000 to diversity training for teaching assistants and employees and $100,000 to fund the library's automated record system.

I am representing you on the Task Force for Economic Accessibility that is fighting for a zero percent increase in tuition and fees and more financial aid. I serve on a system– wide Task Force for Faculty Roles and Rewards where I am working to make professors more accessible and accountable to students. I sit on the Talented Minority Scholarship Committee which helps to recruit and retain more students of color to our university. I also serve on the Administration and Finance Committee, where we manage the University's $1.1 billion budget. I remain accessible to students who need my assistance by holding open office hours daily.

Among my goals for next year are to stop tuition and fee hikes and increase the financial aid pool. I will dedicate much of my time toward returning the Student Activities Trust Fund interest back to the Registered Student Organizations. The next year will bring severe budget cuts upon the University. I will fight to ensure that these cuts are minimized in the areas that most affect students, namely the quality of classes, residential life, and student activities.

I will also strive to build a better coalition with students at the other four UMass campuses. This will allow us to take advantage of statewide resources and advocate collectively with students all over the state. I will make more information about issues on the Board agendas that affect students available through campus mail, the Collegian, Channel 19 and WMUA. Additionally, I will continue to bring students with me to every Trustee meeting in order to develop a trained reservoir of student leaders.

On March 8 and 9, you will have the opportunity to vote for experience, results and dedication. Let's take Student Government to the next level. Re–elect Al Lizana for Student Trustee.

Jamie D. Bearse
Candidate for SGA President

My grandfather used to say to me, "the road to success is always under construction." I've always taken faith in those words, and tried apply it to everything I do and anything that I can help change.

Over the years, President Hooker has blocked off UMass' road with obstacles such as escalating tuition and fees without meeting student financial need, asinine University policies and insufficient services.

The fight for the future of UMass to rebuild the road of success begins now. We, as students, must lobby the State House and register to vote in order to elect officials that support a state funding increase to ensure a zero percent tuition and fee increase for next year. We must also research the possibility of getting a straight line–item budget from the state instead of having President Hooker determine our budget.

Engaging in a battle like a zero percent tuition and fee hike can be done, but it takes student empowerment. The Student Government must work to build back up area governments and house councils through leadership programming and a planning committee. Area governments are the derivations for student grassroots movements such as zero percent tuition and fee hikes, dependable financial aid, and changes in University policies.

University policies must be changed. UMass is the second most expensive state school in the country, but its services don't live up to what we pay to go here. Students are entitled to better services such as an on–campus ambulance for Health Services, a debit card for on–campus stores, cable TV, better parking, 10–meal plan for weekends, handicap accessibility, upperclassman dorms, and the list goes on. These services can be changed by sending student advocates to force the administration to compromise.

We must force the administration to realize that underage drinking and smoking marijuana are going to happen everyday, every year on this campus, no matter what is done to stop it. The administration must accept it and concentrate their efforts into improving University services instead.

Among those who work hard in improving the awareness of the campus community, Hillel, just as the Office of Third World Affairs, the Black Student Union and other organizations, contributes a great deal. Hillel must be better recognized through a higher SATF budget, more representation in student government, and the SGA must work harder with the administration to crack down on the escalating anti–Semitism on campus.

Student empowerment is the key to solving these problems and establishing better policies. In establishing an increase in student empowerment, the next step is to divide ourselves from the Student Activities Office. Student organizations are allocated money from the SATF, a fee that we pay, determine who the money gets allocated to, and where the money is spent. As president, the administration will never have a voice in what we spend our money on. Purchase orders and trust fund advisors are things of the past.

Student empowerment is the key to continue the construction of the road to success.

Charles Lenchner
Candidate for SGA President

My candidacy is unique in this race. No objective spectator (and elections are a spectator sport in this country) can deny that I'd like to discuss what makes me special, and also to show some of the behind–the–scenes controversy relating to my campaign.

Yes, I am the President of the Radical Student Union. But it wasn't easy to convince the rank and file to be enthusiastic about it. After all, politics has such a dirty name, why would a good radical want to get dirty? Apathy to the mainstream political process is a legitimate response, and radicals are often tempted to ignore it and focus on solidarity efforts and narrow ideological groupings. But I was able to convince them that an election campaign is an opportunity to enter public discourse with ideas all too often ignored. The terrific response to my campaign has proven the strength of left ideas — if only we can bring our message to a broad audience.

There was quiet a bit of consternation in Mirran's camp as well. You should have seen the look on her face when I told her that I would be running for SGA President. She had just asked me to join her campaign. The problem is that liberals often take the left for granted — after all, since the left can't hope to win, what choice do we have but to support the liberals? While I strongly support a left–liberal alliance, we on the left are often ignored, and there is no alliance, but simply a mainstreaming of popular opinion and choices.

Mirran and Al will, in my humble opinion, win the election. But those inclined to support my campaign can relax — they will do a good job, certainly no worse than what we currently enjoy. But we can win also by bringing up the class perspective of the Radical Student Union, by joining the SGA, by mobilizing for area government elections and campus politics in general, we can make tremendous gains. Our gauge of victory is not in votes tallied, but in the ability of the left to set the tone more and more on this campus by presenting our perspective together with concrete proposals and a willingness to take the lead.

The problems facing young people today are enormous. Education is not yet a right, but a privilege to be purchased with cash and debt. Our planet is still being destroyed by rapacious capitalists. U.S. imperialism still threatens the peace and livelihood of Third World peoples. In its decline, the U.S. ruling class resorts to reactionary nationalisms, racism, homophobia and other oppressions aimed at dividing us. Our economic future is uncertain, and at its root this is a problem of capitalism in decline, which must be replaced with economic democracy. Being activists on campus will prepare us for a hostile world where the ability to organize means the ability to survive.

And folks, please vote. It's a good habit to get into.

Mirran Raphaely
Candidate for SGA President

My primary concern has always been for the UMass undergraduate student body. Although many candidates running for Student Government Association president this year appear to share in this sentiment — I believe that I am the only candidate whose actions can really prove it.

For the past two years I have worked tirelessly for student causes. I am the only candidate who has been an SGA senator for two years and worked on issues that concern all students. As the Issues Coordinator of SCERA, I was the chief grassroots organizer to restore litigation rights to the Student Legal Services Office. Along with Trustee Al Lizana, I am a founding member of the task force on economic accessibility which is working very hard and successfully to make sure that our tuition and fee bill will not go up next year.

I am also dedicated to student empowerment beyond the walls of the Student Government. I am the student representative on the chief advisory commitee to the Director of Health Services on women's health issues and the Chancellor's Task Force on Faculty Roles/Rewards. I am currently working on reissuing the CATE guide (a student published course/professor evaluation guide).

Despite a long history of working on student issues, I have not relied on my experience alone to prepare me for the presidency. Last semester I planned a Project Pulse survey to find out what students across this campus wanted the SGA to work on. For the past month, I have spent four to five hours a night with Trustee Lizana visiting students in their dorms and asking about their concerns.

How many of you know who your senator is or what the SGA can do for you? Too many students don't know. It is my goal to make the Student Government a place that truly represents all students. Students must know where they can take their concerns. They must have confidence in the fact that these concerns will be addressed by their leadership.

It doesn't take a brain surgeon to find out what students' issues are and to relay them back to the campus. Every candidate has spent time speaking to students about a multitude of issues and concerns. However, the president's job is not just to isolate and understand student concerns but to have the necessary expertise to deal with the problems that students face.

Quality and affordability are primary issues that affect students. Right now I am taking a leadership role in advocating for the credit/debit card food system. Additionally, I am making sure that students have a strong voice in hiring the next Health Services Director. I will continue to work with Trustee Lizana ensuring that Housing is accountable to students in both their policies and procedures. I believe it is the role of the president to make a concerted effort finding out what students concerns are once elections are over.

I feel confident making promises to students about the future because I have a history of getting results.

Joseph Vozza
Candidate for SGA President

I have much experience working with the student government through my work as president of the Inter–Fraternity Council and co–president of the Greek Area Government. As students, we need to make a change in student government. We need to make the administration of this University listen and care about what the students have to say.

The way in which I plan to execute my idea of creating a more powerful student government is to empower the students. We need to first get a student government constitution to have a foundation to build upon. All of my opponents who have worked previously within the student government have never even brought out the issue that this organization does not have a constitution. Before students can have a chance against the administration with the issues we are all fighting for we must first set a foundation to do this.

The other candidates just keep talking about the same issues on this campus which must be changed, yet none have set out a blueprint on which to attack these issues. I know how to get better housing for students or better service in Health Services. The way to do this is to empower the students and force the administration to listen to our concerns. We can do this by strengthening the link between House Councils, Area Governments and the SGA. We have the numbers and the organization to have an effective voice, that organization needs only to be strengthened and revitalized.

The other candidates against whom I am running all have experience in the student government and say they are "working on" the issues or are close to a "breakthrough." The fact is, they haven't had results. My campaign is a question of priorities and results. My opponents use the regained litigation rights of a Legal Services as evidence of the results which they have obtained. While a substantial achievement, it exposes their misplaced priorities and unwillingness to take on issues that really count. How many of us will use these litigation rights? How many of us will be upset as we watch the cost of UMass go through the roof?

If elected, I plan on getting SGA's house in order by setting priorities based on what affects the majority of students. Tuition and fees will not be the only issue that we fight; a public university should remain open to the whole public and not just a wealthy portion. An improvement in the quality of services provided at the University will be our second priority; regarding food, health and housing, the money we pay does not equal the service we get. An audit of Housing Services was ordered by the student trustee based on the recommendation of the speaker. We can use these same means in other areas and then translate the results of those audits into real change using our newfound power.

My campaign slogan has been "To Get What We Deserve." We deserve lower tuition and more services and I intend to obtain concrete results in these areas with your help by empowering students and focusing our efforts based on our priorities. I ask for your vote to get away from the rhetoric of "working on issues" and "close to breakthroughs" and start getting substantive change that affects us all.

Major choices alter students' lives

By HEATHER CUMMING
Collegian Correspondent

A multitude of students on campus pick majors by their sophomore, junior or hopefully senior year, but do not make the connection between academics and the job market, or know what resources there are on campus to aid them.

There is, however, help out there for the uninformed and undecided. Susan Hammond, who is assistant director of career education at the Mather Career Center, teaches a workshop entitled, "Connections between Major and Career: How Do I Choose A Major."

It is offered at the Satellite Career Center at 16 Curry Hicks on Tuesdays Mar. 8, 29 and April 19 at 3:35 p.m. and on Wednesdays April 6 and May 4 at 3:35 p.m.

"The problem we have been having," Hammond said, "is that the major choosing workshop is advertised alongside senior workshops and this causes sophomores to miss out on this opportunity."

At the Career Center, Hammond said, they are having trouble communicating to students the resources offered at UMass, during their sophomore years, before they become seniors and realize they are unprepared to enter the job market.

During Hammond's hour and a half workshop she teaches students the first step in choosing a major that will pay off for them in terms of packaging the student's interests and abilities into a career.

Hammond's goal is not to have students automatically have an idea of what they want to major in, but to start thinking about how to put together majors and career goals into what employers are looking for.

During her workshop she helps students realize what competencies they have, by finding out about their personalities and interests, and how these would transfer into an actual job. She emphasizes, in addition to academics, experiential learning through internships or student activities. "If students put, at the least, five hours of soul searching into their majors it will pay off in big dividends after graduation," Hammond said.

This is needed many times to pay off the debt accumulated by students during their time in school. After graduating, most students have on

Stop the sale of the University

By SHYAMALA IVATURY
Collegian Correspondent

"The most distressing fact in the present world is poverty; not absolute poverty, because some folk are rich and many are well to do; not poverty as great as some lands and other historical ages have known; but poverty more poignant and discouraging because it comes after a dream of wealth; of riotous, wasteful and even vulgar accumulation of individual riches, which suddenly leaves the majority of mankind today without enough to eat; without proper shelter; without sufficient clothing."

W.E.B. DuBois – The Revelation of Saint Orgne the Damned (1938)

For almost a century, the preeminent scholar and intellectual giant of the 20th century, W.E.B. DuBois, analyzed, fought and wrote about the racial and socio- economic injustices prevalent in his world. He died on the eve of the Civil Rights March on Washington in 1963. Thirty-one years later, the injustices he fought against and wrote about remain in our midst, sometimes disguised, sometimes sublimated — virulent nonetheless.

The recent decision of the Board of Trustees of the University of Massachusetts to link the naming of University buildings to large financial donations, the outrageous cost of attending this university, the lack of diversity in the faculty and student body on this campus, the gentrification of services for women and students of color, and many more untold examples reflect a pervasive pattern of injustices — racially, sexually and economically — which plague our university and U.S. society in general.

In particular, the Board of Trustees' decision is hypocritical as well as being racist and elitist. The finances of this University have been in dire straits before; nevertheless, buildings have been repeatedly named after European-Americans without the trustees publicly demanding one cent from donors beforehand. It is indeed more than a coincidence that this new policy comes at a time when students, faculty, staff and community members are demanding the naming of at least one academic building on campus after a prominent person of color — W.E.B. DuBois.

It has been stated that the University of Massachusetts at Amherst is to have a three-fold mission — teaching and learning; diversity and multiculturalism; and economic development. Yet it is apparent that, in practice, the only policy the University officialdom will act upon is the last, namely, economic development — pursuing the first two in name only. Their commitment to teaching and learning and to diversity and multiculturalism amounts to a shell without content, rhetorical platitudes as a substitute for concrete actions.

"Economic development" is nothing but an insidious code- word that will ensure that the interests of the University are made subservient to the interests of unchecked corporate capital. An educational institution should value intellectual inquiry, critical thought, the pursuit of knowledge, and public service — not the profit motive of individual private corporations. The policies and actions of the Board of Trustees and the University administration are reflective of their lack of appreciation for educational achievement and intellectual inquiry, and instead put the University in the role of mendicant to private industry. Indeed, what really appears to whet their appetites are large financial donations, corporate grants and business/University partnerships. By their recent actions, the University officialdom indicate a willingness to sell the body and soul of our campus to corporate interests, albeit the highest bidder.

Budget cuts do remain a reality for our campus, but this reality also includes a bulky, inefficient, inhospitable University bureaucracy and high salaried administrators. It is strange that budget cuts always imply increased tuition and fees, decreased services, fewer classes and teaching assistants, but never, never ever, a downsizing of the University bureaucracy. Let us hope that this unhealthy tendency is arrested in its tracks and excised.

As students, we must fight the corporatization of our university. Access to quality higher education and the unhampered pursuit of knowledge must remain the right of all and not just the privileged few. Our university must not become a factory which mass produces mechanical, unquestioning drones for the selfish interests of private corporate capital. Drones that nestle within and reproduce the structures of oppression, stinging and being stung — this is not the business of what a university should be about.

By formally naming the tower library after one of the preeminent African-American leaders of the 20th century, Dr. W.E.B. DuBois, the Board of Trustees and the University can add substance to their rhetoric of "multiculturalism and diversity" and thereby affirm and demonstrate a true commitment to educational achievement, intellectual inquiry and critical thought. Trustees who act on principle will indeed be admired and respected.

But why, you ask, name the library in honor of W.E.B. DuBois? Consider a few aspects of Dr. DuBois' life:

•1. W.E.B. DuBois was one of the foremost scholars of the 20th century who valued the pursuit of education, truth and intellectual inquiry as a means of fighting oppression in all its forms, thereby liberating the human potential.

•2. The profound influence of the political, historical and sociological works of W.E.B. DuBois ranks him as one of the founding fathers of the academic disciplines of African- American and African Studies in particular, and on par with the entire panorama of intellectual giants of the 20th century.

•3. His socio-economic and political writings are considered to be the most insightful and penetrating analysis on race relations in the world, relevant both yesterday and today.

•4. As an activist in the fight against racial and other forms of oppression, W.E.B DuBois was one of the founders of the Niagara Movement, which laid the intellectual and political basis for the modern civil rights movement, one where equality in all aspects of life was not to be compromised.

•5. W.E.B. DuBois joined with others in the first decade of the 20th century to found the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) which has fought continuously, against great odds, for the legal and political rights guaranteed to African Americans.

•6. W.E.B. DuBois initiated and organized the first of several Pan African congresses which spurred the development of a Pan-African movement, providing intellectual inspiration for the decolonization of Africa.

•7. He was the first African American to obtain a Ph.D. from Harvard University.

•8. The tower library at the University of Massachusetts houses the collected works of W.E.B. DuBois. They have been retrieved from different parts of the world at great personal expense and subsequently donated to our University. It has been estimated that the value of the W.E.B. DuBois collection is worth in the millions of dollars.

•9. The collection of over 130,000 of the published and unpublished writings, manuscripts, letters, and photographs of W.E.B. DuBois brings scholars to our University from all over the world adding prestige, as well as financial income, to our University.

•10. Born and raised in Great Barrington, Massachusetts, W.E.B. DuBois is undoubtedly one of the greatest sons Massachusetts has produced.

We urge the Board of Trustees to do the right thing and appropriately dedicate the tower library in honor of a man whose life and work is a testament to intellectual scholarship and persistent struggle for social justice — a historical map of what one person can and did do to transform society, now and forever.

In 1903, W.E.B. DuBois stated that: "The problem of the twentieth Century is the problem of the color line..." (The Souls of Black Folk). Does the dawn of the new century portend the same or can we move beyond the color line?

Speech still guaranteed

Charles R. Venator Santiago

As much as I have tried to keep up with the current monologue against the ideal of the supreme Minister of the Nation of Islam, I must admit that I am not quite sure if this article is "plagiarizing" someone else's critique. So please forgive me, but I too have been reflecting on this notion.

First, noting that I have my ideological disagreements with the Honorable Minister Louis Farrakhan, and for that matter with all defenders of religious nations (including Jews, Christians, etc.), and recognizing the self-empowerment that Farrakhan's discourse provides to many individual African Americans, I would like to ask the reader: Why is Farrakhan the center of these monologues?

The root of the problem is not the Minister, it is the LAW! And for that matter the Liberal Law that participates in the constitution of the "American" community. To be sure, the First Amendment of this nation's Supreme Law of the Land, defends that "Congress shall make no law prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech..." So why not question the law which not only allows Farrakhan to predicate what he believes to be the truth, but empowers him to preach in a public forum, in a PUBLIC INSTITUTION?

The reason, I believe, is that his myopic attackers, who perhaps know little of what he represents, neither can't nor want to challenge the reality of their status quo. To deny The Honorable Minister Louis Farrakhan a chance to "defend" his views in a public forum, is a way in which individuals can legitimate their hatred towards the African American. To suppress an individual's right of speech, and not question the right in itself is problematic. Then again it is the part allows for the stigmatization, marginalization and oppression of the other voices, the other members of society.

$25,000 Slap in the face

In this short essay, I am going to answer a big question on the minds of Whites in the "Happy Valley": Why do Black students across the nation (and here, especially) pool scarce resources to make possible expensive visits from the Honorable Minister Louis Farrakhan of the Nation of Islam? I have been neither elected, asked nor appointed to this task, so I take it on cautiously and with a desire to stimulate not ideas like, "Oh, that's how Black people feel!" but rather dialogues, especially intra-racial and inter-racial dialogues that can begin with the questions, "What do you think of the SLAP idea?" "Does it feel accurate or way off-base?"

That said, I think Black people sometimes support, but more often refuse to oppose, visits from the Honorable Minister Farrakhan, because such visits serve to administer a collective Black SLAP in the country's collective White FACE. A SLAP that, for many Blacks, is long overdue; a SLAP that is emotionally and politically cathartic; a SLAP that is not possible without facing enormous consequences on the individual level; a SLAP that momentarily suspends the feeling of being an oppressed victim of the capricious whims of White people'; a SLAP that symbolizes the continuation of resistance and public dissent among Black people; and a SLAP that says,"F-you!" to the last White person who purposefully or inadvertently stepped on Black feelings, limited Black potential, threatened Black safety, maligned Black character, humiliated Black dignity or denied Black suffering.

That the Honorable Minister Louis Farrakhan, rather than El Haj Malik Shabazz (a.k.a. Malcolm X), gets to administer the slap in 1994 is unfortunate to many of us, but, alas, the SLAP is more important than who delivers it.

We want the SLAP because it shakes up White folks, makes them uncomfortable, slightly fearful and downright tense — you know, the way we often feel — for awhile at least. It reminds White folks that we are still aware of and ready to confront intractable and pernicious White supremacist ideologies and associated deeds! Almost any Black leader could speak powerfully

"We want it, The SLAP... because it shakes up White folks, makes them uncomfortable, slightly fearful and downright tense."

Deirdre A. Royster

about the evil persistence of White supremacy without any concern for how White patrons, customers or sponsors might take it. Yet, the Honorable Minister Farrakhan is problematic within his "free-of-White-Influence" platform, because he does not choose to denounce patriarchy, which permeates both the wider White society and Black communities, such as the Nation of Islam; he does not denounce heterosexist domination and discrimination, which is apparently unproblematic for the Nation of Islam; he does not specifically denounce Black exploitation of other Blacks or propose methods of dismantling capitalist structures which results in the exploitation of the many (often people of color from other nations) by the few for its profit.

Instead, the Honorable Minister Farrakhan just offers his hungry audience two slaps — one against Whites in general, who serve as proxy for the continuing ideologies and structures of White Supremacy, and second a more curious slap against Jews, who the Honorable Minister Farrakhan incredulously singles out as the most heinous and perhaps most hypocritical among all Whites.

Some Whites will smugly say that Blacks have paid $25,000 for a "cheap thrill;" others will express a disingenuous ability to understand what Blacks are "still" angry about; others, Jews especially, will experience severe anguish about the singling out of Jewish people in a move that colludes with the most powerful Whites who have opposed Jewish progress as adamantly as Black progress; and still others will say "Surely they could come up with someone else for this purpose!" (showing their ignorance regarding the limited number of available SLAPPERS for hire). Meanwhile, Blacks will brace themselves for a procession of "community containment" measures designed not to let the SLAP turn into anything more. During the actual visit, Whites will perhaps catch a sense of the daily discomfort Black people experience while living and attempting to survive in the midst of the unselconscious racism practiced daily in the classrooms, rental offices, personnel offices, courtrooms, etc. of the United States.

The "purpose" continues: "We believe his visit to our campus offers an opportunity for a critical assessment of his policies and programs, and a discussion of what are the best strategies and solutions it the fight for equality."

Hopefully, we all would agree that no matter what we may hear about an individual, the best way to make a decision on whether or not to oppose his or her views, is to understand completeley what those views are. The best way of knowing an individual's exact positions, thoughts and views, is to hear it from the individual who holds them. In other words, we should hear it from the horse's mouth. Once we do this, we can make an educated decision on what our opinion of this person's views will be.

Furthermore, we can then proceed by having educated discussions with others, whether they agree with our opinion or not. This type of discussion provides the best means of coming up with a solution to any problem that may face us.

UMass is the main public service in the northeastern United States. It is also the major academic center for environmental education. The campus alone manages over 2,000 acres of experimental forest.

The research and training is done in the College of Food and Natural Resources. College of Engineering, the Environmental Institute, School of Public Health and Health Sciences and experts in public policy from other academic departments on campus.

Figueroa said the student government should be bringing in new leaders each year so that new ideas are considered. He said he does not plan to run for re-election next year if he is elected.

"I will work for students and I will oe their voice," he said. "If you are in a political position at the University you only have four years. We need a continuous flow of new ideas every year. If we have a continuum, we won't have the change for the future that we need in the SGA."

To the Campus Community

Recently I asked faculty from the Black, Jewish and other communities to join me in discussing how our campus could encourage open dialogue about the issues raised by Louis Farrakhan's speech on March 9. The following questions emerged from that discussion. I hope that members of the campus community can take advantage of the many formal and informal opportunities to discuss these and other important questions.

David K. Scott
Chancellor

How can we protect the University's responsibility as a forum for free speech and at the same time protect those injured by that speech?

How can we dispel the notion that all Jews, all Blacks (all Asians, all gays and lesbians, etc., etc.) think similarly about controversial issues while at the same time encourage healthy group cohesion?

How can African-Americans who value Louis Farrakhan's message of self empowerment disassociate from that part of his message with which they might disagree -- without feeling that they are betraying their community?

How can Jews who feel threatened by Louis Farrakhan's visit acknowledge that he raises some important issues -- without feeling that they are betraying their community?

How can we move the public discourse from diatribe to dialogue when so many feelings have already been hurt?

What can we do to address the daily incivilities -- the less publicized acts of racism, sexism, anti-Semitism and homophobia -- that permeate our culture, our classrooms and our living quarters, and not wait for the presence of controversial speakers to surface our backlog of frustration and pain.

How can we engage majority faculty, staff and students in this dialogue that, on the surface, appears to be only between Blacks and Jews?

How can we use this experience to enable deans, department chairs, secretaries, students, faculty, custodians, staff members, senates, unions, etc., to help make serious discussion of social justice issues like these an ongoing and central feature of our campus?

DEANS LIST

One of the University's highest priorities is its commitment to provide opportunities for academic growth. I am pleased, therefore, to recognize those of you who earned Deans List status for the Fall Semester 1993.

This level of achievement - 3.5 or higher semester average with twelve or more graded credits - is attained by fewer than 20% of the undergraduate student body. Such outstanding performance is a source of pride to the faculty, staff, your student colleagues, and, of course, your parents.

Thank you for the credit you bring to the University through your achievement.

David K. Scott, Chancellor

PRESS RELEASES

To publicize your achievement, the University News Office will be issuing a press release to your hometown newspaper if you are a Massachusetts resident. Out of state students are requested to pick up a press release form at 200 Munson Hall (second floor). For further information, please call 545-0444.

ADDITIONS/OMISSIONS

The Deans List is based on grades received and posted by the Registrar's Office by January 24, 1994. If you had a grade change after that date (including making up an "Incomplete" or had a missing or late grade recorded after that date), and believe you now qualify for Deans List status, please fill out a form available at the Information Data Bank, Whitmore 2nd floor lobby counter, attach verification, and return the form as indicated.

REMINDER: ONLY GRADED CREDITS ARE CALCULATED IN DETERMINING DEANS LIST ELIGIBILITY. PASS/FAIL CREDITS ARE NOT INCLUDED

The Deans List is prepared for publication and paid for by Student Affairs Special Services as a service to the campus community. The cooperation of "The Massachusetts Daily Collegian" is acknowledged and appreciated.

Comic Candy remembered fondly

By JOHN HORN
AP Entertainment Writer

LOS ANGELES — John Candy died of a heart attack in his sleep just hours after completing what colleagues called a classic comedy scene for his new film Wagons East. The portly comedian was 43.

Candy's body was found early Friday morning in his residence on the Durango, Mexico, set for the film in which he played a drunken stagecoach driver.

The veteran of some 40 movies, including Uncle Buck and Stripes, was dead before paramedics arrived, said Hector Partida, a spokesman for the government of Durango state.

"John Candy was a gentleman and a great comic talent," said comedian Steve Martin, who starred with Candy in Planes, Trains & Automobiles. "I count myself extremely lucky to have had the opportunity to work with him."

People who were working with Candy in Mexico said he showed no signs of ill health. His death was not necessarily a result of his estimated 275 pounds, an expert in heart disease said.

"The relationship between weight and heart disease is not as great as some people think," said James Dwyer, an associate professor in preventative medicine at the University of Southern California.

Dwyer — an expert in the field, but not a doctor for the actor — said more important factors were smoking, high blood pressure, high cholesterol and a lack of exercise.

Candy, who was 6-feet-3-inches tall, smoked, and associates said he appeared startingly heavy in recent months. He had dieted at the Pritikin Longevity Center and lost 75 pounds for 1985's Summer Rental, but gained weight since.

"Obese people tend to be less active and people who are overweight tend to have higher cholesterol levels and higher blood pressure," Dwyer said. "But it is not a fact that an overweight person is three to four times at risk" of a heart attack.

William Sanderson, a bit player in "Wagons East," said Candy had a bad back but otherwise appeared well.

"He seemed fine. It's a tough shoot. He's up on a horse all day," Sanderson said in a telephone interview from Durango. Sanderson, the film's co-star Richard Lewis, and its producer Gary Goodman all said Candy's performance as a 1860s wrong-way stagecoach driver was outstanding.

"God willing, the world will get to see this performance," Sanderson said, noting that Thursday night Candy had been stellar in a scene reminiscent of the famed Western spoof Cat Ballou.

"Everyone should know that the night before he died, myself and (co-star) Robert Picardo were blessed to be in a scene with John Candy which showed all of us his genius," Lewis said.

Goodman said production had been suspended and it was not decided if the film could or would be completed. "We're in the process of sorting it out," Goodman said. "It's a tremendous shock right now."

Candy first gained fame on the cult hit TV series "Second City T.V." He went on to star in Splash, Volunteers, National Lampoon's Vacation and The Great Outdoors.

The Canadian citizen co-starred in last year's Cool Runnings, a hit film about the Jamaican bobsled team. He also had small part in the comedy blockbuster Home Alone and Olive Stone's JFK.

Marga Gomez, chock full of sexy, witty sarcasm.

By STEPHEN C. CAMPBELL

Last Friday night Marga Gomez performed a fantastic stand-up comedy routine at Bowker Auditorium. Her appearance that night was presented by the New World Theater, the Program for Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Concerns and the Lesbian, Bisexual, Gay Alliance.

Gomez's performance was part of the Wild Women at Large Series which is sponsored in part by the University of Massachusetts Mission Enhancement Board.

Gomez played to a large audience in her second visit to UMass since 1991. She came on stage wearing a dark green jumpsuit, a

Cobain recuperating from sedative overdose

ROME (AP) — Kurt Cobain, lead singer of the rock band Nirvana, emerged from a drug-and-alcohol coma on Saturday and was recuperating in a private hospital.

The 27-year-old Cobain was fully conscious and even asked for a strawberry milkshake along with his hospital meal of minestrone soup, his doctor said.

Dr. Osvaldo Galletta said that although Cobain's health appeared to rebound, he was still disoriented and having difficulty recalling events of the past few days.

"But he looks like he will fully recover with no lingering problems," Galletta told The Associated Press.

The singer's breathing and other vital signs appeared strong and he could be released from Rome's American Hospital as early as Sunday.

Galletta said Cobain's recovery was aided by the "timely intervention" of his wife, rock singer Courtney Love, who called for medical help early Friday.

Cobain first showed signs of emerging from the coma late Friday, when he opened his eyes and moved his hands. But he did not regain complete consciousness until Saturday, Galletta said.

Cobain, Love and their daughter were staying in a luxury hotel suite across the street from the U.S. Embassy. Cobain reportedly came to Rome trying to recover from health problems that forced the band to cancel two recent concert dates in Europe.

The news agency ANSA said Cobain was stricken after combining a large dose of a strong sedative with champagne. The drug, known in Italy under the name Roipnol, is used mostly for insomnia cases. Galletta said he could not specify what substance Cobain took, but noted it was some type of "tranquilizers combined with alcohol."

Nirvana performed in Italy last month, on Wednesday in Germany and had a concert scheduled in Prague, Czech Republic, next week. Nirvana led the movement of bands from the Pacific Northwest that changed "grunge" from a derogatory term into the moniker of music noted for its raw

Creative suggestions for new TV networks

Could Madonna make the switch from movies to televison?

On the Tube
By Caleb Cochran

There are a lot of television networks out there. Cooking, sports, shopping and news all have a channel devoted to them. Still, I think there are some topics that are worthy of a network which have not yet been explored. See if you agree.

•The Madonna Network. What the hell? It's basically to the point where she deserves it, in my opinion. She's done so much for MTV that she needs to move on. The programming format would go something like this: Videos from 10 a.m. – 6 p.m.; a daily show hosted by Madonna herself from 6–7 p.m., and movies starring Madonna for the rest of the night. There are more than you might initially think. (Remember Shanghai Surprise?)

An additional treat would be a weekly show hosted by someone who has dated/been married to Madonna in the past. ("Ladies and gentlemen, Brian Shaw!") What I'd really like to see is a show that had all of her ex-lovers in one room talking trash about her. Things could even get a little heated. I'd love to see Warren Beatty and Jose Canseco duking it out on prime time TV. Maybe I'm just goofy, but I would.

•The Game Show Network. I think we need it. There are too many great game shows out there that have faded into oblivion. Remember "Card Sharks?" How about "The Joker's Wild?" My personal favorite was "Match Game P.M.," featuring funny man Charles Nelson Reilly. If there were any justice in this world, there would be a "Match Game P.M." network. How about "Hollywood Squares"? That crazy Jim J. Bullock is a hoot. Have you caught his brief appearance in the new Taco Bell ad? I have. I don't know why Jim J. can't find a real job. He's pretty funny. I would imagine "Hollywood Squares" takes care of him pretty well. Anyway, Jim, if you're reading, I'm a big fan — keep up the good work.

•The Beer Commercial Network. This is another one which is long overdue. Beer commercials are an institution on television, and I think it's about time they got the recognition they deserve. They could put the ads into categories, such as "Big boobs," "Bob Uecker," "Less Filling/Tastes Great" and "Dorky guys/hot women." The possibilities are endless. Then they could run the commercials in blocks, based on topic, thus creating the effect of a real television show. From 8–9 p.m., for example, the category would be "Big boobs," and they would run a full hour of ads featuring large-chested women. Bad idea? How is this any different from an episode of "Baywatch?" Someone please explain it to me.

•The Dukes of Hazzard/CHiPs" Network. If I could somehow take the time I spent watching these shows as a youth and tack them on to the end of my life, I would easily have an extra two years to play with. I simply never missed these two shows. The network would introduce these shows to a whole new generation of viewers, as well as giving Erik Estrada's career a much-needed shot in the arm. Come to think of it, I haven't heard much from Larry Wilcox, John Schneider, Tom Wopat or Catherine Bach either. I imagine they're huge in Europe.

•The Auto Racing/ Golf/ Bowling Network. Let's get this garbage off of ESPN and the regular networks once and for all. There seem to be enough events in these "sports" that a network would not be unreasonable. Real sports fans would be glad to have this crap off of their TVs, and fans of these "sports" would be in heaven with their own network. I think everyone wins with this idea.

•The David Letterman Network. Oops. I forgot. He already owns one. It's called CBS.

Jim McGee, of the Stockbridge Arbor Club, helps to ease the University's budget woes by participating in a project to help beautify the campus. The Durfee project, as it is known, will save the University more than $10,000 by having Stockbridge students prune trees along Thatcher Way, repairing them from storm damage.

average $10,000 in loans to pay back.

This averages out to about $125 per month, which would be a cinch to pay back if students were going straight into high paying, full-time employment, however, because of today's job market, if a student is unsure of career goals or did not prepare for graduation, they will probably end up under-employed or as part-time workers.

It is crucial that students make an effort to make the connection between studies and work because it could be years before they find a job that is right for them.

"When I was an undergraduate English major I basically took my classes, and didn't explore my career options. Even though I enjoy what I'm doing now at UMass, it took me three to four years of trial and error to get to the job I wanted," said Jim Ayer, who is fiscal administrator at the UMass grants and contracts office.

Ayer also said if he had attended a major choosing workshop on campus he would have learned how to make the connection between his major and potential careers he could pursue.

Studies conducted over a 3-year period by the Career Center have shown that a majority of UMass student, primarily from the schools of Arts and Sciences, graduate without any idea of how to use their general, non-technical majors in today's job market. Ryan Pasquini, who is a fifth year senior, said that he picked the English major because he enjoyed writing. He advised students to "start finding out about opportunities in your field as soon as possible."

Students who have already declared their majors can take Career Development courses for 2 credits offered through the Departments of English, History, Psychology and Social Thought and Political Economy.

Gomez was witty, sarcastic and sexy on the stage, and the crowd loved her. The only time they were silent was in between punch lines. The audience was hers from the get-go, and Gomez wasn't going to let them go anywhere except to the edge of their seats with laughter.

This self proclaimed half-Cuban, half-lesbian, half-Puerto Rican mixed local, topical and political humor together without missing a beat. Gomez will be returning to Amherst in September to perform her new one-woman show, Chewi.

Bananas unpeeling themselves Fruits attacking each other These were the actors in my first film

MY FILMS ARE ABOUT LIFE IMITATING ART.
(ON MY BUDGET, I CAN'T AFFORD THE REAL THING.)

Using the American Express Card at my wrap party helped neutralize hostile aliens

A lot of people don't realize how much goes into making a film. Creating illusions with photographs being flickered, that in itself, that's art. But as a student, reality kicks in fast. Having a budget of a few hundred dollars for my senior thesis film, that's reality. I couldn't afford 'Star Wars' type special effects. I got the actors to volunteer to be my aliens, free. And used the American Express® Card to charge major expenses like film and processing. The Card helps me stick to a budget. (It even helped me save serious money on a flight to New Orleans, with my Continental voucher.) Working on the film for no money, and long hours, tempers got a little short. So, the Card came in handy at my wrap party. We all became friends again. The American Express® Card works. For real.

Your Horoscope
By Jeane Dixon

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Co-workers may not share your business promises. A compromise will help. The financial picture improves when a good friend provides inside information.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your labors should prove very profitable this month. Take the proper precautions when traveling or buying out a new route. Becoming too attached to your possessions could hurt in the long run.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Continue to rely on your muse or another close associate; they will not let you down. Higher ups admire the creative touch as well as efficiency.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Intense emotions could motivate you to excel at work. They express your altruistic feelings to good effect. Wonderful news arrives from abroad.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A business-like attitude helps you handle delicate financial matters. Minor mistakes made when you receive good news regarding a loved one. Your chestnut mood is contagious!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Romance will require great diplomacy. Do not let impatience lead to reckless behavior. Balance will supersede with partnership needs. Who you know counts heavily in the business arena. Large new alliances.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A check proves in time to avert a financial crisis. Your sense of balance and keen mind give you a big advantage in business dealings. A friend from your past may return.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Finish what you start. A promotion, new responsibilities and additional income are likely. Seek a faster method of distribution. Hints from a loved one become increasingly clear. Be down-to-earth.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Be firm: a higher-up's try to heap too many responsibilities on our shoulders. Romance will blossom if you give it time. Seek a second income if your salary is not adequate.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Live up to both your obligations and your potential! Get inspired advice in thinking of making new investments. A real estate transaction may prove to be a wise move. Postpone travel.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Trust your intuition. Test impressions are apt to be correct now. Delegate routine tasks in order to devote time to creative projects. Romance intensifies.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You could feel restless or highly busy. Avoid going on an ego-trip. A new situation makes you feel both lucky and happy. Listening to classical music will help you relax somewhe

Put up your Dukes!

Minutemen beat St. Joe's, advance to tourney semis

By ARTHUR STAPLETON JR.
Collegian Staff

PHILADELPHIA — St. Joseph's University tried to do its best impersonation of underdog-turned-champion Rocky Balboa in the quarterfinals of the Atlantic 10 Tournament against the No. 1 seed and favorite, Massachusetts.

However, unlike in the movie filmed in the same city, Apollo Creed, the reigning champion, delivered the knockout blow and sent the upstart home with another loss as Massachusetts beat the Hawks, 74-58, before a sold out crowd at the Palestra, not the Spectrum, last night.

After St. Joe's scored the first two points of the game, the Minutemen used a 25-10 spurt over the next 10 minutes of the contest, burying the Hawks in a hole coach John Griffin's club would never climb out of.

The hometown favorite got as close as 10 in the second half on two separate occasions, but a mammoth effort by Massachusetts forward Lou Roe (23 points, nine rebounds) during a five-minute stretch late in the game stomped any ideas the Hawks had of making it a game.

Massachusetts (25-6) will play fifth seed Duquesne tonight (7 p.m.) in the semifinals. The Dukes defeated fourth seed West Virginia 70-68 in a quarterfinal contest earlier Sunday afternoon.

Roe, the 6-foot-7-inch co-captain, was named to the conference's first team the night before and, after a first half in which he was double and triple teamed by St. Joe's, came out to prove why.

On three consecutive trips when the Hawks had a chance to cut the Massachusetts lead under 10, Roe managed to hawl down huge rebounds each time, effectively both stopping the Hawks momentum and giving the Minutemen a chance to put the game away.

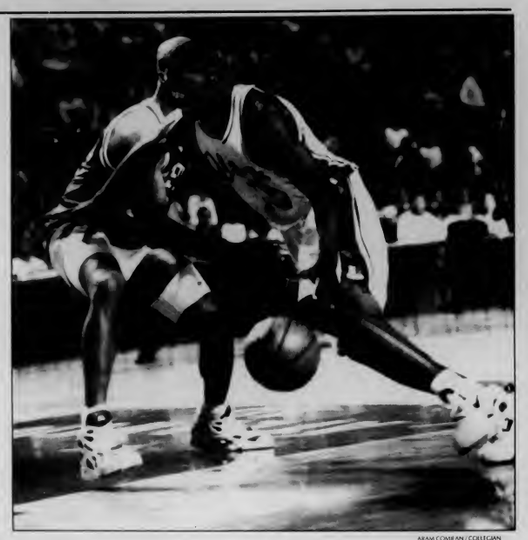
"I got in foul trouble in the first half so I spent some time out. I just tried to hit the boards. When I wasn't double teamed, I tried to score," said Roe, who tallied 12 of the final 18 points for the Minutemen.

With 6:29 remaining, St. Joe's cut the deficit to 57-47 on a Carlin Warley (15 points, 14 rebounds) layup. After teammate Dana Dingle (five points, one rebound) hit one of two free throws, point guard Derek Kellogg (six points, two assists) stole a pass from Hawk Rap Curry and tapped it ahead to Roe, who went coast-to-coast; Roe made a one-handed layup around Curry while drawing the foul.

The subsequent free throw pushed the Massachusetts lead back up to 14, 61-47.

On St. Joe's next trip down, Roe's effective defense in the post against Warley forced an offensive foul and two free throws on the other end; Roe was perfect on both, giving the Minutemen an insurmountable 16-point lead.

Massachusetts' jump start was fueled early by the A-10 Freshman of the Year, center Marcus Camby. By shutting down the Hawks on their offensive end, the Minutemen were able to get out in the open court and run, setting up Camby and junior Mike Williams (11 points, five assists) on the other end.



After Camby blocked a Warley shot, one of six blocks on the night, the duo from Hartford, Conn., connected on a tremendous alley-oop which gave the Minutemen a 7-2 lead.

"The flow early really made me comfortable. After I got that slam down, I was able to get it going and attack the offensive glass," said Camby, who scored 14 points and snared nine rebounds in 17 minutes of action.

"When they beat us down here (Feb. 15, 81-80) they were the aggressor," said Massachusetts Coach John Calipari. "They came right after us and we were a full second behind everything they did.

"And today I thought that we understood we could not play that way again."

"If we put it together mentally and physically, UMass is a dangerous team. It is 'one and done' now," said Roe, whose Minutemen will put their A-10 Tournament championship on the line again tonight against underdog Duquesne, looking to avoid another potential Rocky-like upset in the City of Brotherly Love.

ARAM COMERIAN / COLLEGIAN

Junior forward Lou Roe led the Minutemen past St. Joe's by scoring 23 points in the 74-58 victory. Massachusetts faces Duquesne tonight for the right to play in Thursday's championship game.

Why Massachusetts won

The Minutemen put on one of their best first-half performances of the season, using a 25-10 run in the first ten minutes to bury the St. Joseph's Hawks in front of a hostile Palestra crowd.

Lou Roe had a game worthy of his spot on the A-10 First Team, accounting for 23 points and nine rebounds for the Minutemen, including 12 of the team's final 18 points.

Tournament provides cruel exit for seniors

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

PHILADELPHIA — It's sometimes easy to forget that March can be a cruel month for some players. Most teams end up losing its last game of the season, and it can be a bitter pill to swallow for seniors ending their careers. Take St. Bonaventure's Harry Moore for example.

Moore was the go-to guy for the Bonnies(10-16) for three years after sitting out his freshman season due to Proposition 48. He never got the chance to play in the post season NCAA or NIT Tournaments.

The senior has had anything but an easy life. Mistakenly shot in the leg on the streets of Philadelphia as a teenager, Moore decided to go as far away from the city as possible after a successful high school career at Simon Gratz High School.

The place for him was Olean, N.Y.

The term "toiling in obscurity" definitely applies to the 1994 Atlantic 10 First Team All-Conference selection. Although Moore scored his 1,000th career point in the William D. Mullins Center Jan. 15, the feat came during another Bonaventure defeat to UMass.

The Bonnies slid this season after promising upset wins over then-ranked West Virginia and George Washington, but were hoping to topple St. Joseph's in Saturday's first round A-10 Tournament game. Moore did his part with 20 points and nine rebounds but cheap fouls ended his career with 4:02 left in the 94-83 Bonaventure loss.

"I'm happy I went to college there and hopefully I can give something back to the school," Moore said. "I was proud to play for St. Bonaventure."

Moore's hard work and dedication will pay off. A tryout with the NBA is possible if he's not drafted in June, and overseas ball (a la Harper Williams and Tony Barbee) is a good possibility as well.

A few A-10 seniors were determined to go out with a bang Sunday while others puzzled everyone with their lackluster play. Abdul Fox (21 points) and Rap Curry (25 points on Saturday, 10 on Sunday) were upperclassmen carrying the load for teams reduced to the spoiler role because of massive injuries.

Derek Alston (21 points) was a major force in Duquesne's 70-68 over the Mountaineers, a game nowhere as close as the score indicates.

West Virginia's seniors were disappointing by comparison. The team lost seven of its last nine conference games after begining 6-1 and rising as high as 19th in the national rankings. With six seniors, the Mountaineers were expected to do better than the NIT bid they received last season. But Ricky Robinson, Mike Boyd and Phil Wilson had not provided the leadership Coach Gale Catlett hoped they would.

Pervires Greene (14 points) and Marsalis Basey (seven assists) have had to raise their games and were not able to at times. Robinson scored a quiet 18 points.

George Washington's Yinka Dare set the A-10 Tourney record for rebounds in a game with 18 during the Colonials' 70-61 quarterfinal victory over URI. Dare also hit all five of his free throws, a rarity for the Nigerian import. He also led the team with 21 points and had three blocks.

"I was sick today, actually," the 7-foot-1-inch sophomore said. "I was thinking we had the game won in the second half when we were up 17. I got complacent."

Coach Mike Jarvis said he thought the league would get four teams in the NCAA Tournament again. Although the A-10 was 4-0 in first round tourney games last March, it seems unlikely four teams will start on the Road to the Final Four, unless Duquesne wins the A-10 Tournament.

Minutewomen beat Owls on Senior Day

By ANDREW BRYCE

Everything fell into place — and it couldn't have come on a better day.

It was Senior Day at the Curry Hicks Cage on Saturday afternoon. It was honoring four players whose collegiate basketball careers come to a halt at the end of the season. It was also a much needed win for the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team, as it defeated the Temple Owls in overtime, 66-62.

"It went back and forth, but hey, we won it," said Minutewoman Coach Joanie O'Brien. "It wasn't pretty but it was one we had to have."

The Minutewomen (13-12, 7-8 Atlantic 10), whose 13 wins are the most by a Minutewoman team since the 1986- 87 squad posted a 14-12 record, are trying to get themselves in a comfortable position for the Atlantic 10 tournament held this week. The nail-biting win against Temple (6-20, 2-14 in A-10) only helped the Minutewomen's cause.

The Minutewomen held a 62-60 lead in the overtime session and increased it to four on two free throws by senior Maleeka Valentine (5 points) with :39 left.

After an Owl hoop made it 64-62, Octavia Thomas (15 points) hit two free throws with :23 left to put the game out of reach.

"In overtime, we fought and we struggled," said O'Brien. "Octavia and Maleeka came up big; Mel (Gurile) came up with a big rebound. Games like these, you take 'em."

It was the Minutewomen who jumped out to an early 12-5 lead with 16:11 left in the first half on freshman Crystal Carroll's (game high-tying 22 points) jumper. The Owls, with their strong perimeter game, then jumped out to a 20-17 lead on two straight three-pointers by Chantel Adkins and Mickey Wetzel.

UMass reached the first half-high seven point lead on three more occasions duirng the first 20 minutes. Scores of 27-20, 29-22 and 31-24 were reached, before Owl Adkins hit a trey at the buzzer to make the score 35-31.

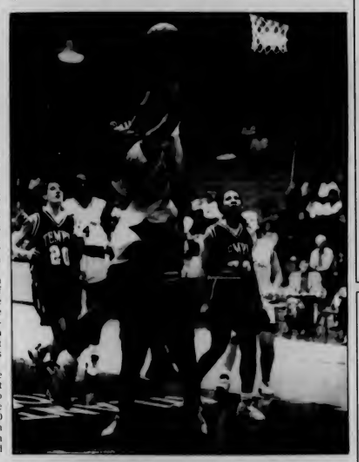
It was the Minutewomen who came out strong in the second half as well scoring five straight points, culminated by Valentine's drive to the hoop to make it 40-31 at 16:49.

It took the Owls a little over eight more minutes to knock the Minutewomen lead down to two, as freshman Jen Ricco banged a three-pointer. Then it was the Minutewomen again, increasing the lead to seven on Thomas' hard-fought lay-in to make it 51-44 with 4:34 left, and then to eight at 3:09 on two Thomas free throws.

A team like Temple, though, is tough to keep down. The Owls were the same Temple team who trounced second place Rutgers 102-79 in an A-10 upset last Thursday. The Owls' strong perimeter showing allowed them to stay in the game with the Minutewomen. After a Thomas free throw at 1:23 made it 54-49, Ricco nailed a three to cut the UMass lead to two at 54-52 with :57 remaining in regulation.

With :39 left, freshman Beth Kuzmeski (seven points) hit one of two free throws to extend the Minutewoman lead to three 55-52. But, after a Temple time-out, sharpshooter Adkins hit a three-pointer to send the contest to the extra five minutes. That is where UMass came out on top.

Here's the scenario for the Minutewomen. The win against Temple on Saturday assured no worse than the No. 6 seed (nine teams) in the upcoming A-10 tournament. If the Minutewomen defeat Rutgers tonight, they can finish as the No. 4 and No. 5 seed in the tournament.



Minutewomen notes: Joanie O'Brien talked about the four seniors on UMass, and their contributions to the program:

O'Brien on walk-on Jessica Gould: "...Jess has been the most pleasant surprise. She forced the big kids to play. I thanked her for that. I hope she enjoyed the ride..."

O'Brien on Cherie Muza: "...Cherie did everything you can ask for someone in practice. She's gonna be successful in life..."

O'Brien on Francie Hansen: "...Francie is the ultimate role player. Probably worked as hard as anyone in my seven years of coaching..."

O'Brien on Valentine: "...Maleeka's been my jack-of-all-trades since I got here. She's a great kid, always working 100 percent."

Israeli turmoil continues

JERUSALEM (AP) — Soldiers shot dead two Palestinians in the West Bank and guerrillas killed nine people in Israeli-held south Lebanon as violence erupted anew Monday amid efforts to revive stalled Mideast peace talks.

Muslim extremists warned they will unleash suicide attacks on Jewish settlements in the occupied territories, saying Israelis will "cry in blood" for the Feb. 25 mosque massacre in Hebron. The turmoil and threat of further bloodletting came after PLO chairman Yasser Arafat and an Israeli envoy, Jacques Neriah, met in Cairo on Monday to discuss resuming the talks. It was the first such face-to-face meeting since the massacre.

Gad Ben-Ari, Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin's spokesman, said in Jerusalem: "There are intensive efforts being made and we hope the negotiations will resume in the shortest possible time." Rabin, seeking to broaden his coalition government and strengthen his negotiating position by bringing in the right-wing Tsomet Party, was more sanguine.

Clinton defends wife

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton said today he had been unaware of two White House meetings in which his advisers discussed the Whitewater investigation with Treasury Department officials involved in the probe. He forcefully defended his wife and said he was sure she had done nothing wrong.

At a White House news conference dominated by the Whitewater investigation, Clinton said the White House was cooperating fully with investigators, and scoffed at Republican comparisons with Watergate.

"There will not be a cover-up, there will not be an abuse of office in this White House," Clinton said.

Employment plan slated

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton will propose a $13 billion plan to remake the nation's unemployment system Wednesday, including long-term jobless benefits for workers in training.

Clinton's Workforce Security Act, which he will outline during a White House briefing, will allow community colleges and other local groups to compete with government-run programs for federal dollars to retrain dislocated workers, said Doug Ross, assistant secretary of labor for employment and training.

"We want to take what is a fairly passive employment system ... and turn it into a very active re-employment system," Ross said. The legislation would be the third piece from the administration designed to make American workers more competitive worldwide.

Pot for AIDS patients?

BOSTON (AP) — State health officials are pushing a bill to legalize experiments using marijuana to ease the pain of some AIDS patients a move opponents say will send the wrong message about pot.

"The whole medicinal marijuana issue is a ruse to give marijuana a good name," said Lea Cox, president of Concerned Citizens for Drug Prevention Inc., told the Health Care Committee on Monday.

"We already have children thinking it's okay to smoke marijuana because they think it's good for you," she said.

The bill, sponsored by Rep. Byron Rushing, D-Boston, would amend the state's therapeutic research law to include AIDS as one of the diseases that could be the subject of medical marijuana experiments.

Since 1991, Massachusetts has allowed doctors to prescribe marijuana to certain cancer patients to offset the side effects of chemotherapy and radiation treatments, as well as to some sufferers of glaucoma and asthma.

Security is discussed for Farrakhan's visit

By GERI SAHN
Collegian Staff

A press conference was held yesterday at the New Africa House Library to further discuss Minister Louis Farrakhan's arrival at the University of Massachusetts.

Minister Yusef Muhammed spoke a great deal about the security measures being taken when Farrakhan speaks on Wednesday nilgit at the Fine Arts Center.

He said he greatly appreciated the determination and hard work of UMass police Chief John Luippold for guaranteeing security.

Yet, Muhammed said he fears the outcome of the protesting that will take place outside of the building.

"We want to make it clear. We don't want to be blamed for problems caused. We would prefer dialogue as opposed to protest," Muhammed said.

Karin Sherbin, UMass spokeswoman, said the UMass police department is going to have very strict security and feels very confident about it.

"The protest zone for the visit of Minister Farrakhan will be 150 feet farther away from the Fine Arts Center building then it was in 1989," Sherbin said.

"To move the protester any farther away from the building, one, would be a security hazard because they would be out in the open and be less controllable. And number two, it also might interfere with their rights to hold a meaningful protest," she said.

Muhammed said he felt the protesters were too close to the building and he feared innocent people would be hurt.

"We don't want to endanger anyone. In 1989, people shoved members and cursed innocent people entering the building. We want to avoid that," Muhammed said.

Sherbin said when Farrakhan was at the University In 1989, fences were put up between the protesters and the people entering the building. The fences will be put up again this Wednesday. Police in charge of security in 1989, said no shoving occurred during the protests.

Minister Yusef Muhammed.

"There will be strict security program in place that night. People will walk through a metal detector and be subject to searches," Sherbin said.

Muhammed also talked about the media and its effects on the image of Farrakhan. He said both campus newspapers and area newspapers have been biased with their reporting on Farrakhan.

"The papers are one-sided. They have insulted and attacked Louis Farrakhan and the nation of Islam," Muhammed said.

Muhammed said the media has targeted Farrakhan as being an anti-Semite, racist and sexist. He responded to Farrakhan's statement saying Hitler was, "a great man."

"Every article and story continues to lie. Articles have said he has praised Hitler. Hitler hated Black people. Louis Farrakhan loves Black people. He would not praise Hitler," Muhammed said.

"Louis Farrakhan has never violated human or civil rights. He has only offered love to our people," he said.

UMass urged to vote today

By BRIAN GORMLEY

University of Massachusetts students will elect a Student Government Association president and a student trustee today and tomorrow.

The voting precincts are: Berkshire Dining Commons for Southwest South residents, Hampshire D.C. for Southwest North residents, Franklin D.C. for Orchard Hill and Central residents, Worcester D.C. for Sylvan and Northeast residents, The Newman Center for Greek Area residents, The Hatch Cafeteria for commuters, and the Graduate Student Lounge for graduate students. Polling hours are from 11 a.m. to 7 p.m.

Students must show their student identification cards to vote. Graduate students can vote for student trustee but not for president.

The candidates for president are: Senator Mirran Raphaely, Senator Jamie Bearse, Senator Charles Lenchner and Interfraternity Council President Joseph Vozza. The candidates for student trustee are: Trustee Al Lizana and SGA Finance Committee Chairman Diego Figueroa.

In addition to the president and trustee elections, the Cannabis Reform Coalition will have a referendum on the ballot. The referendum will be to put an affirmative check off fee of $5 on the University bill to support the CRC.

SGA Governmental Affairs Chairwoman Cam Tewksbury said all of the candidates have done a good enough job of expressing their views on the issues that students should be able to vote intelligently.

"I'd like to urge people to get out and vote. I feel like all of the candidates have done a good job of getting their views known to a lot of people," Tewksbury said. "There has been a lot of grass roots campaigning, there are posters and flyers everywhere, there have been debates in various forms and there has been a lot of newspaper coverage. Students should be aware enough of the candidates by this time to make an educated choice."

The election results will be tallied by Thursday morning, Tewksbury said. She also said the new president will take office on April 1, and if a new trustee is elected he will begin his term on July 1.

Antonio's raffle may be illegal

By GERI SAHN
Collegian Staff

If you are anxiously waiting to see if you are the winner of Antonio's Pizza raffle drawing on March 10, you may be wasting your time.

Bruno Matarazzo, a manager at Antonio's, said a phone call was made to the Hampshire District Attorney's Office complaining about whether the raffle is illegal.

Matarazzo said in order to be eligible for the drawing, entrants must have a card which enables them to get a free piece of pizza after buying 10 slices. When the card is filled, patrons can put their name and phone number on the back and put it in the raffle box.

The winner would get a free trip-for-two worth up to $1,000. The person can choose the trip location from a brochure which includes Disney World, the Bahamas and Cancun.

The complaint was in reference to the way the contest was run. The person felt there should be, "no purchase necessary," in order to be eligible to win.

"This contest was a promotional thing. We were not aware we were doing anything illegal," Matarazzo said.

The District Attorney's office called the University of Massachusetts police who then called Antonio's to warn them about the complaint.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian was also called about the incident because it runs an ad about the contest. The Collegian was told by the District Attorney's Office to discontinue running the ad for now.

"I did not know when you advertise you have to say no purchase necessary. It was a mistake on ignorance. The District Attorney didn't even know whether it was illegal or not," Matarazzo said.

Matarazzo also said for now he will continue to have the drawing on the March 10 until the District Attorney's office gives him definite answers.

"Someone could be playing a game on us. I didn't know we were breaking the law," Matarazzo said.

Women to celebrate years of achievement

By VANESSA AMIN
Collegian Staff

Today is International Women's Day, and women everywhere are encouraged to acknowledge and honor their achievements and successes. This day commemorates women's struggles throughout the world for more than 100 years.

This celebration of the accomplishments of women started March 8, 1857, when women garment workers marched in protest on the Lower East Side of New York City to demand an end to the oppressive conditions in the workplace. On this day, 20,000 women garment workers again participated in strikes and demonstrations following a garment fire due to doors that opened inward and lack of fire escapes.

These women demanded better living and working conditions. They also struggled for the right for women to vote. The International Socialist Conference proclaimed March 8 to be International Women's Day; a day to reflect upon the accomplishments of women all over the world.

This struggle of women's rights was revived in 1970 by women in many U.S cities who raised demands for abortion, childcare, equal pay, decent jobs and education.

Today, internationally, women are playing an increasingly essential role in the struggles for national liberation and socialism, from Asia to Southern Africa to Central America.

In celebration of International Women's Day, the Everywoman's Center program for Women of Color and the Counseling Program have sponsored an International Women's Breakfast from 9 a.m. to 11 p.m. in the Bangs Community Center tommorow.

According to Juana Mendoza, Assistant Cordinator of the Women of Color program, this day is very important because it brings women from all over the world together to share their

Students are buried in debt

By MIKE FEINSILBER
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Hillary Wical has her dream job as a television reporter, but she can't afford the clothes that make her look professional on the air.

She's trying to pay off "an enormous debt, probably $20,000 or $21,000" for the year at Northwestern University's Medill School of Journalism that helped her land the job. And that's on a novice newsperson's salary of $16,000 a year.

"All my clothes are gifts," says Wical, who works for WLFI in West Lafayette, Ind. "Every single thing I have for work was given to me. My mother, my grandmother - they shop for me for bargains." Millions of today's students must smirk when, studying Shakespeare, they come across Polonius' advice to his son Laertes, "Neither a borrower nor a lender be."

If they weren't borrowers, they wouldn't in college be. And after they get out, their debt can influence the course of their lives. A study finds that many graduates in debt postpone marriage, delay having a family, hold down two jobs, even put off medical care.

Much attention has been paid to college borrowers who default, but relatively little to the impact of indebtedness on the 12.5 million who plodding, month after month, pay off their loans. Collectively they owe $41.9 billion. Many are still in hock 10 years after graduation.

No time for these young people to backpack across Europe; no year off to "find themselves" - they've got debts to pay! "There are students who would like to take a couple of years of their life and go to work in the nonprofit sector, and return something to their country before they mush on with their careers," said Victor Lindquist, director of placement at Northwestern.

"But they feel they are unable to do that and still meet their financial obligations. The clock begins ticking once you graduate."

For a variety of reasons — college tuitions have soared, more people of all incomes are enrolling and there are more loan programs available — more students are leaving school in debt. In many schools, 70 percent of the student body must borrow. One survey said that the average undergraduate borrower carried away a $7,900 debt. Those who also borrowed for an advanced degree owed $31,000.

And the burden is compounded when one student debtor marries another.

"When I was in school in the 1950s, I had three jobs and worked summers," recalled Lindquist. "If you hustled you could make your way through."

Joanne Peevey, director of career and counseling services at the University of Houston at Clear Lake, said some graduates with loans leap at the first job offer that comes along "rather than taking the time to find the job that fits their skills and interest. So they pay a price."

Hillel vigil calls to end killing

Muslim massacre, New York attack draw support

By JACOB W. MICHAELS
Collegian Staff

Dismayed by the massacre of Muslims praying in Hebron's Mosque, and by the attack on Hasidic Jews in New York, the Jewish and Muslim communities at the University of Massachusetts will be holding a vigil for peace.

On Friday, Feb. 25, an American-born Israeli doctor, Baruch Goldstein, entered a mosque where Muslims were praying and began shooting his assault rifle. He killed approximately 40 Muslims and wounded many more, before he was killed by the survivors. Since then, Israelis and Palestinians have continued clashing, resulting in more deaths on both sides.

In what is believed to be a related attack, a vanload of Hasidic Jews were shot at in New York City. One was left brain dead, and another remained near death as of March 3. Three suspects in the shooting were arrested by the New York Police Department on March 2.

The vigil will occur on Tuesday, March 8, on the steps of the Student Union. It is sponsored by Hillel and the Muslim Students Association. There will be speakers for both groups, a call to end the killing and a moment of silence for the victims of terrorism.

Parody scores in Supreme Court

By LAURIE ASSEO
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court gave the satirical art of parody more protection against copyright law Monday, a ruling that may let the group 2 Live Crew beat the rap of ripping off the rock classic "Oh, Pretty Woman."

Parodies that poke fun at an original work can be considered "fair use" that doesn't require permission from the copyright holder, the court ruled unanimously in a case closely watched by the entertainment industry.

"Like less ostensibly humorous forms of criticism, (parody) can provide social benefit, by shedding light on an earlier work, and, in the process, creating a new one," Justice David H. Souter wrote for the court.

"We thus line up with the courts that have held that parody, like other comment or criticism, may claim fair use" of a copyright work, Souter said.

The 2 Live Crew parody uses much of the Roy Orbison song's music and the first line of lyrics: "Pretty woman, walking down the street." Then it shifts to "big hairy woman," "bald-headed woman" and "two-timin' woman."

"We're still undefeated," 2 Live Crew's Luther Campbell said in Miami. "Hopefully people could get off our back and leave us alone and let us do our music and do what we do as artists."

Muhammad condemned

Derogatory speech is denounced by commission

By CAROLYN SKORNECK
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, following in the footsteps of Congress, condemned a speech by an aide to Nation of Islam leader Louis Farrakhan, calling it "outrageous hatemongering of the most vicious and vile kind."

The commission also intends to prepare a resolution condemning all derogatory speech, commission spokeswoman Barbara Brooks said Monday. The panel decided on the second, general resolution after a commissioner brought up recent derogatory comments about African leaders by Sen. Ernest Hollings, D-S.C., Brooks said.

Last year, Hollings joked to reporters about African leaders who attend trade conferences in Switzerland: 'Rather than eat each other, they'd just come up (to Switzerland) and get a good square meal.'

The commission's unanimous resolution Friday concerned a Nov. 29 speech by Khallid Abdul Muhammad at Kean College in New Jersey. Muhammad referred to Jews as "bloodsuckers of the black community" and he made statements against Catholics, whites in South Africa and other blacks.

Farrakhan dismissed Muhammad as his national assistant last month after the speech was publicized, but he coupled his rebuke of Muhammad with attacks on a Jewish group and on Vice President Al Gore.

The commission's vote echoed a Feb. 23 congressional resolution that passed the House 361-34. The Senate unanimously adopted a similar resolution Feb. 2.

Last year, Hollings joked to reporters about African leaders who attend trade conferences in Switzerland: "Rather than eat each other, they'd just come up (to Switzerland) and get a good square meal."

Rep. Kweisi Mfume, D-Md., chairman of the Congressional Black Caucus, has pressed "leaders of good will" to denounce Hollings' statement. He tried to introduce a separate resolution criticizing Hollings' comments, but was prevented from doing so on procedural grounds.

Brooks said that during discussion about the Muhammad resolution, Hollings' "name was raised," and commissioners decided to issue resolution condemning all racially divisive speech.

There was no immediate comment Monday from Hollings or the Black Caucus regarding the commission's action or plans.

CONDEMN BIGOTRY. BUILD COMMUNITY.

In March, Louis Farrakhan, leader of the Nation of Islam, is scheduled to speak at the University of Massachusetts. A few weeks ago on November 29, 1993, Khalid Abdul Muhammed, a spokesperson for Farrakhan's Nation of Islam, spoke on the campus of Kean College in Union, New Jersey.

Here are some of the things he said:

"Go to the Vatican in Rome when the old, no-good Pope -- you know the cracker; somebody needs to raise that dress and see what's really up there. When the old Pope was shot, he didn't pray in front of no white Mary."

"We don't owe the white man nothin' in South Africa. He's killed millions of our women, our children, our babies, our elders. We don't owe him nothing in South Africa. If we want to be merciful at all, when we gain enough power from God Almighty to take our freedom and independence from him, we give him 24 hours to get out of town by sundown. That's all. If he don't get out of town by sundown, we will kill everything that ain't right that's in sight in South Africa. We kill the women. We kill the babies. We kill the cripples. We kill 'em all. We kill the faggot. we kill the lesbian. We kill 'em all."

Mr. Muhammed called Jews "blood suckers of the black community."

As a result of these and other remarks, many leaders, including the Congressional Black Caucus, denounced Mr. Muhammed's speech as bigoted, and wrote to Minister Farrakhan to clarify if his side's remarks represented the Nation of Islam. The Rev. Jesse Jackson called upon Farrakhan to repudiate the remarks as "racist, anti-Semitic, divisive, untrue and chilling."

More than two months after Mr. Muhammed's speech, Mr. Farrakhan finally publicly criticized Mr. Muhammed: "While I stand by the truths that he spoke, I must condemn the manner in which he spoke."

Here are just a few of the many such statements Mr. Farrakhan consistently has made as leader of the Nation of Islam:

"With your state filled with homosexuals, filled with degenerates, filled with disease... With all of this going on in your state, you should welcome me like the return of Jesus Christ." Los Angeles, California September 14, 1985

"Christians preach love, but practice hate and tyranny, use God to cover up their corrupt and dirty practices." Northeastern University April 25, 1985

Speaking in Washington, D.C. on August 18, 1984. When Farrakhan asked the crowd what should be done with black leaders who seek Jewish support, someone shouted: 'Kill them.' Farrakhan replied: 'I didn't say it. I just seconded the motion.'"

"The God who taught me calls the white man the skunk of the planet earth. He is so wicked and so filthy that God calls him the skunk of the planet earth." June 5, 1992, from the Final Call, which is the official paper of the Nation of Islam and is published by Louis Farrakhan.

"The whole of the Western white civilization is opposed to Islam, the only true religion of God; therefore they (devils) don't teach of Allah and Islam to us...Christianity was organized by the white race and they placed the name of Jesus on it as being the founder and author to deceive the Black people into accepting it." April 6, 1992, The Final Call, the official paper of the Nation of Islam, published by Louis Farrakhan.

On Wednesday, March 9th, at 6:30 pm we ask you to join concerned students and community members in a protest against the minister's presence outside the Fine Arts Center. We must noit let Farrakhan's hate go unchallenged.

Community service shines

Five college groups help at Springfield service day

By JAMES FINLAW
Collegian Correspondent

The Five College Habitat For Humanity played an integral role in the success of the UMASS Community Service Council sponsored Springfield Service Day. The campus organization is a community service program designed to provide both new and rehabilitated housing for those in need of better living conditions. Held on Saturday, Feb. 26, 1994, the event enabled college students to give something back to the community.

One hundred student volunteers affiliated with a handful of community service organizations, left early Saturday morning on two buses bound for Springfield. Upon arrival, they stripped wallpaper and painted and replaced dry-wall at the Worthington St., Greenwich St., Jefferson Ave. and Prospect Street shelters.

"Saturday impressed upon me the vital need for a widespread collegiate effort of volunteer service in the local community" said Mount Holyoke College junior Siobahn Fitzgerald. "Habitat for Humanity is a perfect medium to accomplish this goal."

Michael Spanknebel, the Pioneer Valley affiliate liason to the Five College Habitat For Humanity, was instrumental in the day's success. He did numerous site visits to the four shelters prior to Springfield Service Day, to evaluate their needs.

Spanknebel also coordinated skilled volunteers to supervise the student work-force. "It is great to see such a large turn- out of students. I really enjoy construction work and knowing that it is making someone else's habitat more comfortable makes the experience even richer," Spanknebel said.

Spanknebel said the Five College Chapter of Habitat For Humanity expects to continue working on the four shelters in the near future.

Twelve students from the Five College Chapter of Habitat For Humanity will be spending their spring break in an untraditional way. Instead of lounging in the hot sun of a tropical beach, or lounging about at home. These students are off to West Virginia, where they will be building affordable housing, working at the Almost Heaven Affiliate located in Pendleton County.

"It is a unique volunteering experience and I am hoping to broaden my horizons by helping people build their dreams in another part of the country," said Rebecca Mocallem, a first-year student at Mount Holyoke College.

This program, called the Collegiate Challenge, is a school- break work program coordinated by the campus chapters department of Habitat for Humanity international. The department says that participation allows students to gain greater awareness of the need for decent and affordable housing, and deepens student commitment to social action.

Charles Riccardi, a senior at the University, said, "The Collegiate Challenge is a great opportunity to get hands-on experience while helping people help themselves."

Begun in 1990, the Collegiate Challenge originally had 1,200 students. By 1993, 4,000 students worked with 90 Habitat for Humanity affiliates.

"The reason I decided to participate in the Collegiate Challenge was because it offered me the opportunity to not only help the less fortunate, but also to enrich my own life experiences," said Sara Shafaee-Moghadam, a Mount Holyoke College first-year student.

The Habitat for Humanity International was founded in 1976 by Linda and Millard Fuller and is an ecumenical, Christian housing ministry that seeks to eliminate poverty housing from the world and to make decent shelter a matter of conscience and action.

Neither race nor religion is a factor in choosing the families to receive Habitat houses. All those interested in further information should contact Pioneer Valley Liason, Michael Spanknebel at (413) 586-8572, or call Five College Habitat For Humanity president David Amsbary at (413) 586-7348.

Humanist perspective questioned

By BEN GEMAN
Collegian Staff

The humanist belief in mankind's uniqueness and right to exploit the earth's resources solely for his development is a root cause of environmental degradation, according to Dr. Robert Luyster, director of the Council on Peace Education and philosophy professor at the University of Connecticut. Luyster also asserted that this belief has also created societal institutions whose aims remain unchallenged by the current environmental movement.

In a lecture entitled, "Ecology and Ideology: A Post- Humanist Perspective," given last night in Converse Hall at Amherst College, Luyster called for the development of a new way of viewing man's relationship to the earth in order to achieve balance between humans and other species, and to prevent further environmental devastation.

The ferocity of the wars and genocidal movements of the 20th century should prompt people to reconsider the humanist view of the special, godlike nature of mankind which has remained intact for over 2,000 years, according to Luyster. This awareness is also sought in light of the scientific discovery of the infinite nature of the universe and lack of a "unique" place in the cosmos occupied by the earth.

"We seem, in the 20th century, to be the most despicable of animals," said Luyster.

Luyster called humanism a "recipe for ecological disaster simply waiting to happen," and noted several forms of degradation already taking place in his advocacy of a new relationship between humans and the earth.

"We're now in the midst of the greatest mass-loss of species that has ever taken place," said Luyster.

Luyster also noted other environmental problems such as the loss of 26 billion tons of topsoil each year worldwide, the destruction of 50 million acres of forest around the world per year and the increasing scarcity of water in many countries.

In order to live harmoniously with the planet, humans must move past the humanist perspective and begin to respect the sacredness of the earth, to treat ecology as a motivating ideology rather than just a science in forming and governing our institutions, according to Luyster.

"I think that the transcendance of humanism goes beyond environmentalism," said Luyster.

"At some point, democracy will have to give rise to 'bio-cracy,'...There has to be some representation of the rights of other species."

The environmental movement currently does not challenge the idea that humans have the right to dominate the environment for their own gain, but instead serves as a "janitor" which attempts to clean up the mess made by societal institutions and lifestyles rooted in humanism, according to Luyster.

"I think that the reason that this is happening is that environmentalism accepts the fundamental premisis of the agencies that are responsible for environmental destruction," said Luyster.

"Until we develop a wider sympathy for all living creatures, we will not do what needs to be done environmentally."

Vote for Lizana and Raphaely

The issue:
The Student Government Association is holding elections today and tomorrow for the positions of SGA president and student trustee.

Our opinion:
Mirran Raphaely and Al Lizana are the two candidates who will best serve the interests of University of Massachusetts students.

All of the candidates for Student Government Association president and student trustee have addressed the issues which University students are concerned with. Those issues include improving services such as on-campus housing, the dining commons and Health Services. First and foremost, however, the issue that affects all students is the rising cost of attending this school.

As funding from the state has gone down, tuition and fees have gone up, leaving many students wondering whether they will be able to return to campus next semester. The emphasis is now on accessibility, and the SGA has made a commitment to push for increased financial aid, a higher budget from the legislature and a zero percent increase in tuition and fees for the next academic year.

In order to achieve those goals, UMass must elect the candidates who understand the issues, are committed to working in the students' best interests and have the experience necessary to get results.

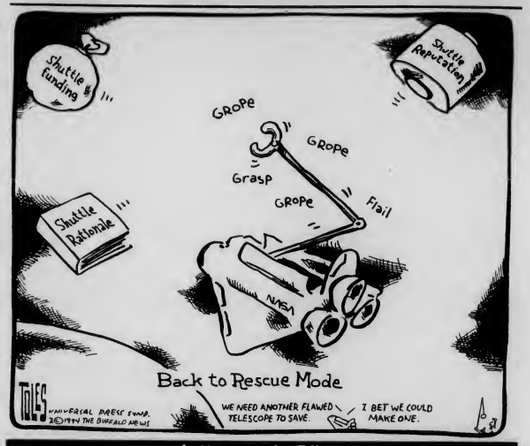
Al Lizana and Mirran Raphaely are those candidates.

As the student trustee from the Amherst campus for the past year, Lizana has worked on increasing funding to the Amherst campus, improving the quality of educational services and increasing the number of minority students on campus. He is well-respected by administrators, and has received praise from campus and state leaders for his tireless efforts on behalf of University students.

Raphaely has been an SGA senator for two years and, more recently, has used her position as the issues Coordinator at the Student Center for Education Research and Advocacy (SCERA) to bring the issue of the budget crisis to the forefront on this campus. In addition, she is involved in women's health issues, stressing the importance of the selection of the next Director of Health Services.

From coordinating educational efforts to conducting surveys to going door-to-door, both Lizana and Raphaely have made sure that they are not only in touch with student concerns, but that the campus is informed about important issues as well.

Both Lizana and Raphaely were influential in the successful restoration of partial litigation rights to the Legal Service Office last semester. Both serve on the Task Force on Faculty Roles and Rewards which works to make professors more accessible to students. And both have stressed student empowerment as the key to making the campus bureaucracy more accountable to students.



Together, Lizana and Raphaely have helped form the Task Force on Economic Accessibility, and have pledged to continue their efforts to fight against further increases in tuition and fees while working to increase the financial aid pool. Their continuing efforts, coupled with their experience and dedication, will go a long way in keeping this, the flagship school of the Massachusetts public higher education system, open and accessible to all.

Student participation in this election is perhaps more crucial than ever to send a clear message to the University administration, the Board of Trustees and the State House — not to mention our leaders in student government — that University of Massachusetts students will no longer tolerate increased cost and decreased quality.

Hardy withdraws name from ballot

To the editor:

After careful consideration and meetings with my campaign staff, I will be withdrawing my name from the ballot for SGA president.

Further, I will be endorsing Joe Vozza and Diego Figueroa. I encourage my supporters to vote for them because we believe in the same professional issues and ideals. Please support them! They represent a change in the SGA and the system as a whole. I give them my 100 percent support as you should as well.

George W. Hardy
SGA senator

LBGA endorses Raphaely, Lizana

To the editor:

The Lesbian Bisexual Gay Alliance feels that experience is the most important quality in a candidate at this time in campus life. After discussing the candidates, the LBGA voted to endorse Mirran Raphaely for SGA President and Al Lizana for his second term as Trustee. We encourage all students to vote this Tuesday and Wednesday, March 8th and 9th.

Lesbian Bisexual Gay Alliance

Lenchner is radical enough for RSU

To the editor:

The Radical Student Union would like to endorse Charles Lenchner for SGA President. His commitment to a class perspective is unique on our campus and should be supported.

Mr. Lenchner does not have a slogan; he has an analysis of society that is timely and relevant. It cannot be reduced to a button, and it is unlikely to get him elected, but that's fine. Even though Mr. Lenchner will receive no other endorsement, and even though many consider him a non- candidate, we are satisfied that he is doing a great job.

Mr. Lenchner's campaign provides an opportunity to expose mainstream lies and advocate working class, radical politics. The Radical Student Union is dedicated to just that.

Radical Student Union

GSS supports Trustee Lizana

To the editor:

On behalf of the Graduate Student Senate Executive Committee, I am writing to support the candidacy of Mr. Al Lizana for UMass Student Trustee. The GSS Executive Committee has worked with Trustee Lizana on a variety of issues. We believe that he is committed to bringing the perspective of students to the Board of Trustees.

Mr. Lizana has been involved in the efforts to restore partial litigation for Legal Services, to increase the state appropriation to the University, to reduce tuition and fees and to improve student services such as housing and financial aid. We feel he has demonstrated a willingness to work with student groups and the different unions on campus. In the past year, he has fought for and contributed positively to the quality of life both at the undergraduate and graduate levels.

Shyamala Ivatury
GSS Executive Committee

UMass Hillel backs Figueroa, Vozza

To the editor:

After careful consideration and much debate, UMass Hillel, the official representative of the Jewish community on campus, officially backs the candidacies of Joe Vozza and Diego Figueroa for SGA President and Student Trustee respectively.

Both Mr. Vozza and Mr. Figueroa are professionals and have shown their leadership skills in the Greek Area Government and the Finance Committee. We urge all students, Jewish and otherwise, to vote in droves for these two candidates so we can once again have a student government which truly represents all students.

UMass Hillel Council

Raphaely, Lizana offer experience

To the editor:

On March 8th and 9th, students have the opportunity to elect their new student leaders. Al Lizana, our current student trustee, is running for re-election. Mirran Raphaely is running with him for SGA president. All the candidates say we need to work on tuition and fees, housing and health services. Mirran and Al are the only candidates that are already leading the battle on all these issues.

These issues, among many others, are basic to students and need to be worked on. Mirran and Al have been working for the past year on them. Let their records stand for them. Vote for the candidates that are doing the work, not simply those that say work needs to be done.

Amy M. Lloyd
Political science senior

[editor's note: similar letters supporting Al Lizana and Mirran Raphaely were also submitted by Angelique DeCoste, Yudelca Diaz, Elisa Haberi, Nicole Jannis, Allison Park and LaToya Sims , but could not be printed due to space constraints.]

Cannabis Reform explains referendum

To the editor:

A year ago today, I wrote a letter to you to urge you to vote "yes" on the UMass Hemp Initiative, and to join together in declaring marijuana prohibition laws null and void. I wrote about the various benefits of hemp, and said that a "yes" vote was a call for information and education.

The public eye was just beginning to turn to look at the rising trend toward cannabis use and publicity. At that time, the UMass Cannabis Reform Coalition had about 120 members. The Hemp Initiative passed by a 2-to-1 margin.

One year later, in the wake of the Surgeon General's astonishing statement that legalizing drugs is an option to be considered, and a major news network poll that showed 44 percent of Americans as favoring the legalization of drugs (with 42 percent opposed), the stakes are much higher. Talk of the benefits of cannabis is widespread, and even the most disinterested person is likely to know that cannabis can be used to make food, fuel, paper, cloth and plastic, and is a tremendously useful medicine.

Former Secretary of State George Schultz, columnist William F. Buckley, Baltimore Mayor Kurt Schmoke, economist Milton Friedman and hundreds of major political, economic, medical and educational leaders have joined together to request a critical review of the War on Drugs. This awakening of awareness is apparent locally also, and is evidenced by the fact that the UMACRC now has almost 500 members.

I would like to suggest that it is time to move on. The UMACRC has an initiative on the SGA ballot this year that would give us an optional five dollar fee on the semester bill. We are pursuing this fee because our present resources limit us to serving mainly our membership. Our membership is but a small, brave portion of the people we represent. Estimates of the number of regular marijuana smokers at UMass range from 6,000 to 10,000. And although that contitutes our main body of support, we represent every student, faculty member and administrator at UMass.

We seek to reduce taxes, divert billions of dollars to health care and education, reduce drug abuse and crime, preserve human rights and help stabilize the economy. There is no other hidden motive. We do not simply want to get stoned legally. Due to the inefficiency of the Drug War, it is plenty easy to get stoned illegally. The need for an end to hemp prohibition goes much deeper than getting high.

The primary use of the money received from this fee will be to set up an independent, objective drug education program that would present the unprejudiced facts about all drugs, allowing students to make informed, responsible choices about substance use. Additional funds would be used to further education, to pursue legislation and to improve entertainment events.

Hopefully you recognize your stake in this matter, and you will vote "yes" on question one. Please vote. You can't be heard if you don't speak.

Lance M. Brown
President,
Cannabis Reform Coalition

Election Information

University undergraduate students may cast ballots today and tomorrow for SGA president and student trustee. Graduate students may also vote for the position of student trustee.

In addition, there will be a referendum on the ballot sponsored by the UMass Cannabis Reform Coalition.

Voting will be held from 11 a.m. — 7 p.m. today and tomorrow. On-campus students should vote in the dining commons. Commuter students may cast ballots outside the Hatch.

Two allies have grown apart

Jews vs. Blacks. Hillel vs. the Black Student Union. Why have two groups that have been historical allies in the fight for economic justice and civil rights in America now become so antagonistic?

In fact, Blacks, Jews, gays and people with the last name Kennedy are the only folks left in America who fight to redistribute the economic and cultural pie, even if it means giving up a slice off their own. Most of the time, when the price of liberalism involves sacrifice, most everybody else runs for cover.

Neil Carpenter

Some in-fighting has begun to occur within the coalition at the national level and most of the reasons for this in-fighting is mirrored at the local level, here at UMass. Jewish economic interests and the African-American community's interests are pretty divergent.

As the memory of Jews being on the bottom of society moves further into the background with newer generations, there starts to be a lesser interest on the part of some members of the Jewish community in helping those on the bottom today.

While what's going on in the modern-day inner city is not a holocaust, it is certainly a human tragedy of immense proportions. However, it's worth noting that many members of the Jewish community are reminding us of current injustices, be it in Bosnia or Baltimore.

At the same time, a few members of the African-American community are looking for scapegoats concerning their plight, and be it in St. Petersburg or St. Louis, Jews make an easy target. The stereotype of Jewish power comes out, as if Jews are the ones shipping drugs into the inner-cities or causing the deterioration of the family.

Instead, this energy could be better spent aiding the more mainstream African- American leaders who build the coalitions of different races that fight for and win greater economic justice for all races.

At the local level, these differences are being exacerbated. The class difference is fueling differences based on race. The Jewish leadership at Hillel is far more conservative politically than the Jewish community as a whole and the Al.ANA leadership is far more liberal than their membership.

These are the players in a system which throws out money to the most oppressed groups, thus making the groups kill each other over a finite sum of money. For example, UMass President Michael Hooker set up a special fund called the Mission Enhancement fund from which multicultural groups can get money for group activities.

What it started wasn't greater multicultural understanding, but more cultural warfare as Jews, Blacks and gays all tried to get more control over the money. As a result, a bunch of liberals were calling each other anti-Semitic, homophobic and racist, instead of working for the important things they all believe in.

Romeo Is Bleeding, but does anybody care?

THE REEL WORLD by Jon Lupo

Romeo Is Bleeding — This incoherent mess of a movie is trying desperately to be a slash n' burn cult film, but ends up being a morality play for the Prozac crowd. Director Peter Medak (The Krays) is going for a Bad Lieutenant/True Romance brand of nihilistic excess, but comes up empty handed. Romeo isn't nearly as shocking, funny, tragic or clever as it thinks it is.

As a bad cop whose life on the edge gets worse, Gary Oldman spews out the silliest Brooklyn accent this side of a "Who's the Boss?" episode. Divulging the whereabouts of state witnesses to his mob contacts for a cool 65 grand each, Oldman gets in over his head when one of his tips doesn't deliver. Now, he has to kill a sexy but resourceful hit woman (Lena Olin) before the mob kingpin (Roy Scheider) kills his wife (Annabella Sciorra) and airhead mistress (Juliette Lewis).

The problems mount as soon as the film begins. Saddled with a dopey narration, Oldman's cop is a charmless cipher, a main character you don't care about, much less want to see a whole movie built around. The film's witless script cleatly has operatic intentions, but it doesn't have the characters to back it up.

As the slinky but deranged hit-woman, Swedish actress Lena Olin (Mr. Jones) vamps it up to the point of cartoon. As for the rest of the cast, only Juliette Lewis (Cape Fear) manages to carve out at least the semblance of a persona.

Romeo Is Bleeding is a film that knows what it wants to be, but doesn't know how to get there. In between the severed limbs and bodies set ablaze (not to mention some cheap cribs from Taxi Driver and Goodfellas), Romeo may be bleeding, but does anyone really care? C- (Academy of Music).

Angie — With pop Freudian psychology in one hand and sitcom one-liners in the other, Angie is the type of slight TV-movie you'd find buried on a Sunday afternoon on Lifetime Network. Mildly amusing until it inflates itself into weak melodrama, the biggest surprise about Angie isn't the tired story but the caliber of the people

Reality Bites rocks; dubliners fall short

The self-titled debut of October Project.

Reality Bites
Soundtrack
RCA Records

Most soundtracks are hard to review. They are random collections of music that lack any unification without the background that the movie provides. Reality Bites is an exception to that rule. The soundtrack's songs have a distinctive flow and theme, and while there are a few misses, they are ealsily outweighed by the hits.

Of course the theme that flows through all of the songs are of your standard John Hughes variety, full of the angst and anguish of reiationships, both bad and good. This in itself would not set the album apart, were it not for the quality of the songs themselves.

The album opens with the Knack's classic piece of skinny-tie, new wave rock "My Sharona." Of course, it would seem that the inclusion of the song is a blatant corporate move to cash in on twentysomething '80s nostalgia, but heii, it's a fun song, and I'm sure that it will be an omnipresent party anthem across college campuses this spring. So much the better.

There, are, of course, other worthy inclusions that follow this enticing opening. World Party, who are masters at stealing classic rock bits and smuggling them into their own tunes, send an overt nod to Bowie's "Young Americans" with their contribution "When You Come Back to Me." The song is gliding blue-eyed soul that works. The unsigned Lisa Loeb lends a folky tune with insightful, melachoiy lyrics. The soundtrack borrows U2's "All I Want is You," and the song provides a climactic point on the album, laying out six minutes of elegaic beauty that culminates in layers of violins and celio. Also worthy are Ethan Hawke's "I'm Nuthin'," which sums up a slacker point of view very succinctiy, and Me Phi Me's jazzy "Revival" groove.

As I have previously mentioned, there are a few dead spots here and there. Juliana Hatfield's "Spin the Bottle" is boring pop-rock made with less flair than a Go-Go's album. Lenny Kravitz, usually a keen appropriator of sixties and seventies sound, borrows the riff from Led Zep's "Kashmir" for his contribution to no great effect. And the album ends with incredible whimper, as Peter Frampton's odious "Baby I Love Your Way" is given a reggae treatment by Big Mountain. Yech.

As a whole, the Reality Bites soundtrack is a fun listen, a coherent lot of songs, and well worth inclusion into any collection, if only for "...my, my, my Sharona." B+ (B. Babineau).

Geena Davis plays Angie, a twentysomething Bensonhurst woman who finds herself pregnant by her well-meaning but unremarkable boyfriend. Refusing his offer of marriage, Angie wants to raise the baby by herself. Meanwhile, she's being romanced by a charming attorney (The Crying Game's hero Stephen Rea) and working out the reasons why her own mother deserted the family when she was a little girl.

Director Martha Coolidge (leaving the beautiful subtleties of Rambling Rose behind) is slumming with this depthless story, whose crass last half reminds one of the thundering callousness of the ending of Steel Magnolias.

Geena Davis certainly tawks the role, but you never forget that you're watching Geena Davis in a halter top looking and acting like a member of the road company of Moonstruck.

While there are a few laughs, Angie feels like it needs to be a bigger movie than it is. With a lesser-known cast and a sharper script, Angie could've been a witty snapshot of a woman's life in the Bensonhurst landscape. But when you've got Geena Davis as your Angie, the filmmakers feel the film needs to justify itself on a grander scale. it didn't. C (Hampshire Six) band from the Emerald isle presents a couple of lingering problems. The dubliners are a good band and appear to be worth the time, but a spilt personality emerges in their music.

Their Dublin-style jam excited me in the opening track "Rocky Road To Dublin," with dubliner Paul O'Toole offering up a frenetic tempo with the mandolin and harmonica riffs.

After that, the dubliners lose their edge and turn into a more folksy–Crowded House band that really upset me and made me think "sell out," which makes me wonder whether they're trying to display their obvious talent or even they don't know who they are.

Lead vocalist Keith Roberts unexplicably lost his rough Irish tongue and sounded more like someone from Kansas in selections like "Last House on the Street," which has received some airplay by local stations, and also in "Black &White."

Which leads me to the next problem: weak lyrics. The music is pretty decent in the.e middle four tracks; it's just that the lyrics are so thin, like "the war is over/ and it feels just like I've won/ 'cause I've found this freedom in my soul/ and I know it's just because I've found somewhere to go/ yours was the last house on the street."

Come on guys, my grandmother could write that one. However, with their style (the last track, "Ashley Fails," an instrumental did inspire me to jig) and some improved lyrics, this band could make some noise: B– (S. Hayden).

October Project
October Project
Epic

As far as mellow music goes, the first, self-titled album released by October Project rates high. This five–member band emits an ethereal sound throughout the 12–song collection, maintaining full, strong vocals supported by engaging melodies that feature the likes of cello and viola.

The rich vocals of Mary Fahl are reminiscent of those of Annie Lennox, sometimes creating an eerie effect that clenches something deep in your stomach and puts you on the verge of terribly hopeful tears.

The album's melancholy tone is almost apologetic, as most songs address sorrow and entertain the notions of loss and regret. The first song, "bury my lovely" well reflects this solemn mood; Fahl's voice echoing with pleading inspiration as each note sounds out.

The second track, "ariel," incorporates the same haunting sensation, and stands out on the album as one of its most beautiful offerings.

Criticism of October Project is that eventually the songs seem to run together and form one, long stream of somberness, allowing only a couple of the more upbeat selections to distinguish themselves as unique.

Overall, a wonderfully wistful album to which you can mellow out, cry and get over some lost love, or easily drift to sleep and be almost guaranteed intense dreams. A– (E. Marino).

Your Horoscope
By Jeane Dixon

ARIES (March 21–April 19). It pays to keep you nose to the grindstone today. A lucky break could develop in a flash. Experience counts big in business. Get in much as you can. Be realistic about romance.

TAURUS (April 20–May 20): The emphasis now is on being frugal. If you dine out, choose someplace inexpensive. Practice some small economies if you want family members to develop thrifty habits. Avoid pointless squabbling.

GEMINI (May 21–June 20): A family or relationship problem may have you frustrated. Employing logic over emotion will keep your thinking on track. Throw out negative thoughts.

CANCER (June 21–July 22): A dream could prove prophetic. Get your spiritual life in gear. Your ability to work calmly when under pressure will impress someone influential. A raise or promotion could be in the works.

LEO (July 23–Aug. 22): You may have some free time to yourself. Why not explore activities that can improve your well-being? A visit to a health spa or gym could prove both refreshing and beneficial.

VIRGO (Aug. 23–Sept. 22): Your success is centered on artistic output and steady perseverance. Steer clear of risky financial transactions this month. Speaking your mind keeps you from blending in with the crowd.

LIBRA (Sept. 23–Oct. 22): Your enthusiasm runs high for a new financial venture or romantic relationship. Step up to the plate and bat a home run! Comparison shopping will yield fine bargains. Stick to the essentials.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23–Nov. 21): The morning hours look great for business and personal gains. Your ideas and projects receive new support. Be willing to pay top dollar for expert advice! Half-measures will no longer suffice.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22–Dec. 21): You could give or get the wrong impression at work this morning. Diplomacy is advised if you want to reach an understanding with an influential associate.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22–Jan. 19): Take nothing for granted. Confirm all plans, timetables and financial figures. Success hinges on your acting with a large degree of certainty. Too much analysis could lead to costly hesitation.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20–Feb. 18): On–again, off–again negotiations are on again. A new alliance will help you attain your goals. Follow the wise advice of old friends. Fun social activities will usher a winning group.

PISCES (Feb. 19–March 20): Patience and a willingness to compromise let you mend some emotional fences. Steer clear of crowds. One–on–one encounters are favored. Apply psychology to a tricky situation.

Temple 54, GW 34

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Aaron McKie outscored George Washington 17-10 by himself in the second half Monday night and No. 12 Temple overcame a horrible first half to beat the Colonials 54-34 in the semifinals of the Atlantic 10 tournament.

The Owls (22-6) will play at Massachusetts on Thursday night in a rematch of last year's conference championship. The ninth-ranked Minutemen, the league's two-time defending champions, earned the right to host the game with a 69-52 victory over Duquesne. The victory was the 500th for Temple coach John Chaney. The 62-year-old Chaney was 225-59 in 10 years at Cheyney, where he won a Division II national championship, and is 275-103 in 12 seasons at Tempie.

The 34 points were the lowest in Atlantic 10 tournament history. The old record was held by St. Bonaventure, which lost 57-40 to West Virginia in 1988. George Washington's record for fewest points in a game is 30 in a loss to William & Mary in 1966-67.

Old foes Massachusetts and Temple to collide in final

By ARTHUR STAPLETON JR.
Collegian Staff

PHILADELPHIA — The Palestra crowd was a firecracker it two days ago at the start of the Atlantic 10 Tournament. No. 1 seed and two–time defending conference champion Massachusetts, like a rag doused with gasoline, was on a mission to beat fifth seed Duquesne and escape the building before the fuse of the firecracker ran out.

Junior Mike Williams sparked a second–half Minutemen explosion last night in the A–10 semi–finals in which Massachusetts outscored the Dukes 27–2 over an 11–minute span on its way to a 69–52 victory and a date Thursday night back home in the William D. Mullins Center against Temple for the championship.

The Owls defeated George Washington, 54–34, last night in the other semi–final at the Palestra allowing their coach John Chaney, to pick up his 500th career coaching win.

We played a terrific second half. The special play to me was the throw ahead to Mike Williams, who threw it to Donta [Bright], who threw it to Marcus [Camby], who got fouled," said Massachusetts coach John Calipari. "It shows that it doesn't matter who scores, as long as we score."

A Williams lay–up off a pass from Edgar Padilla at 16:02 gave the Minutemen their first lead of the second half, 36– 35. After the Dukes' Derrick Alston committed a backcourt violation, giving Massachusetts the ball back, Bright buried an 11–foot jumper, again on a pass from Padilla, who finished with four assists, pushing the UMass lead to three.

Four points by Massachusetts forward Lou Roe gave the Minutemen a 42–35 lead before Duquesne would score a bucket; Duke point guard Kenya Hunter drove the lane and scored when Roe was called for goaltending.

Hunter's hoop started something for the Dukes — another drought. Duquesne would not get another basket until the 6:55 mark when Massachusetts was already up by 22 points, 59–37.

Williams scored 19 points for the Minutemen, who will advance to the championship on their campus for the third consecutive year. His unselfishness during the run yielded four assists and only one turnover on the night, which included a great alley–oop pass to Roe (14 points, seven rebounds).

"We knew at halftime that they played the best half they could play and we knew it took a lot out of them," said Williams. "We went inside first, then outside — it worked out fine.

"I was really happy for us. They came out tough in the first half, they needed it more than we did; but we stepped it up and proved that we belong in the A–10 championship again."

Bright played the contest with his hand wrapped because of a detached tendon in his right thumb, according to Calipari. Bright tallied 10 points and snared seven rebounds in 23 minutes of action.

"He hurt it rebounding a ball in the first half of the game against St. Joe's and played the rest of the game, then played tonight. Talk about a kid with a pain threshold — if it was anybody else, one of us here, we're laying in bed asking Mom to help," said Calipari.

Massachusetts (26–0) used a swarming defense in the second half that forced the Dukes into committing three turnovers during the spurt which broke the game open.

"When they saw blood, they went for it. We made a couple of turnovers and the guys got down because of it. UMass' defense got our guys frustrated," said Duquesne Coach John Carroll, whose Dukes should make it into the postseason, most likely the NIT tournament.

As for the Minutemen, they made it out of the Palestra before the explosion. Mission accomplished?

"Our mission will not be accomplished until we win Thursday in Amherst," said Roe.

MATT KAHN / COLLEGIAN

Junior guard Mike Williams and the Minutemen survived a rocky first half last night en route to a 69–52 win over Duquesne in the semifinals of the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

Jinx continues as women lose to Lady Knights again

By ANDREW BRYCE
Collegian Staff

The two teams that battled it out at the William D. Mullins Center last night do not exactly have a rivalry. In 23 games played between the two teams, only one has been victorious in all of them. Last night was no different, as the Rutgers University women's hoop team defeated the University of Massachusetts 77–59 in the regular season finale.

That is not to say that the Minutewomen (14–12, 7–9 A– 10) lacked the desire and intensity. Despite playing before a disappointing crowd of 651, UMass was pumped for the big Atlantic 10 tilt.

It's too bad that Rutgers was as well.

The Lady Knights (19–7, 13–3 A–10) jumped out to a 15–4 lead on a Janell Williams (12 points) lay–up with 14:03 left in the first half. The Rutgers lead reached as high as 11, when a Regina Kalucki (14 points) jumper made it 22–9.

A strong lay–in by Octavia Thomas cut the Rutgers lead to seven, 23–15, at 7:15, and then to five on a Melissa Gurile jumper at 4:37 (25–20). Massachusetts then kept it to within five on two other occasions, including the halftime score as Thomas hit a jumper with :04 left to make it 30–25.

The Lady Knights came out strong in the second half, jumping out to a 10–point lead on a lay–up by Amy Reynders at 17:30. The Minutewomen then went on a 6–0 run to knock down the lead to four (37–33) on a Thomas jumper at 15:39.

Rutgers star Caroline De Roose (14 points, 12 in the second half) banged a three–pointer, before Carroll's three– foot jumper cut the Rutgers lead to five with 14:14 left to play, making it 40–35. That was the closest the Minutewomen came in the second half.

The Lady Knights went on a 17–4 run (eight points by DeRoose), culminated by a lay–up by Liz Hanson (game– high 16 points) with 8:20 remaining that made it 59–39.

Massachusetts ate away at the Rutgers lead, going on an 11–3 run in a three minute span, before the Lady Knights called a timeout at 3:36 with the score, 60–52. Rutgers proved to be too much, as they scored 15 of the last 24 points, including 11 from the charity stripe.

The Minutewomen had a poor shooting night, and shot 35 percent (22–63) from the field. The shots were there, they just didn't fall, especially from three point land (0–12).

"Our kids could not have gotten any better shots than they got tonight," said Massachusetts Coach Joanie O'Brien. "I've been saying for the last six games that if we don't hit our shots, we get so down on ourselves, we don't play defense. They are just too good a shooting team to give open shots."

In the loss, the Minutewomen were led by Thomas and Gurile, who had 14 and 13 points respectively. Carroll also pulled down a game–high 10 boards.

For Rutgers, the win meant they clinched the regular season A–10 title, and accepted a first round bye in the A–10 tournament. For the Minutewomen, the loss meant they finished sixth in the A–10, and accepted the challenge to take on St. Joseph's in a first round game on Thursday, March 10. Tip off will be at 6 p.m.

St. Joseph's will be yet another challenge for the Minutewomen, 0–2 against the Hawks this season.

"We are going to get 'em this time," said senior Maleeka Valentine. "Three's a charm. We are looking forward to it."

Experts discuss tourney seeds

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

PHILADELPHIA — Coaches are always stressing not to look ahead. Journalists, on the other hand, are paid to do so.

Only six days from Selection Sunday, many of the sportswriters at the Palestra before the Atlantic 10 Tournament semifinals were busy discussing everything from the NCAA's to the future of the A–10 and the Big East next year.

With plenty of college basketball in the City of Brotherly Love to choose from, the writers had a number of teams already in or on the bubble to write and argue about. Besides the four teams left in the A–10 as of Monday night, Pennsylvania was already insured of a bid and Villanova and Drexel were fighting for a place in the Big Dance.

Mike Sheridan, editor of Eastern Basketball, said the league will not equal its record–number four NCAA bids this season, despite its continued strength.

"I think the competition in the league is as strong as last year, but that doesn't mean you'll have as many teams in the tourney.

"If Duquesne upsets UMass, because of UMass' RPI (computer) rating, then you might see them there as well, but West Virginia really hurt the league by sliding because they were a legitimate fourth NCAA team because of their reputation."

Sheridan said he felt George Washington was a lock because of reputation and the Colonials' Sweet Sixteen finish in last year's tournament. Temple and UMass will be No. 2 or No. 3 seeds, according to Sheridan.

Mike Kern of the Philadelphia Daily News also said he felt the A–10 would land three teams, and said he doesn't expect hometown St. Joseph's to receive an NIT bid despite a strong finish and upset of UMass.

"I would be surprised if they got into the NIT, but their RPI rating before they beat West Virginia was 91. Assuming they moved up, you're looking at 64 teams in the NCAA and 32 in the NIT. Those aren't the best rated teams sometimes, so I think they're in the hunt.

"Unless Duquesne beats UMass — and I don't think even that will be enough, I think they'd have to win the championship — they'll be three teams going to the NCAA's. GW is in, and whoever between Temple and UMass wins the A–10 will be a two or three seed. If Temple were to lose to GW, they'd probably drop to a four."

Jim O'Connell, college basketball beat writer for the Associated Press, said St. Joseph's should get into the NIT and West Virginia is looking at the same fate.

"The NCAA selection committee is made up of a representative of the top eight conferences, and they pick many of the at–large teams from those conferences.

"The NIT wants teams from the big conferences, so they'll choose a .500 team (the Hawks are 14–14) from the Big 10 say, because they know people know who they are.

"I think the Philly teams, if they get in, could do well. Drexel has to win its tournament, and I think Villanova needs another win to solidify its place, but I think Penn will be the highest seeded Ivy League team in a long, long time."

Nick Katz, who covers UMass for the Springfield Union News, said he believes the Minutemen will stay in the East for the third consecutive year and would face UConn in the Sweet Sixteen.

"UConn is four (before the latest poll) in the AP poll but their RPI rating is a little lower. The ACC winner will get the No. 1 in the East, UConn will be No. 2 and UMass three, which is basically the same thing."

Men's swim finishes fifth, ECAC's 'disappointing'

By BILL BALFOUR
Collegian Staff

Disappointments are a way of life in athletics. The University of Massachusetts men's swimming team learned that lesson this past weekend at the ECAC Championships.

In the field of 43 teams, the Minutemen finished in fifth place with 260.5 points. James Madison took home the title tallying 515 points. The meet brought the 1993–94 season to a close for the Minutemen.

The ECAC Championships was the focal point of the season for UMass, who had hoped to finish higher in the final team standings. The Minutemen were flat all weekend, and Coach Russ Yarworth is shouldering the blame.

"We've always performed well at the end of the year," Yarworth said. "This the first year that my team hasn't been ready to swim. I feel like I let the kids down by not preparing them properly."

Yarworth said the team was more then ready for the meet mentally but lacked the physical preparation.

"Physically I didn't have them ready," Yarworth said. "I didn't rest them enough. That's a coach's responsibility."

The UMass swimmers worked hard all season long and Yarworth said that is the most frustrating aspect of this weekend's result.

"I asked them to do more than I ever have asked them to do this year and they didn't get the benefit of it," Yarworth said.

Despite the disappointment, there were some bright spots for the Minutemen.

Freshman Greg Menton won two events for UMass, the 50–yard freestyle and the 100–yard freestyle. Menton posted winning times of :21.00 and :45.61 respectively.

Two UMass swimmers posted personal bests this weekend. Rob Coletti swam to personal bests in three events. Coletti posted times of :21.63 in the 50–yard freestyle, :51.98 in the 100–yard butterfly, and 1:56.26 in the 200–yard butterfly.

Jeff Shearstone cut four seconds off his personal best in the 200–yard breaststroke. Shearstone swam a 2:07.48 in the event to place ninth.

"He really deserved to do it," Yarworth said. "He's a real hard worker."

Even though the Minutemen were not at their best, they continued to give 100 percent throughout the championships. Something not lost on Coach Yarworth.

"A highlight was to just to see the team, even though they realized they weren't at their peak, try 100 percent," Yarworth said. "If you have a team like that, you can get through the tough part."

The 1993–94 season is over, and Russ Yarworth isn't going to take it easy.

"I've never been one to stand pat," Yarworth said. "I've already started writing out next season's plan."

Why Massachusetts won

After playing neck–and–neck with UMass in the first half, Duquesne's offense never got on track in the final 20 minutes, due in large part to UMass' suffocating defense. The Minutemen's man–to–man defense shut down the Dukes for 11 minutes, a stretch in which UMass outscored Duquesne 27–2. The spurt turned a one–point deficit into a 20–point lead for UMass, as it cruised to victory. The Minutemen will host Temple Thursday night in the William D. Mullins Center in the Atlantic 10 Championship game.

Player of the Game

Mike Williams

While he is known for his offensive scoring punch, it was Mike Williams' defense and passing that turned the tide of this one around. During the decisive 27–2 second half run, Williams dished out four assists and was swarming all over the floor, forcing Duquesne into costly turnovers. Overall, the junior shooting guard tossed in 19 points on 8–for–18 shooting.

Next up for UMass

A rematch with Temple awaits Massachusetts Thursday night at 9:30 in the William D. Mullins Center as the Owls were able to take care of business last night against George Washington, 54–34.

The Owls' suffocating defense held the Colonials to only 10 points in the second half and held GW big man Yinka Dare to no points on 0–4 shooting for John Chaney's 500th career win.

Women's gym bows to UNH

By JUSTIN DOYLE
Collegian Staff

On Senior Night at Boyden Gymnastics Center on Saturday, a capacity crowd saw the University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics team come up a little short against their arch rivals, the University of New Hampshire Wildcats.

The Minutemen broke their all–time total point record with a score of 189.835, losing to UNH's score of 190.625. Massachusetts Coach David Kuzara was pleased with the team's performance.

"New Hampshire's the No. 1 team in the region right now, and they beat us by eight–tenths of a point," Kuzara said. "We're not that far away, so we are pretty excited about that."

"We broke the school's record, and in a year when the scores aren't supposed to be very high," Kuzara said. "That's pretty impressive."

UNH defeated UMass earlier in the season at the New England Cup by three points. UMass entered the meet ranked No. 29 in the nation after coming off a win over Springfield College. UNH is currently ranked No. 22.

"This will help us in the national rankings, even though we have the loss," said Kuzara.

Before their last home meet, the two seniors on the team, Margaret Furtado and Angela Jent, were honored in a brief ceremony. Furtado wound up third in the all–around, and Jent performed well on the vault and the floor exercise.

"The seniors really came through in their last home meet," Kuzara said. "Margaret had a great meet."

Tara Swartz received a career–high score in the all–around, winning with a combined score of 38.625.

"I broke my individual record tonight, I hit all my events," Swartz said. "It helped the team a lot."

The Minutewomen found themselves trailing UNH after two events, but battled back and won on the balance beam and the floors.

"We were down two points after the first two events, and our kids never gave up," Kuzara said. "I think that's a mark of a good team."

"It's tough when you're down to a good team, and they are trying to bury you," Kuzara said. "We didn't let that happen."

Furtado earned top score on the beam with a 9.675 and Swartz nearly matched her with a 9.65. The Minutewomen repeated the performance on the floor as Shaheda Keels led all gymnasts, earning a 9.825, followed closely by Lianne Laing's 9.775.

"We did a great job on floor exercises, with our second routine scoring 9.4 and 9.5, real high scores," Kuzara said.

The Minutewomen are looking ahead to the tougher part of their schedule, as they go on the road to take on Rutgers on March 12. Kuzara said the Minutewomen hope to use the final road stretch to prepare for the Atlantic 10 Championships.

Violence continues in Lebanon

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israeli warplanes bombed guerrilla targets in southern Lebanon Tuesday, and troops killed two Palestinians in the occupied lands in more violence launched by the mosque massacre at Hebron.

The bombing in Israel's buffer zone in southern Lebanon was in retaliation for guerrilla attacks Monday that killed nine Lebanese affiliated with the Israeli–backed South Lebanese Army.

A statement by the Israeli army spokesman's office said the attack targeted the Iranian–backed fundamentalist Islamic Hezbollah, or Party of God. There were no immediate reports of casualties in Israel's eighth air strike in Lebanon this year.

Stamp price may rise

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Postal Service is taking its first official step to raise stamp prices again, which means it could cost three or four cents more to mail an ordinary letter by early next year.

The agency's governing board, which was meeting today to look at a rate hike, reportedly was considering two possibilities. One would raise all postal rates by 10.3 percent, resulting in a 32 cent first–class stamp. The second calls for differing increases for various classes of mail, averaging 13.8 percent, which would mean a 33 cent stamp.

The Washington Post said today that the board voted Monday to seek the 10.3 percent hike. Each penny increase means about $920 million in added income for the agency, which lost $1.7 billion last year and expects to wind up at least $1.3 billion in the red this year.

Heat turned up on Clinton

WASHINGTON (AP) — Unbowed by President Clinton's pledge against any Watergate–like shenanigans, Republicans pressed harder today for congressional hearings into the Whitewater affair.

A day after Clinton pledged, "There will not be a coverup," Republicans on the House Banking Committee released a list today of 40 Whitewater witnesses they want to call before a panel hearing scheduled for March 24. They don't have power to force them to testify.

"Congress has an independent obligation to investigate and to inform both itself and the country," House Republican Whip Newt Gingrich, R–Ga., said this morning on NBC.

One Republican went to the extreme today of calling for the president's resignation. "He should resign," said Rep. James Quillen, R–Tenn. But Quillen stood alone; no other Republicans have characterized the affair so severely.

Flynn's chances at governor may be hindered

BOSTON (AP) — A gubernatorial candidate is making political hay out of revelations that more than $200,000 may have been embezzled from the campaign committee of former Mayor Raymond Flynn.

"A hands–on manager watches the bottom line - and knows when things don't look right," said state Sen. Michael Barrett.

Flynn, currently U.S. ambassador to the Vatican, is considering whether to run for governor. He indicated Monday that disclosures about the apparent theft from his campaign could make his decision more difficult.

Barrett, D–Cambridge, is seeking the Democratic nomination for governor.

He said Tuesday the "bizarre story can only fuel concerns about (Flynn's) management ability."

D. Lloyd Macdonald, an attorney for Flynn, said several forged checks were made out to Douglas deRusha, a longtime campaign volunteer who has dropped out of sight.

Farrakhan attracts media cluster

First it was the Minuteman, then it was Calipari vs. Chaney making national headlines. Now, the credentials for press passes have come in again.

Louis Farrakhan will speak in the Fine Arts Center tonight at 7:30 p.m., bringing with him not only his bodyguards and controversy, but a throng of media from around the world to cover one of the biggest "media events" in the history of the University of Massachusetts.

There will not be a separate press entrance tonight in front of the FAC where camera crews from MTV, NBC and CBS can come in.

According to a spokesman from CBS, camera crews for syndicated programs will be sent to cover the event. The possibility of bringing correspondents from the national office was still up in the air, while CBS and ABC affiliates from Hartford and Boston will be attending.

NBC will be sending a producer and camera crews from "The Now Show," a program with NBC News anchorman Tom Brokaw. MTV will also be bringing cameras and will most likely be supplying coverage to their affiliate, CNN.

The UMass News Office has been handling the media needs for the Farrakhan speech. Cameras and recorders are only permitted by the working media and photographers must remain in a designated area in the orchestra pit.

According to Danny Chun, the associate news editor for the UMass News Office, the phones and the office were "fairly busy" with last–minute calls from media outlets.

"[The UMass News Office] has done extensive planning," said Chun. "This is one of the biggest media events, in terms of media interest, UMass has ever had."

In regards to last–minute calls, Chun said, "We've been trying to accommodate everyone."

Chun also said that Der Spiegel, a magazine in Germany, will be sending correspondents tomorrow along with other German papers. Bottom Line, an African–American paper from Springfield, Nommo News, and The Jewish Weekly will be sending correspondents.

Reporters from the Associated Press and United Press International will be in attendance along with The Boston Globe, The Boston Herald and Newsweek.

Unity on steps: Muslims, Jews organize vigil

By BARBARA A. CANNISTRARO

Muslim and Jewish students united in front of the Student Union yesterday to condemn terrorism and bow their heads in a moment of silence for the victims of recent religious attacks.

The massacre of 40 Muslims in the West Bank two weeks ago and the killing of two Hasidic Jews in New York last week prompted the University of Massachusetts Muslim Students Association and Hillel to organize the vigil.

Abdul Kanaan, MSA vice president, said that the event marked the first joining of UMass MSA and Hillel to condemn Muslim and Jewish violence.

A day after Clinton pledged, "There will not be a coverup," Republicans on the House Banking Committee released a list today of 40 Whitewater witnesses they want to call before a panel hearing scheduled for March 24. They don't have power to force them to testify.

"Congress has an independent obligation to investigate and to inform both itself and the country," House Republican Whip Newt Gingrich, R–Ga., said this morning on NBC.

One Republican went to the extreme today of calling for the president's resignation. "He should resign," said Rep. James Quillen, R–Tenn. But Quillen stood alone; no other Republicans have characterized the affair so severely.

Middle East, but by education, understanding and respect that you have shared with me," she said.

Kanaan and Novick expressed their concern for members of their faiths who instigate and perpetuate violence between Muslims and Jews.

Kanaan said that he cries not only for the victims of terrorism, but also for "those who misinterpret their religions."

"I just couldn't understand which religion permits them to do such things. I don't understand which God ordered them to be the devil himself," he said.

Novick said, "If we all are essentially sisters and brothers, and claim to follow God's law, how can we justify taking one another's lives?"

"Acts of fear and violence take place regularly in the name of religion, yet they go against the very basis for which they stand," she said.

Rabbi Saul Perlmutter concluded the vigil with a moment of silence.

"Whether we pray to God or Allah or the spirit that is within us, we pray that the killing will stop," he said.

Farrakhan carries on the tradition of Muhammed

By RODNEY POWELL
Collegian Staff

There has been a lot of discussion about Minister Louis Farrakhan in the last month and a half or so. Many of us know a little about him, a few know quite a bit, and most, if not all of us, have heard things about this so–called controversial figure. But where did this man come from? How did he get to where he is now? This is a short biography of Minister Louis Farrakhan to help answer questions like these.

Louis Farrakhan is an African–American nationalist and chief apostle of the late Elijah Muhammed, the founder of the Nation of Islam. He is an orator who articulates the hurt of much of the progress of civil rights. He is admired by many due to his effort not to try and win the approval of the White establishment.

Louis Abdul Farrakhan was born Louis Eugene Walcott in 1933, in the borough of the Bronx, New York City. He grew up in the Roxbury section of Boston, Massachusetts. His parents emmigrated from the Carribean. He attended St. Cyprian Episcol Church in Roxbury, where he was a choir boy. At Boston English High School, he was an honor student, a track star, and a standout in music and drama.

According to the biography released by the Black Student Union, "Louis Eugene Walcott, then still in his twenties, was earning his living as a guitar–playing calypso and country singer when Malcolm X, the founding minister of Temple No. 11, the Black Muslim mosque in Boston, recruited him into the Nation of Islam. As a Black Muslim, Louis Eugene Walcott discarded his slave name and changed his name first to Louis X and finally Louis Abdul Farrakhan. In his first ministerial assignment, he was assistant to Malcolm X in Boston, and he became minister of the Boston mosque when Malcolm moved to Temple No. 7 in Harlem."

Farrakhan abandoned his policy for noninvolvement in American party politics and registered as a voter after Jesse Jackson declared his candidacy for the Democratic nomination for the U.S. presidency in 1983. He assisted Jackson in Syria in negotiating the release of Lieutenant Robert O. Goodman, a U.S. Navy aviator who was shot down and captured during a bombing mission in Lebanon.

In 1985 Farrakhan went on a speaking tour of the U.S. that covered 14 cities. He was greeted by larger and more enthusiastic crowds than ever before. This included the attendance of 25,000 at Madison Square Garden in October of that year. He accumu-

Islam religion explained

Farrakhan not typical of mainstream Muslim beliefs

By MUHAMMAD YOUNUS
Collegian Correspondent

News Analysis

Islam is the fastest growing religion in the world, including the United States, and is followed by more than a billion Muslims worldwide. A Muslim is one who submits to the Will of Allah, which is the Arabic term for the divine supreme being.

Islam has well established sources of beliefs and practices, namely the Qur'an — the last revelation of Allah revealed to Prophet Muhammad over 1,400 years ago — and Hadith, the tradition of Prophet Muhammad, including their commentaries and explanations. The first condition to be a Muslim is "Shahadah" or to say and believe unconditionally that "there is no God but Allah; Muhammad is the messenger of Allah."

According to most Muslims, it is a very common misunderstanding among many people in America that Louis Farrakhan, a prominent Black leader who uses the word Islam for his organization (Nation of Islam), is a Muslim leader.

The Nation of Islam in North America was founded by W.D. Fard. Fard, also known as Master Fard Muhammad, began propagating a brand of Islam in Detroit, Michigan in the early 1930s. It is said that Fard was a foreign born Muslim from the Indian sub–continent. He referred to himself as God in person, and that Black people had been captured by a "race of devils," the "White race," which was going to be destroyed.

In 1934, Elijah Poole (later renamed Elijah Muhammad), one of Fard's best students, was put in charge of his organization. Under the leadership of Elijah Muhammad, the Nation of Islam in North America became the most viable, visible self–reliant organization for Black people in America.

Elijah Muhammad died in 1975, and his son, Imam Warith Deen Muhammad, inherited the leadership of the Nation of Islam, with full support from all of the national ministers, including Minister Louis Farrakhan, who had been a member since 1955. Imam Warith Deen Muhammad had the opportunity

Mexican scholar defends uprising, says NAFTA no answer

By JUAN JOSE CHACON QUIROS
Collegian Staff

On Jan. 1, 1994, the Ejercito Zapatista de Liberacion Nacional (EZLN) began a popular uprising against the neo– liberal policies of the Mexican government. This popular movement has been dismissed by the U.S. government as illegitimate but now many Mexican scholars are defending the revolt.

One of them is John Saxe–Fernandez. He lectured Monday night in Thompson Hall on the "Chiapas uprising in Mexico: implications for U.S.–Mexican relations."

Dr. Saxe–Fernandez analysed the reasons for revolutionary activity in Mexico. He mentioned how "NAFTA is certainly not the answer to [a] deep structural economic crisis in Mexican society, the real instability and civil conflict... that could present the United States with a genuine nightmare."

"The White House insists on administering Mexican society with the same recipes which already have a devastating effect on the Mexican majority, including the middle class," Saxe–Fernandez said.

"If what you're looking for is the maximum possible development, fair distribution of resources and a balance trade account with the outside world, these policies are a resounding and overwhelming failure.

"To Kissinger what happened in Chiapas was the making of old factions, marxist from the '70s," he said.

For Dr. Saxe–Fernandez, the U.S. government is supporting the Salinas government because they are also supporting U.S. economic interests embodied in NAFTA.

According to Saxe–Fernandez, "Bentsen is pretty much aware that the NAFTA aggreement postpones the financial external crisis and does nothing to stop the structural forces which are responsible for the deficit and the overvaluation of the peso."

He also cited a very different piclated over 275,000 miles in tours in the 1980s.

According to the BSU Biography, "Farrakhan has lectured around the world." In 1987 Farrakhan visited Africa, Europe, and the Mideast, and he again toured the United States. The topic of that tour was "Politics without economics is symbol without substance." In a speech at the African–American Summit in New Orleans in April 1989, Farrakhan professed to "trace the origin of the international AIDS plague to an attempt by the government to decimate the population of central Africa."

Farrakhan's attention to an impeccable appearance is exemplified in his grooming, dress, neat hair, black suit, white shirt, and red bow tie. His oratorical skills are just as impeccable, smooth, persuasive, logical, and so on. He also enjoys playing classical music on his 200–year old Guadaninl violin In his spare time.

Louis Farrakhan married his teenage girlfriend, Khadijah, some 32 years ago. The Farrakhans, who have nine children and 22 grandchildren, live in the mansion built by the late Elijah Muhammed in the Hyde Park section of Chicago in 1972. Farrakhan's home mosque is on the South Side of Chicago. The base of his power in Chicago is among the poor Blacks of the South Side and West Side, but his rallies draw a cross–section of the Black community, as they do nationwide.

ture of the economy from the official version of the Mexican government.

"The Chiapas insurrection occurs in the context of a structural political crisis, basically of the three pillars of Mexican society: the Church, the Army and the government," he said.

Dr. Saxe–Fernandez, author of The future of Latin America, explained how the economic policies enacted by the IMF and the World Bank have been a key element in the social crisis in Latin America and more specifically in Chiapas.

"The modernization scheme of Structural Adjustment Programs of the Internation Monetary Fund have acted as a major precipitant of this process," he said.

According to Saxe–Fernandez, Chiapas suffers from the exploitation of the "cacicazgo" system and from the "jornalerizacion" (proletarization) of the peasantry. By 1989, 64 percent of the peasantry had been proletarized in Chiapas, 28 percent were very poor and only 6 percent were relatively well off. However, he mentioned how "the causes of the rebellion in Chiapas are all over Mexico."

Saxe mentioned how what Latin America needs is not "19th century savage capitalism, but enlighten nationalism, 'capitalismo nacional' not dependent on foreign interests, capitalism that responds to public interest."

Diets and disorders down, new Harvard study reveals

By GLEN JOHNSON
Associated Press

CAMBRIDGE — A new study of eating habits indicates that dieting is down, weights are up and eating problems are less prevalent among some Harvard University students and graduates.

"There's reason for optimism that if the 1980s were a decade of eating disorders, the '90s are seeing us come out of that. But there's much more work to do," said psychology professor Todd Heatherton, who conducted some of the surveys.

Two other eating experts had cautions about the findings. Covert Bailey, author of the "Fit or Fat?" health book series, said many people still try to "starve themselves to fitness." Johanna Dwyer, a Tufts University professor and director of the nutrition clinic at the New England Medical Center, agreed. Heatherton's conclusions are based on research started by the Henry A. Murray Research Center at Radcliffe College.

In 1982, the center surveyed 901 students.

In 1992, Heatherton surveyed 799 new students, and also re-interviewed about 80 percent of the students surveyed in 1982. In 1982, the women surveyed weighed an average of 128 pounds. The men weighed 161. In 1992, the new group of women weighed an average of 133 pounds, up five pounds. Yet the men weighed 161 1/2, up only a half pound.

Among the graduates re-contacted, the women weighed 133 pounds, up five pounds from 1982. The men weighed an average of 173 pounds, up 12 pounds.

Heatherton, who has been studying eating behavior for the past 10 years, said the weight gain between the female undergraduate groups "has to do with a changing cultural idea about what the ideal weight is, and it shifted upward."

He said men surveyed in 1982 and 1992 likely gained weight because of changes in their lifestyles.

"I think it's because college-age men, their metabolism is revved up, they exercise a lot. But 10 years later, they don't exercise as much yet they're keeping up the same kind of eating," he said.

The weight results triggered some expected findings in relation to dieting, Heatherton said.

In 1982, 56 percent of the women said they regularly dieted while only 13 percent of the men did. In 1992, only 45 percent of the women dieted regularly, and just 12 percent of the men said they did.

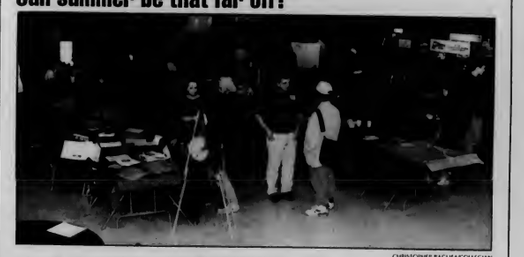
to learn mainstream Islam as a youth and sought to turn his people to the teachings of Islam as taught by the Holy Qur'an.

Farrakhan broke away from the original Nation of Islam, in 1977 and set up his own organization. He returned to the old teachings of Elijah Muhammad, and is teaching racial superiority of Blacks over Whites.

The following is a brief comparison between the teachings of Islam and that of Farrakhan's (and Elijah Muhammad's) "Nation of Islam."

Islam is strictly against racism. Allah says:

O humanity! We created you from a single (pair) of a male and a female, and made you into Nations and Tribes, that ye may know each other (not that ye despise each other). Verily the most honored of you in the sight of Allah is (he who is) the most righteous of you. And Allah has full knowledge and is well acquainted (with all things). (Holy Qur'an 49:13)



Prophet Muhammad in his last sermon said:

There is no superority for Arabs over non–Arabs, and for Non–Arabs over Arabs, for the White over the Black, for the Black over the White, except in God–consciousness. You are all children of Adam and Adam was created out of clay.

Farrakhan preaches:

The White race is not equal with darker people because the White race was not created by the God of Righteousness. The White race is not a created people; they are a made people. (Elijah Muhammad, Our Savior Has Arrived, page 90).

PRINCIPLES of SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING

UNFORTUNATELY, THIS IS WHERE PEOPLE ARE PUTTING TOO MANY RETIREMENT DOLLARS.
Every year, a lot of people make a huge mistake on their taxes. They don't take advantage of tax deferral and wind up sending Uncle Sam money they could be saving for retirement.
Fortunately, that's a mistake you can easily avoid with TIAA-CREF SRAs. SRAs not only ease your current tax-bite, they offer a remarkably easy way to build retirement income—especially for the "extras" that your regular pension and Social Security benefits may not cover. Because your contributions are made in before-tax dollars, you pay less taxes now. And since all earnings on your SRA are tax-deferred as well, the money you don't send to Washington works even harder for you. Down the road, that can make a dramatic difference in your quality of life.
What else makes SRAs so special? A range of allocation choices—from the guaranteed security of TIAA to the diversified investment accounts of CREF's variable annuity—all backed by the nation's number one retirement system.
Why write off the chance for a more rewarding retirement? Call today and learn more about how TIAA-CREF SRAs can help you enjoy many happy returns.
Benefit now from tax deferral. Call our SRA hotline 1 800-842-2733, ext. 8016.

Tragedy of prejudice, hate

Prejudice, hostility against groups and their members and hate are everyday realities. They are expressed in words and in actions: Louis Farrakhan calling Judaism a gutter religion, White supremacist groups attacking members of minority groups, attacks by Palestinians against Jews and the recent horrendous killings by a Jewish settler of worshipping Palestinians. Obviously, there is no monopoly on prejudice and hate.

Prejudice consists of views or beliefs that diminish or devalue a group and its members. Hate is an intensely negative view, of a person or a group and its members, accompanied by intense feelings of hostility. A hater sees the object of his or her hate as so profoundly bad and dangerous that its destruction is justified and even required.

A hater sees the object of his or her hate as so profoundly bad and dangerous that its destruction is justified and even required.

When prejudice or devaluation takes on certain forms and becomes more intense, it turns into hate. A common, milder form of devaluation is to see the "other," or "them," as unintelligent, lazy and unappealing. A stronger form is to also see the other as morally deficient and bad, which can be accompanied by the belief that the other has gained wealth, power or influence dishonestly, manipulatively and at one's own expense.

The devaluation of Jews in Germany and of the Armenians in Turkey, groups that have become victims of genocide, took this form. In its strongest form the hater sees the hated person or group as also a danger to his or her life, loved ones' life or group. Hitler held these views of Jews and the Nazi propaganda aimed to create these views among all Germans.

Devaluation, antagonism and even hate can be transmitted by a culture, through written and pictorial material, through everyday conversations and the examples of people's behavior, or through guidance and instruction by parents. Sometimes hate originates in long-standing conflict, antagonism and violence between two groups of people. Individuals and groups that have been abused and victimized often mistrust, fear and dislike human beings and are susceptible to learning hatred taught by their parents or culture or promoted by their leaders.

Often hate is created or intensified through an ideology that offers a vision of a better life, but claims that a certain group of people stands in the way of the ideology's fulfillment. The ideology can be nationalistic, aiming to enhance the wealth and power of a nation. Or, like communism, it can promise a better life for all of humanity — except those defined as the ideological enemies.

Hate develops progressively, step by step. When a person harms another to a small degree (a husband hitting a wife) or members of a group harm members of another group to a small extent (discriminating against them in education, or exploiting them in work), an evolution can start. As people harm others, they change and become capable of harming their victims more.

Without witnesses or bystanders powerfully communicating that such behavior is unacceptable, or either bystanders or victims creating painful consequences for the actors, people justify what they have done by seeing their actions as a rightful response to the victim's actions or character. The perpetrators devaluate the victims to such an extent that, in their eyes, the usual moral and human considerations no longer apply to them.

Hate intensifies along the way and can lead to a fanatic commitment to "deal with" the hated person or group. Killing is a way of dealing with them, which haters all too often resort to.

Leaders often fuel hatred, sometimes because of their own beliefs, but sometimes as a political tool. But hate does not remain under the leaders' control. It is deeply rooted in perceptions and beliefs, is intensely felt and grows into people's identity. It cannot be changed overnight; it is extremely difficult to change at all.

When groups, like Jews and Palestinians, that have lived in antagonism, hostility and mutual violence begin to move toward peace, hate often flares up. Leaders cannot simply stop hatred by changing their political course. The haters may feel desperate about the disconfirmation of their beliefs and identity, or about the objects of their hate getting away without punishment and continuing to endanger them.

To overcome already existing hatred requires an intense educational effort. This cannot be done by words alone, but must include genuine experience, ideally engagement with those one hates, under safe and equal conditions that make it possible to discover the other's humanity.

Such conditions, obviously, are difficult to create. Haters are rarely willing to engage this way with the hated. Along the way our best hope lies in the transformation of those who, even if they devalue and hate the "other," do not hate. When there are enough people who oppose haters, hopefully they can be contained.

Dr. Irvin Staub is a professor of psychology at the University of Massachusetts.

Farrakhan has facts wrong

Upon being asked by Time magazine (Feb. 28, 1994) what he wanted readers to know about his cause, Louis Farrakhan invited questions "...on anything that I have ever said in the past." He continued, "And if [you] can show me that I'm racist, or an anti-Semite...], from that lofty place, will apologize to the world for misrepresenting what I believed to be the truth."

Minister Farrakhan has himself convinced that he is not anti-Semitic. He has filtered enough propaganda through his message that many have fallen victim to his ludicrous claims and subsequent attempts to deny any wrongdoing. The truth remains: Farrakhan has unequivocally distinguished himself as an anti-Semite.

I have no problem with righteous speakers who are motivzational and inspirational, but I refuse to stand by and remain silent as Farrakhan advances at my expense.

Henry Brier

Who determines whether or not one is bigoted? It should be the people about whom one preaches or, in this case defiles, deplores and degrades. As Jews, we hear his blatant statements loud and clear, and they are outrageous. The Anti–Defamation League, which works to expose anti– Semitism, has consistently denounced him, reason enough to confirm Farrakhan's stance and stature as an anti–Semite.

Was the First Amendment formulated for people like him? I doubt our Founding Fathers meant to protect the malicious venom this man expectorates as he hides beneath the fold of free speech. Censoring him is out of the question. Use your discretion if you hear him speak; do not be fooled.

If you are familiar with what Louis Farrakhan has preached in the past, you know he has labeled Judaism a "gutter religion." He categorized its faithful as "bloodsuckers" of the Black community, and practitioners of a "dirty religion." Yet he does not substantiate with specific examples, which seems rather shallow.

He also has stated that Jews owned slave ships. In addition to others residing in the South during that time, some Jews were involved in the trade. However, there were also many righteous Jewish abolitionists such as Dr. David Einhorn who vociferously spoke for the anti–slavery movement in Baltimore. Upon the outbreak of the Civil War, his stance against the slave trade placed his life in danger of the pro– slavery mob, and he was forced to flee Maryland. There were numerous others. Perhaps Louis Farrakhan should enlighten himself.

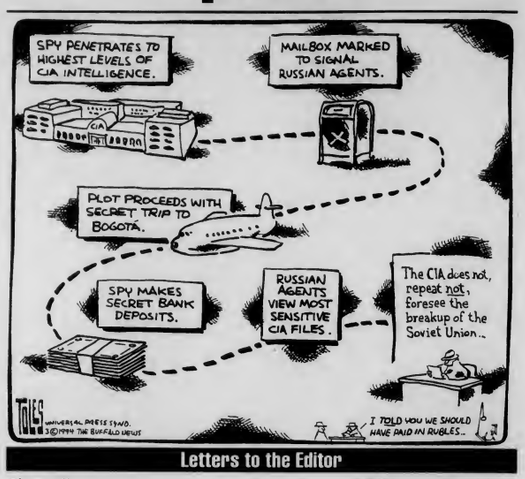
What is especially shameful is that Louis Farrakhan is debasing one minority on the behalf of another. By doing so, he is pitting two peoples against one–another. This seems to erode the smaller part, which in turn solidifies the larger, controlling majority.

Abraham Joshua Heschel played a leading role in humanitarian causes, which included the Civil Rights campaign. He was a strong spokesman against social injustice during the '60s, and marched alongside Dr. Martin Luther King.

I urge you to think about these examples and the support they offered other minorities. Also think about the fact that this campus is 15–20 percent Jewish. Look around. For every five people you see, one is Jewish, and subject to tonight's barrage of slander.

I have no problem with righteous speakers who are motivational and inspirational, but I categorically refuse to stand by and remain silent as he advances at my expense. Why could not a more tolerant Black speaker have been invited? One who does not harbor so shady and questionable a past, such as Dr. Benjamin Chavis, Rev. Jesse Jackson or Dr. William H. Gray III.

The aforementioned individuals are constructive; they encourage building up, not breaking down, not rallying racial and prejudicial strife. This process would prove to be propitious to all walks of life, with the ultimate accomplishment being unity.



In closing, I challenge you, Louis Farrakhan, to say something beneficial in tonight's address. Something you know will be positively perceived by Jews. If not, we expect the apology you promised in that Time interview.

Henry Brier is a Collegian staff member.

Chancellor urges respect, discussion

To the editor:

These are trying times because of the deeply felt emotions stirred by the visit of Louis Farrakhan.

I appreciate those who say they want to hear the minister because they believe some of his messages empower African–Americans who have long been subjected to pain, hatred and discrimination. But hurtful messages that inflict pain and fear will ultimately set us back in our efforts to overcome injustices and inequalities for all groups.

We are a community at the University of Massachusetts, one that must be guided by a compact of mutual respect and humanity. We expect people from on and off campus to express themselves in accordance with our community standards.

I urge the students, faculty and staff to participate in classes or forums that are discussing the issues and questions raised by the visit of Mr. Farrakhan. Only by talking to each other will we be able to sift facts from fiction, and come to a greater understanding of our separate histories and common bonds.

David K. Scott
Chancellor

Farrakhan welcomed despite recent attacks

To the editor:

On behalf of the Forum on Developing Nations, I would like to welcome the Honorable Minister Louis Farrakhan to the University of Massachusetts–Amherst campus.

Our campus and the community at large has witnessed the insidious vilification of Minister Farrakhan. The members of the Forum on Developing Nations protest the racist, bigoted and hypocritical attacks on Minister Farrakhan and the Nation of Islam. Minister Farrakhan's visit to UMass seems to have sparked an administration-orchestrated mass hysteria. The attacks on Minister Farrakhan are reminiscent of the climate in the United States in the '60s when, despite (or because of) the growing popularity of Malcolm X, he was denounced and decried as a racist.

It is time for the UMass administration to live up to its rhetoric of multiculturalism and diversity, and for the American ruling elite to realize that African-Americans will choose their own leaders, despite attempts to vilify them and keep the nation as a whole confined within the color line.

Civility commission condemns bigotry

To the editor:

We are deeply concerned about Minister Farrakhan's visit to the University of Massachusetts–Amherst this week. We recognize his First Amendment right to speak on campus. We also recognize that some members of our community sincerely believe that much of his message is a positive, important and powerful one that needs to be heard. Despite this, we strongly condemn Minister Farrakhan's statements that are anti–Semitic, racist and bigoted as damaging and dangerous. This is especially true when bigotry is used against people who have historically suffered from group libel.

What also troubles us is that Minister Farrakhan's constructive message is combined with a hateful and polarizing one. Therefore, we ask the University community to reflect on the complex and disturbing issues raised by his visit, and we call for greater efforts to hear all the voices of pain and to combat bigotry in our diverse community.

Hillel urges protest to combat message

To the editor:

With Louis Farrakhan appearing on campus this evening, we, the members of Hillel Council, are forced to make a statement. As do most student organizations, we condemn all forms of bigotry, hatred and scapegoating. Farrakhan's appearance on campus is provocative and confrontational. He will divide and Balkanize this already splintered campus.

We feel that it is highly irresponsible for Phi Beta Sigma and the Black Student Union to bring a speaker that completely undercuts the fight against bigotry, a movement for which African–Americans have and continue to fight.

We are disturbed by the fact that so many Black students claim to be empowered by a speaker who builds false self-esteem off the misery of others. While we cannot and do not intend to tell African-Americans which political leaders they should follow, we are concerned by any embracement of hate in the name of alleged empowerment. Farrakhan preaches hatred and attacks Jews, and as the Jewish student organization it is not only our duty, but our obligation to vociferously condemn Minister Farrakhan, the Nation of Islam and the hate they represent.

UMass has been racked by racial tension for years. African-Americans have been discriminated against in America for centuries and racism remains a critical social problem. The fact that Farrakhan is Black should not serve as a distraction for the hateful venom that he constantly espouses.

Hillel, along with the Newman Center, the Ark, the United Christian Foundation, the Greek Area Government and a host of other student and non-student organizations along with hundreds of concerned individuals have banded together to form a coalition against bigotry, and are sponsoring a protest outside the Fine Arts Center tonight.

We will be assembling in the Cape Cod Lounge in the Student Union at 6:30 p.m. We ask you to join us.

LBGA states position on controversial visit

To the editor:

Consistent with our history, the Lesbian, Bisexual, Gay Alliance (LBGA) is compelled to publicly register its reservations concerning remarks attributed to Minister Farrakhan and his aides in the recent and not-so–recent past. His remarks relevant to the gay, lesbian, bisexual community, the Jewish community and others have been a cause of great concern within our community.

We would hope that his message has changed, but at the same time we recognize the validity of Minister Farrakhan's message of empowerment to the Black community. We also strongly support anyone's First Amendment right to freedom of speech and expression.

The LBGA would like to encourage anyone who has not heard the Minister speak to attend his address. We would also like to call for a public dialogue aimed at empowering all students to combat ignorance, bigotry and fear wherever it may lie.

The Minister Louis Farrakhan has been accused of practicing hate speech by some, defended as a man who tells the truth by others. What we can say for sure is that there is no better place than a diverse college campus such as ours for the Minister to speak.

LBGA Steering Committee

Faculty reject tactics used by Farrakhan

To the editor:

Concerning tonight's speech by Louis Farrakhn, we want to state clearly that we support Farrakhan's right to speak here, and the right of student groups to bring him here and use student fees to pay him.

Yet we do not agree with the decision to invite him. We believe that it is inappropriate to bring to this Institution of education, where truth and respect for others should be honored, a man who uses bigoted, hateful rhetoric against Jewish people, whites and homosexuals, and invents lies in order to garner support for his organization.

We support efforts to unite African–Americans in the cause of black empowerment. We recognize with horror and shame that white racism has been one of the greatest evils this planet has witnessed; that Blacks have suffered a holocaust for centuries which virulently continues to this day.

But we cannot remain silent in the face of a world–view that unjustly scapegoats others. We agree with Cornell West who said on our campus last week that Black empowerment is not advanced by, and cannot be built upon, prejudice against other groups or denial of their rights, be they women, Jews, gays or whites.

May those who hear the words of Louis Farrakhan keep in mind that bigotry, though a powerful way to create a mass movement, ends by expressing itself in hatred and violence and isolating the group it unites.

Black empowerment — Yes!
Unity of all oppressed people in the struggle for justice and democracy — Yes!
Anti-Semitism and homophobia — No!

We must welcome Minister Farrakhan

Tonight is the night this campus has been anticipating for many months now: the Honorable Minister Louis Farrakhan will be addressing the University of Massachusetts at the Fine Arts Center.

Slated to go down in history as his last campus appearance, his speech will undoubtedly mark a turning point in campus race relations, an issue that has finally been presented in a way that cannot be ignored.

That is why I am publicly welcoming Minister Farrakhan to UMass, for now I realize the importance of his visit to the entire campus community.

Much of the controversy surrounding Minister Farrakhan has to do with his statements about Whites and Jews and most importantly, Black empowerment.

I'd like to think of myself as an open–minded person. I form my opinions based upon my own experiences, and not based upon what I've been told by others.

I will never give a personal opinion on Minister Farrahkan because I do not know him personally. And even if I did, I would never use a public expression of that opinion for any personal or political gain.

What I will do, and what we all should do, is give him the respect that he deserves as a human being, regardless of whether or not we agree with everything that he says.

Let's talk about bigotry.

Here's a very important question I'd like ask everyone to think about: Do you you have a friend or relative who has expressed racism or bigotry in private? And when you hear such things being said, do you feel compelled to publicly denounce them?

I am ready to confess that I have relatives who grew up in the South during segregation and witnessed all sorts of atrocities, including the attempted lynching of a Black man. These relatives have also told me, based upon actual live experience, that White people are "evil, no good, crackers, and have always tormented Blacks since they were first brought here during slavery."

I've always protested that "all Whites are not bad," and I've always had White friends growing up and still do to this day. Nevertheless, I have never even thought about publicly denouncing my own family because they have always supported me and will always continue to do so.

Family Ties

Most people have no idea how important Minister Farrakhan is to African–Americans right now. As it stands, he is the sole leader of the Black community that dares to stand up and defy the state of institutionalized racism in this country without fear or compromise. Millions of African–Americans, regardless of what the so–called opinion polls suggest, have complete faith in him and know that he will never sell them out.

What we all should do, is give him the respect that he deserves as a human being, regardless of whether or not we agree with everyth9ing he says.

Martin F. Jones

This is the kind of that faith most of us have in our parents. Although some of us do not agree with everything they do, we will stand by them to the very end. And we do not approve of anyone who attacks them, or even worse, tries to force us to go against them. We, in fact find such attacks to be attacks on us as well. For such individuals outside the family, It is not their place to place their judgment in such a manner and they should not expect to retain friendly relations with any of the other family members in the process. Minister Farrahan is really like a father figure to the Black community, and is especially so to millions of young African–American men, many of whom have grown up without a father or male figure in their life.

In light of this fact, a warning would be appropriate for those who plan on protesting Minister Farrakhan's visit tonight: any public display of disrespect or hostility towards Minister Farrakhan will not be tolerated. There will be hundreds of people arriving from afar to see Minister Farrakhan in peace. If you want to protest "his message," be sure you do it peacefully and respectfully and without harrassing or otherwise irritating "his people." They have not done or said anything to hurt you and it would be highly unfair to them if tonight's event were to be tarnished in any way by your activities.

Black and Jewish Relations

Last week, I publicly resigned from the Black–Jewish relations committee at Hillel for the reasons that I have just explained. I'm sure I don't have to explain the nature of attacks on Minister Farrakhan by the Jewish community at Hillel, but I will say that Hillel made it clear that he was being attacked to "empower Jewish students," and if Black students were offended, "too bad."

Since my resignation, I have been contacted by the coordinator of the committee, and we had a very honest and frank discussion. In closing we agreed that there was a solid rift between the two communities and due to the unyeilding support or opposition for or against Minister Farrakhan, there could be no more dialogue until after the affair was over. Until then we agreed to leave things in "God's hands."

After Farrakhan

Tomorrow morning, we will all rush to the newsstands for the "official account" of Minister Farrakhan's speech. Many of us will enter into a reflection of the event and how it was portrayed. Others will just be glad that the whole thing is finally over. And there will be one very important question that must not be ignored: where do we go from here?

We can all expect this event to weigh heavily on everyone's memory for years to come. However, will we actually change our ways, or will we continue to live in denial of our own continuing acceptance of a society that is not just? Ours is a society that is still "racist, sexist, and violent," and probably will continue to be throughout all of our lifetimes. Nevertheless, we must continue to fight for social change.

That means we do not focus all of our attention on individuals who we may find easy to scapegoat as a cover for our own guilty conscience. It means being consistent in our attacks against injustice without resorting to hypocrisy and double standards.

It also means getting actively involved in current campus movements for social justice which are struggling for support. Tommorrow, the W.E.B. DuBois petition coalition will be meeting with Chancellor David K. Scott to discuss the naming of the University Library after the Massachusetts–born educator, scholar and social activist W.E.B. Du Bois, whose collected writings are archived in the library. If this is done, the University will have taken a dramatic step towards creating a campus that reflects the true diversity of our world by recognizing those persons who regardless of their race, have made extraordinary contributions to our society.

After witnessing the high level of organized lobbying and protest against Minister Farrakhan's visit, I am looking forward to seeing a similar level of activism on campus issues that directly affect this campus in the long term. The Student Government Association is now engaged in in uphill battle against tuition and fee hikes and could use as much support as possible. Their fight is our fight and we all have an obligation to contribute to it.

In closing, we must all have the courage and conviction to put aside our differences and build a united student agenda. Always keep in mind that the powers that be, whether in Whitmore or the White House, will always forment division among students and the working people of the world in order to retain their power. We, the students of the University of Massachusetts represent the next generation of leaders who will guide America and the world into the 21st century. Standing at the forefront of student activism in the '90s, we will determine the future status of the next social order. In the end, it is up to us to demonstrate the vision and commitment necessary to make that change.

BMCP to host communications conference

By RODNEY POWELL
Collegian Staff

This year, the Black Mass Communications Project is celebrating its 25th anniversary as a student–run organization on the campus of the University of Massachusetts.

BMCP, along with WMUA, the Black Student Union, the Black/Jewish Relations Committee, Club Communications, the Office of Third World Affairs, Division of Academic Support Services, and Union Video Center, will be hosting its 5th Annual Communications Conference at the Campus Center, UMass on March 12.

The goal of this conference is to provide a unique opportunity for communications students, professionals, academians, and researchers to learn from each other, discuss timely issues, enhance careers and network with one another.

Registration will begin on Friday, March 11, at 12 noon until 6 p.m. and continue Saturday, March 12, from 8 a.m. to 12 noon. The goal of this conference is to provide a unique opportunity for communications students, professionals, academians, and researchers to learn from each other, discuss timely issues, enhance careers and network with one another.

Planned workshops and panels will cover issues relative to radio, television, film, the recording industry, advertising, public relations and much more. One workshop in particular will feature Grammy–Award winning recording artist Dr. Yusef Lateef.

Workshop topics will include:
–Minority Radio in the Year 2000
–Jazz, and How it Has Evolved Through History
–Newscasting it the '90s
–People of Color In Film
–Getting Your Foot in the Door of the Recording Industry –Building Positive Self Images/Black on Black Communications Gap
–And much, much more...

Delegates who wish to register for this conference can contact the Black Mass Communications Project at:
402 Student Union Building
Amherst, MA 01003
*Admission is free to UMass students and faculty as well as BMCP members and alumni.
*Call and inquire about special group rates.

Along with the Communications Conference, BMCP will be holding a 25th Anniversary Alumni Reunion Dinner on March 12, 1994; during which Percy Sutton will serve as the keynote speaker.

Mr. Percy Sutton is an Air Force veteran, attorney, businessman, civil rights activist lecturer and former public official. He is the founder and now Chairman Emertus of Inner City Broadcasting Corporation, a New York City– based corporation that owns and operates radio and cable television companies, radio and television production and entertainment companies around the world.

Admission is free and open to conference registrants, as well as BMCP members, alumni, and invited guests. For more information about BMCP's Communications Conference Weekend, call (413) 545–2426, FAX (413) 545– 4751, or stop by 402 Student Union Building.

BMCP welcomes and encourages students to become involved with the Project! There will be a general body meeting on Thursday, March 10th at 7 p.m. Location to be announced.

*Anyone who attends this meeting will automatically become a member.

Also included in this anniversary weekend is "BMCP's Comedy Extravaganza" featuring comedian Arnez J. along with special guests Cool Bubba Ice and Tony Woods! This event will be held on Friday, March 11, at the Campus Center Auditorium, UMass. Doors open at 7:30 p.m. and the show starts at 8 p.m. Admission is $8 for UMass students, $10 for 5 college students and Communications Conference registrants, and $12 for General public.

Petition Coalition to meet with Scott

The W.E.B. Du Bois Petition Coalition is currently spearheading a campus–wide campaign to name the university library after W.E.B. Du Bois. Over the past four months, the coalition has been circulating a petition across the campus in support of this goal and has collected hundreds of signatures from students, faculty and staff from the campus community. W.E.B Du Bois, a native of Massachusetts from Great Barrington, is one of the founders of the National Association for the Advancement for Colored People and is heralded by many as the founder of the modern Civil Rights Movement. The first African–American to earn a Ph.D from Harvard, W.E.B. Du Bois is considered to be one of the greatest intellectuals of the 20th Century.

The author of 19 books, W.E.B. Du Bois has left behind a collection of over 130,000 personal documents and writings which were donated to the university by his widow, Shirley Graham Du Bois, over 20 years ago. This collection is currently housed on the 25th floor of the university library and is open to the public on weekdays from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Thursday morning at 9:45 a.m., the W.E.B. Du Bois Petition Coalition will be meeting with Chancellor David K. Scott at the Whitmore to discuss his support for naming the university library after W.E.B Du Bois.

The W.E.B. Du Bois Petition Coaltion will be turning in the signatures that it has been collecting over the past four months, and would like to thank all of the students, faculty and staff who signed It. We urge you and all others who are able to attend tommorrow's meeting with the chancellor to come out and support this very important campaign.

Wine tasting fundraiser provides potent potables

By MONICA MALDARI

WGBY Wine Tasting
Marriot Hotel, Springfield
March 3 – 4, 1994

On Thursday and Friday March 3rd and 4th from 5:30 to 8 p.m., WGBY held its ninth annual "Evening of Wine Tasting" at the Marriott Hotel in Springfield. This event was sponsored by Town and Country Wines and Liquors. Over 30 local wine distributors donated both their wines and their time to this fundraiser.

The wines represented ranged from the more popular Californian wines to those from the traditional wine– producing countries such as Italy, France and Spain, as well as more exotic wines from Australia, South Africa and Chile.

Sarah Cothran, the events coordinator at WGBY, described the event as being a combination of a fundraiser and the station's way of showing membership appreciation. It is one of the more popular WGBY happenings and close to 800 people attended despite the $20 ticket price.

The wines available were not bizzare or obscure, but were ones that could be found locally. One of the benefits of this tasting was that it allowed people to try wines that they usually would not risk paying the money for a whole bottle of.

The type of attendee varied from the true wine connoisseur, whom you could distinguish by the way they took one small (but noisy) sip and then spit it out, to the average wine appreciator who simply wanted to extend their repertoire of wines.

The vast range of wines and vineyards were overwhelming, so my companions and I consulted our brochures and planned our attack. While I decided to stay more with the reds such as the Cabernet Sauvignons and the Merlots, my companions preferred to try the whites such as the Chardonnays and the Rieslings. Thus armed with our guides and our preferences, we plunged right into the tasting.

The representatives who worked at the tables were helpful in describing the influences that each type of grape has on the flavor of the wine. They were also useful in supplementing my wine tasting vocabulary. For example, when at one point I described the Fontanafredda Dolcetto D'Alba as tasting like "grape juice," I was corrected by the gentleman behind the table who told me that, "We'd prefer to call that taste 'earthy'" (it still tasted like Welch's to me). Words such as "robust," "full–bodied," "aroma" and "bouquet" could be overheard throughout the room.

Some of our favorite wines for the whites were:

NATHAN MARTIN/COLLEGIAN
Wines read / for the tasting.

The 1993 Johannisberg Riesling from J. Lohr Estates (California). This is a sweet wine with a hint of peaches and pears. The Italian 1992 Castello San Angelo Pinot Grigio from Banfi was also popular.

As for the reds, my personal favorite was the 1988 Barolo Cerequio from the Marenfo Marenda Vineyards in Italy. This wine is made from the Nebiolo grape grown in the Alba/Piedmontese region. It is a fabulous wine because it is so smooth that it tastes like silk going down, yet leaves an impression of cherry that lingers until the next sip where the wine will then take on a subtly different flavor.

The "must try" red wine of the night (some went so far as to declare it the best red in the room) was the 1993 Cabernet Sauvingon "Black Label" from Wolf Blass (Australia). At $25.99 per bottle I would expect this to be one of the best. It is a very rich and fruity wine with flavors of black currant, cherry and chocolate.

An event like this would not be a true wine tasting unless it offered something with which to clear the palate between tastings (or to soak up the wine for those who have tasted too much). Aside from the traditional cheese and crackers supplied by Frigo's of Springfield and Granville Country Cheeses, there were homemade breads from Gus and Paul's Catering and salsa and chips from Uncle Mike's Foods. The most interesting food item was an eclectic mix of vegetarian chile in a petite canape pastry from Island Boy's in Springfield.

WGBY will be offering this "classy" fundraiser again in late July or early August at the Cranwell Resort in Lenox Mass. Tickets will be $18 for members, $20 for non– members and $25 at the door.

Also: unfunny script makes 'Greedy' a sitcom snore

By ED HUMPHRIES
Collegian Staff

Blue Chips — William Friedkin's Blue Chips may very well be the enlightenment among sports flicks. Raw and honest, it shirks jock conventions, leaving the buzzer–beating finishes soaking it up in the locker room in favor of a "winning certainly isn't everything" philosophy. Don't waste time looking for another underdog Rocky (or Rudy). That's a tale Friedkin leaves wisely untold.

Nick Nolte's Pete Bell is losing his religion. Saddled by a two–time record of taking his Western University basketball team to the national championships, a lack of talent finds him without a winning season.

On top of that he struggles to keep his team clean, fighting off point–shaving allegations and the unscrupulous advances of a "fist–full of dollars" soul–stealing alumnus (J.T. Walsh).

When Bell finds three hot prospects, or "blue chips," he struggles to bring them to Western, but it isn't long before Walsh's Lucifer starts running the show in the Church of Dunkology.

Friedkin's direction is crisp, the basketball scenes are memorably in–your–face, but it's Ron Shelton's script that makes it all possible.

Shelton knows the sports world well, not just the actual game particulars, but more importantly the humor and heartaches "off the field." More importantly he knows people and how they act. His films (White Men Can't Jump, Bull Durham) have all used the sporting world as a backdrop for his character studies. From sex–crazed baseball groupies to high–pitched "Jeopardy!" contestants, his characters have proven especially memorable.

That's what makes Pete Bell's heartache ring true. Nolte delivers yet another bravura performance, from his opening tirade on his boys to his strained glances at a menacing shot clock, Nolte manages to get inside the mind of a college coach, holding his own against the real coaches (Rick Petino, Bobby Knight) who appear in the film.

And Friedkin keeps it all fun (announcer Dick Vitale spews forth "awesome Ba–beeee" with nodding self– reverence) but thoughtful.

His message might be argued as explicit, but nevertheless it's a good indictment on the corruption oozing beneath the glossy veneer of the sporting world. B+ (Amherst Cinema)

Greedy — Director Jonathan Lynn is proving to be a "one– hit wonder." A few years back he hit big with My Cousin Vinny, an out of left field "fish out of water" tale that honestly earned its laughs.

Then came The Distinguished Gentleman, so unfunny that it put Eddie Murphy's career resurgence on yet another temporary stasis.

It seems that not even a promising by those Kings of the Crowd Pleasing School of Comedy, Lowell Ganz and Babaloo Mandel (A League of Their Own), can throw a curve to Lynn's tragic comic path.

Greedy plays like a sitcom, no surprise here since Mandel and Ganz are "Laverne and Shirley" vets. When aging millionaire Kirk Douglas begins showing signs of senility, his kinfolk swoop like so many vultures, eager to pick through the remaining financial empire left behind.

In to settle the mess is Michael J. Fox, the only relative with a moral bone in his body. Still it isn't long before the greed jones takes over Fox's soul.

Greedy could have been a sardonically vicious dark comedy. Why not make all the relatives bloodthirsty? Why not let Fox go for the gusto throughout, pining for the death and fortune of Douglas alongside costars Phil Hartman and Ed Begley Jr.? Each could have gone for the jugular; whoever's left alive makes off with the most toys.

Well, in a Mandel/Ganz script that doesn't happen. There has to be some moral center to balance the surrounding irreverent situations. Only one nagging problem. Isn't there usually laughs as well? C– (Mt. Farms Four)

Gender and identity of African lit explored

ARAM LOMBARDI/COLLEGIAN
Rhonda Cobhan–Sanders

If you are interested in African literature, the place to be last Monday afternoon was the Five College Women's Research Center at Mount Holyoke College. Rhonda Cobham–Sanders, a citizen of Trinidad and Tobago and a prominent researcher of Caribbean and African literature, spoke on "Gender and identity in Postcolonial African Literature."

According to the organizers, the talk was aimed at exploring the ways in which representations of gender and sexuality are defined by national narratives in modern African Literature. Cobham–Sanders is an associate professor of Caribbean and African literature and Feminist theory at Amherst College. She has undertaken field research in Africa in preparation for a book that was the topic of her lecture. In 1984–85 she received a grant for travel and research from the German Research Council.

After reading some of her work, Cobham–Sanders explained to the participants how she has come to a point in her writing where she needs some feedback and eventually an answer. She is currently on leave and working towards completion of her book. In the future she will give an interview for the Collegian Arts & Living section to explain her work and current developments in African and Caribbean literature.

The talk was part of the "Works in Progress Series," sponsored by the Five College Women's Research Center. There is a talk every Monday at 4:30 p.m. Next Monday, Judith Frank from Amherst College will give a lecture entitled "This Dream of Fancied Sorrow': Charity, Grief 'and Feminity in Frances Burney's Cecilia."

Exchange students offer foreign perspectives

By MELISSA LEMKIN
Collegian Correspondent

If the world was transparent and country borders were non–existent, one could observe the differences in cultures that make our universe so unique. Unfortunately, that opportunity has yet to become accessible, and one must rely on travel to observe other lifestyles.

As in previous years, the University of Massachusetts is hosting several students from England. These students will stay in the United States for two semesters in hopes of learning more about the American lifestyles and culture. I had the pleasure of talking to four of the exchange students and have learned a little more about the place they call home.

Bricj Madahar, Ria Karmarker, Sanjeev Rana and Joseph Brannan come from different parts of their native country, but they all share one thing In common: they are spending one year in a foreign country.

Madahar attends Swansea University, where he majors in American studies. After spending a semester at UMass, he has already noticed major differences academically and socially. One of the major differences is in the work load.

"In England they place more effort on quality rather than quantity." Brij said "It is easier to do well in America."

In England they get tested less frequently and more emphasis is placed on written assignments. Brij believes "if you turn up to classes in America you will do well. The(professors) guide you more here."

Sanjeev Rana, a chemistry major who lives in Birmingham, shares Brij's feelings.

"Although in America It is a continuous assessment, the work is not as demanding. I am doing graduate work here," he said.

Also, in England, less emphasis is placed on objective testing. For example, when talking to Joseph Brannan, I learned that he just took his first test since high school when he came to America. Joseph attend Norwich University, where he is majoring in American studies.

Ra attends The University of Manchester Science and Technology, where she majors in international business. Ria also finds the work to be more of a continuous assessment here in America.

Another interesting fact is that British students only attend college for three years, and get this Americans, their tuition is paid by for their council. The council is the American equivalent to our local government. But, since their education is free, the demand to further one's education exceeds the number of universities, therefore, only about five percent of British youths attend college.

The reason for coming to America was unanimous; it was required for their major. But, all four have decided that coming to the states has not been a sacrifice.

"America has lived up to more than I thought. People have been friendly, and the country is so big that I can't ever imagine being bored. I really believe that America is the land of opportunity," Brij said.

While in America, all four plan on travelling. Brij has already been to New York City, Chicago and Boston. Ria and Joseph both went to Washington D.C. and hope to do more traveling this semester.

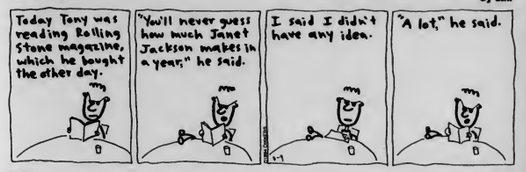
The Anatomy of the Citibank

Classic card: a body of services and peace of mind for students, now with No Annual Fee.

For years, scientists could only theorize about the Citibank Classic Visa® card, unable to actually observe anything below its epidermal surface (i.e. the plastic). Surely the highly intelligent services were evidence of an advanced brain. But with the latest advances in x-ray technology, and when the light could catch the various parts just so, it was confirmed: the Citibank Classic Visa card is head to toe more evolved than ever imagined. ¶ At its backbone are 3 services to cover the purchases you make on the card. Starting at the Lower Costal Spine, we see Citibank Price Protection can assure you of the best price. All you have to do is discover the same item advertised in print for less, within 60 days, and Citibank will refund the difference up to $150[1]. Along the Oops-It-Slipped Disc, Buyers Security℠ can cover those purchases against accidental damage, fire or theft, for 90 days from the date of purchase[1]; and Citibank Lifetime Warranty℠ allows one to extend the warranty for the expected service life of eligible products up to 12 years[2]. So if you ever buy a walkman, a stereo, whatever, it will be reassuring to know that Citibank can bend and be flexible while still lending support. ¶ The backbone is then connected to the cranium or headbone. Look at the bottom of the page. The Citibank Photocard has the head of the cardholder, as well as his or her own signature, right on the front. That way, it will help prevent fraud. It will also make a good form of ID, since you get to choose your own photo. ¶ But what about the Nervous System? The fact is, it doesn't have one, not in the spinal cord nor in the brain. What it has is the Very Calm System. Because even if your credit card gets stolen, or gets lost, an involuntary muscle called the Extendus Anewcardeus activates the Lost Wallet℠ Service which can replace your card usually within 24 hours. ¶ As suspected, there's another involuntary muscle: the heart—a beating and caring heart, big enough to give students special discounts and savings. You'll receive a $20 Airfare Discount on domestic flights[3]; savings on mail order purchases, sports equipment, magazines and music; a low variable interest rate of 15.4%[4]; and, No Annual Fee. (In other words, the card itself doesn't cost a forelimb and a hindlimb.) ¶ Naturally the heart of the Citibank Visa card pumps life and personalized customer service into all its parts, 24 hours a day. So no matter what the question you might have concerning your card, you need only call the 800 number. You'll find Citibank has a neck they are eager to stick out for you. They will always lend an ear. Or a hand. They will keep an eye out for you. They will put their best foot forward. Etc. ¶ So call to apply. You don't need a job or a cosigner. And call if you'd like your photo added to your regular Citibank Classic Visa card. The number is 1-800-CITIBANK (1-800-248-4226), extension 19. ¶ If we take an overview of the whole body of services that make up the Citibank Classic Visa card, and consider that it will facilitate building a credit history, then you must shake a leg, flex your index finger and call today.

Scientists theorize that the mind of the Citibank Classic Visa cardmember (Fig. A) is secure because it receives superior service; the mind of the non-Citibank Classic Visa cardmember (Fig. B) is not secure because—could it be?—it has a screw loose?

Not just Visa. Citibank Visa.



Monarch Notes® Version: With your purchases covered, no annual fee, and a low rate, the Citibank Classic Visa card will go easy on your Nervous System. Call 1-800-CITIBANK (1-800-248-4226), extension 19.

Your Horoscope

By Jeane Dixon

ARIES (March 21–April 19): Certain issues may still be unresolved. Forget them; you need have no fears today. Postpone making up your mind about romance or anything else. Use your talent as a mediator or emperor.

TAURUS (April 20–May 20): Shrewdness and determination make you a winner today! An extra dose of imagination helps, too. Simmer down on the emotional level. Watch what you say and do when feeling under pressure.

GEMINI (May 21–June 20): Be wary of changes that will affect your home life or joint finances. Keeping up on new developments in your field puts you ahead of the competition. Higher-ups reward your efforts.

CANCER (June 21–July 22): Discretion is the key to moving ahead in both business and romance. Keep your aims to yourself and refuse to be sidetracked from your goals. A calculated business risk will pay off.

LEO (July 23–Aug. 22): A great day for career and financial matters. Accent diplomacy both at work and on the home front. An older person plays a major role. Extra income is linked to a former employer.

VIRGO (Aug. 23–Sept. 22): Changing circumstances can cause uncertainty. Attend meetings on time and come well-prepared. An influential person expresses new interest in your projects.

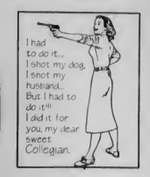
LIBRA (Sept. 23–Oct. 22): Visitors or friends are at your door, eager to help you attain a long-range goal. Socializing can be delightful without being expensive. Check the Collegian 111 listing for free events.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23–Nov. 21): A secret lies in your spirits. Take a chance on a bold idea — it could be a winner! Pursue what you want most. Your practical touches will make a creative project turn a profit.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22–Dec. 21): Accept more responsibility and you will reap new rewards. Consult experts before making financial changes. You may need more support from the folks at home.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22–Jan. 19): New financial opportunities are linked to who you know. Keep your evening hours open for a last-minute invitation. A newcomer could figure prominently in your social plans.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20–Feb. 18): Make an all-out effort to improve your job performance. Get better organized. You can easily combine business with pleasure tonight.



PISCES (Feb. 19–March 20): Dealing with people as a distance could be highly profitable now. Show your creative, artistic side. A long journey or legal action will bring business gains to some.

Swimmers record top times at ECACs

By MICHAEL REISS
Collegian Staff

Over the past weekend at the ECAC Championships, the University of Massachusetts women's swimming team started up its own record collection.

And to Coach Bob Newcomb and the rest of the squad, it was sweet music.

Sparked by an overwhelming number of personal best times, along with four new school marks set, the Minutewomen chalked up a fifth place finish at Rutgers University. The fifth place performance is the best in the history of the program.

UConn finished first with 449 points. Boston University (408.5), George Washington (396) and East Carolina (283) rounded out the top four.

"One of our goals this year was to finish in the top 10," said Newcomb. "We finished 10th last year at this meet. The quality of this meet was so far superior than what was here last year."

It was a weekend of shattered records.

First, there were the relays. The 200–medley foursome of Barbara Banks, Jessica Griffith, Trish Evers and Sarah Baker swam a time of 1:50.33. The 400–medley combination of Barbara Banks, Jodi Walters, Evers and Baker followed suit, recording a time of 3:38.66.

"Over the course of the season we've dropped that (400– medley) record eight seconds," said Newcomb. "One thing that really struck me this weekend was the way our relays stepped up. The way we swam the (400–medley) over the weekend just astounded me."

Then, there was senior 200–fly phenom Julie Veremey breaking her own school record by two seconds (2:06.69).

"I was really happy for her," said Newcomb. "She really had a spectacular weekend to finish up her career like that."

Finally, Banks crushed the school record in the 100–back in $9.88. "Finishing under the minute barrier is something any swimmer strives to do," said Newcomb, comparing the feat to a jogger running the mile under four minutes.

Newcomb also praised the individual efforts of Griffith in the 100–breaststroke, where she swam a personal best (1:07.92).

"I was pleased for her because she's worked hard throughout the year," said Newcomb.

Baker also drew accolades from Newcomb for her iron– woman performance, as she swam in all five relays while swimming a personal best in the 50–free.

Overall, it was a great capper to a season of hard work.

"It's very satisfying because we have worked hard all year and really been focused on the ECACs," said Newcomb. "In certain cases I think we gave up a lot in dual meets because we didn't rest them. One of our calls as a team this weekend was that it was payback time.

"I think the team is really satisfied the way we finished up. I know I am."

Kristin Schambach, Kristen Chapelle, Jessica Farley, Kerrie Hodge, Carloyn Curran, Kim Broad and Michelle Munyon were other swimmers that chipped in to the successful finish. Allison White and Dede May had super meets in the diving competition.

"The big difference between this meet and last year's meet was the quality," said Newcomb. "The addition of teams like UConn, GW, North Carolina, Rutgers, Providence and American bolstered the field. All those teams finished in the Top 12. It was real exciting to finish fifth in a meet of this quality."

Track ends on high note

Forrest's record carries women at ECACs

By CANDICE FLEMMING
Collegian Staff

Freshman Anya Forrest, in only her third meet this season, broke the school record in the 55m hurdles at the ECAC Championships held this past weekend at Yale University.

Forrest ran a time of 8.22, which was .12 seconds better than last weekend's second place finish (8.34) at the New England Championships. Forrest's time was also a personal record for her and was good enough to finish ninth in the semifinals of the event.

"I think [Anya] did a great job, that was a good race, its too bad she didn't make it to the finals, she just missed," said Coach Julie LaFreniere. "That was probably the best performance [of the weekend]."

Junior Kristin Diggs, who like Forrest was participating in only her third meet of the season, finished 11th overall in the 3000m with a time of 10:36.31.

The distant medley relay team consisting of Kerry Aker, Frica Dolye, Jen Waeger, and Kim Liljeblad, placed seventh overall with a time of 12:04.51.

Both Liljeblad and Waeger improved on their personal records by three seconds each. Liljeblad, running the anchor leg, ran a 5:02 mile and Waeger, running the 1200m leg, ran a time of 3:41.

"I thought [Jen] did a spectacular job keeping us in there and [Liljeblad] ran a tremendous anchor leg," said LaFreniere. "All in all, it was a fairly strong performance for that team."

Junior Janey Meeks didn't make it to the finals in the triple jump, but according to LaFreniere, she still performed well.

"That was Janey's best performance this indoor season," said LaFreniere.

"I think overall we were happy, it was a nice way to finish the season."

LaFreniere feels that the ECACs were a good experience for the freshmen who competed. They will now know what to expect next time they compete at such a high level like that of the ECACs.

"I thought it was a good weekend. The nice thing is it exposed a lot of our freshmen to this level, which they need to get used to. I think it was a learning experience for them."

UMass finishes its season with a record of 8–8 and is looking forward to the time off until the outdoor season begins. The Minutewomen will be able to get a lot of rest, which according to LaFreniere, is needed.

"I think the team is tired and the coaches are tired. We have three weekends off from competition and hopefully the snow will be melted and we start hosting meets.

"The nice thing about outdoor for us is we don't have to travel every weekend, so we'll be here for the first four weekends in April, we'll be here right on our own turf."

Temple fans show no class, respect for the Minutemen

ARAM COMBS/COLLEGIAN

Massachusetts fans are expected to be in full force tomorrow night in the A–10 championship at the Mullins Center.

With a little over five minutes left in Monday's second Atlantic 10 semi–final, Philly fans started chanting, "We want UMass!" repeatedly. When the final buzzer sounded in the Palestra that evening, Temple fans got what they wanted — a trip up here to Amherst and their Owls' third shot at Massachusetts, this time in the championship game of the A– 10 Tournament.

Throughout the weekend, Massachusetts had a target on its back; the hometown fans taunted Coach John Calipari every time he yelled at his players as well as the officials. The score didn't matter, unless the Minutemen were losing.

IN THE PAINT
Art Stapleton on Minuteman Basketball

On occasions when St. Joseph's and Duquesne led Massachusetts, the fans were as loud as they would be if Temple had been playing. Then, when Calipari's team pulled away and buried both the Hawks and the Dukes, the crowd began to cheer for Temple.

At one point in the quarterfinal, St. Joe's cut a huge Massachusetts lead to 10 points with six minutes left in the game and the fans were on their feet smelling upset, 100 percent behind the Hawks. Or were they?

Even though they didn't get any closer, the Hawks never gave up — the Temple fans, however, did. With three minutes to go, they began cheering for the Owls who were due up next to play Rutgers. Classless.

That is not rooting for the underdog — it's harassing the underdog. During the final timeout of the contest, the St. Joseph's band, cheerleaders and mascot ran on the court, trying to show one last round of support for the Hawks, who most likely played their final game of the season. No respect from the Temple fans, who shouted throughout the timeout, "We want Temple," drowning out the St. Joe's fight song.

The motto at St. Joseph's is, "The hawk will never die." The mascot exemplifies this as he (it is a man; we learned this at the A–10 banquet) never stops flapping his wings. It is a novelty to make fun of the Hawk and how stupid it is. But when St. Joe's came up to the Mullins Center and got trounced by the Minutemen, the Hawk never stopped. Our student section tried to imitate the mascot and couldn't. What a great mascot.

Conversely, the one thing I remember about the Temple Owl was its cheap shot on the Minuteman prior to Victory No. 1. Classless.

I'm not going to babble on for the umpteenth time on L'affaire Chaney. Classless.

And now the Owls come to town expecting to win tomorrow night in the Mullins Center. Talent–wise, damn straight they can leave with a win. Should they? Hell no. The Minutemen are undefeated in Death Roe because they have guys who will make the big shot — Mike Williams. Enough said. But that has to do with basketball on the court.

Calipari has always stressed that, "UMass fans are the classiest fans in America." Believe him if you want to, but that is the test for tomorrow night's crowd.

Because the game is the A–10 championship, the ticket distribution is different. UMass will take up about 60 percent of the crowd. The other 40 percent, you ask? Temple faithful, all the way up from Philly.

They are coming here, trying to show up the Massachusetts crowd as well as the team. They really think they're going to win. This season, UMass fans have been criticized for being uncreative, unenthusiastic and just plain boring. A lot of people have said that the fans expect the Minutemen to win and they really don't care. If they don't care tomorrow night, Temple will rule Mullins.

So when the teams take the court tomorrow night, let John Chaney know what you think of his Owls. Let the Minutemen know what you think of them. Show ESPN the same fire and emotion that has allowed the University of Massachusetts the opportunities on national television in the first place.

But, most importantly, when the game is over and the winner hoists the A–10 trophy at center court, stop the fanfare. It is a basketball game. Remember that these two teams have a legitimate shot at the Final Four and the national championship. Don't be like Temple.

Classless.

Men's gym overcomes injuries in win

By DAVID GLEESON
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team overcame a number of injuries on Sunday afternoon to pull out a victory at Springfield College, 265.35–261.05, and improve its record to 5–3.

UMass senior co–captain Jason Braud injured his hand on the first event, floor exercise, and as a result only scored a 7.0 in the event. He was forced to sit out the rest of the meet.

Braud consistently scores big points for the Minutemen and his absence was a factor in keeping the meet close. His injury is day to day and it is not known how he will be when UMass hosts the ECAC Championships this weekend.

"I think he'll be O.K. for Saturday," said UMass Coach Roy Johnson. "We're taking it a day at a time."

In addition, freshman Ruslan Shupak, after taking first on the still rings, injured his knee as he landed his vault. Despite the injury, Shupak scored a 9.35 to take first place in that event. Shupak was able to finish the meet and took second place on parallel bars; however, due to his injury, it is not known when he will be ready for competition again.

The Minutemen started the meet by losing one of their strongest events, floor exercise, and Springfield seized the momentum. UMass also dropped the second event by a small margin, but battled back to win the still rings and even up the score after three events.

UMass increased its edge by winning the vault and taking the lead by 1.4 points, but the margin was small with two events remaining.

According to Johnson, the momentum swung toward the Minutemen when the competition moved to the parallel bars. Springfield's first competitor scored only a 7.75, which was followed by a performance from UMass' Lorenzo Macaluso that "took the wind out of their sails."

Macaluso hit a 9.1, and his routine included two back tosses, landing each in a handstand.

"Lorenzo's routine was unbelievable," said Johnson. "Our momentum really picked up after that."

Minutemen that followed Macaluso included Pete Degenhardt and Gabe Columbus, who both tied for first on the bars. The pair scored a 9.4 for personal bests, which also tied the UMass record on the event.

With a comfortable lead after parallel bars, UMass needed only to have an average performance on the last event, high bar, which they won by a small margin to lock the win.

Minuteman freshman Gabe Columbus won the high bar with a 9.2, propelling him to his fourth first place finish in all–around competition with 53.55 points.

UConn's Marshall a finalist

By JIM O'CONNELL
Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) — Donyell Marshall had the shortest trip to make and took the longest to get there.

The junior forward from Connecticut was among the five finalists announced Tuesday for the U.S. Basketball Writers Association Player of the Year Award. He, Grant Hill of Duke and Glenn Robinson of Purdue all made the trip to New York, while Clifford Rozier of Louisville and Jason Kidd of California were unable to attend. Marshall's 100–mile trip from Storrs, Conn., was supposed to be a breeze since it was arranged for him to fly to New York by helicopter. That plan went haywire because of heavy fog, and attempts at commerical flights were thwarted at almost every turn. Finally, Marshall and Huskies coach Jim Calhoun caught a flight and then fought through New York traffic to arrive at the news conference almost 90 minutes after it began.

That didn't bother Marshall.

"The plans got changed around and there was a lot of traffic, but we finally made it," Marshall said. "They wouldn't let the helicopter take off. I'm kind of glad it got canceled. I was trying to get out of that ride since yesterday when I found out we had to take the helicopter."

That Marshall doesn't want to go up in the air seems strange considering the way he has played this season in leading the No. 2 Huskies to the Big East regular–season championship. He has averaged 25.5 points and 9.0 rebounds and stood out as Connecticut reached its highest ranking in school history.

"He is probably the finest basketball player that I have been involved with," Calhoun said. "Equally important, he is one of the finest people I have been involved with. In 22 years of coaching I don't think I have a kid with so much ability, yet so much talent. I also don't think I've ever had a player care so much about his teammates and not about himself."

Say What?

"I know this is bad timing, but I wanted to be a baseball player when I grew up."

Women priests ordained

LONDON — While preparing to ordain its first women priests on Saturday, the Church of England called on one outspoken clergyman to accept the change or consider giving up the calling. The Rev. Anthony Kennedy, 62, was quoted by a newspaper Wednesday as describing women priests as "bloody bitches" who should be burned at the stake.

"I can't represent the Virgin Mary, and a woman can't represent Christ," the Guardian newspaper quoted Kennedy as saying. Kennedy said he knew his "colorful language" might cause offense but that his own parishioners enjoyed it. A women who is to be ordained in a nearby parish took it as a joke and plans to send him a box of matches, he said.

The state Church of England, mother church of the worldwide Anglican Communion, will ordain women as priests for the first time on Saturday. Hundreds of women are expected to be ordained in the next few months.

Bomb blasts courtroom

EUSKIRCHEN, Germany — A man fined for battering his girlfriend walked calmly from a courtroom Wednesday, then came back blazing away with a pistol. He left again and returned with a bomb in a backpack. He set it off without saying a word.

Seven people died — the bomber, his girlfriend, the judge, a witness, two lawyers and a woman described variously as the man's mother or mother–in–law. Fifteen people were wounded, two critically, in the worst non–political crime that German police could recall.

The explosion buckled masonry and walls of the unguarded, three–story misdemeanor courthouse in Euskirchen, a town of 50,000 people about 15 miles west of Bonn. The blast threw the bomber's body through a window into the street and scattered bloody law books, shards of glass and bits of furniture.

NASA honors cosmonaut

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Space shuttle Columbia's astronauts paid tribute Wednesday to Soviet cosmonaut Yuri Gagarin, the world's first space traveler, on what would have been his 60th birthday.

"To honor this occasion, the crew of Columbia salutes the first human to fly in space and we send our greetings to all space explorers everywhere, both in orbit and on Earth," shuttle commander John Casper said.

On April 12, 1961, Gagarin became the first person in space. American Alan Shepard followed three weeks later.

Gagarin was killed in 1968 at age 34 in a plane crash.

Casper sent special greetings to the three American astronauts in Russia, two of whom are undergoing cosmonaut training and one of whom will fly on Russia's Mir space station next year.

Ads promote health plan

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. — With President Clinton's health proposals under fire in Washington, a national coalition opened a television ad campaign Wednesday to boost his plan and take a swipe at the insurance industry.

"Something must be done to stop insurance companies from overcharging consumers, arbitrarily denying patients' claims, and dropping their coverage," said James Gaffney, a regional spokesman for the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees.

He spoke at his group's city offices during a news conference sponsored by his organization and other representatives of the Washington–based Health Care Reform Project. The project is a giant coalition of labor, business and consumer groups that support the basic elements of Clinton's reform plan.

Farrakhan speaks to sell–out crowd

Nation of Islam leader discusses race, charges of anti–Semitism

By CATHERINE B. PULLEY

Minister Louis Farrakhan gave University of Massachusetts students "their money's worth" last night with a three and a half hour dialogue in the Fine Arts Center in front of a capacity crowd that was delayed for over an hour due to inclement weather and tight security.

The leader of the Nation of Islam spoke passionately before a crowd that jumped to its feet many times during the course of the evening, and spoke of means to "heal the black community."

Later in the speech, he spoke to Jewish students directly in defense of the accusations and the media controversy.

Crowds began at 5:30 to see the controversial minister as camera crews from major television networks lined the area that surrounded the theater.

> "You have the nerve to say Farrakhan is not a Muslim. I am not your kind of Muslim."
> –Nation of Islam Minister Louis Farrakhan

The speech drew approximately 400 protestors in front of the Fine Arts Center. While the protest was peaceful, signs read: "If you liked Hitler, you'll love Farrakhan", "No more bigotry," and "Not with our money."

After opening remarks Farrakhan questioned the maximum security and the struggles that the students needed to overcome. He alluded to the "ten percent" during the evening that controls the African– American society and called them the "blood suckers of the poor."

"What is the furor over Farrakhan? I just got into town," he said. "Now it is my turn."

"What is all this hate I see? I don't teach hate," he said. Farrakhan cited the need for the killings in the inner city to end and criticized the education of African Americans.

Hillel protest sparks anger, outrage over speaker's visit

By HENRY BRIER
& JACOB MICHAELS
Collegian Staff

The protest against the bigotry and hatred of Minister Louis Farrakhan began quietly yesterday at the Hillel House. Twenty students attended a short press conference held at 5 p.m. in the front lounge.

Josh Slomich, a member of Hillel, read a short statement, saying that the Newman Center, ARC–Episcopal Chaplaincy, United Christian Foundation and Hillel are sponsoring the protest because of the "hatred and bigotry of Louis Farrakhan and the Nation of Islam." He also said that it would be a peaceful but vocal rally.

Responding to questions, Slomich said depending on the weather, 600 to 1,500 people were expected. He also said he had "complete confidence in the Department of Safety" with regards to any potential problems at the rally.

The protesters then met in the Cape Cod Lounge at 6:30 p.m. and were told to follow guidelines. The organizers ordered that no threats of violence or death be chanted, and no one partaking in the protest wield any kind of weapon. It was clarified that the protest targeted Farrakhan himself, and not those who chose to hear him speak. Also, the protesters were told to stay in the designated area.

"I despise the fact UMass is spending $25,000 to fund bigotry and hatred," said an angry Hillel President Alan Weinfeld. "[Farrakhan] represents hatred, and he does not discriminate. We're here to

Celebration honors women

By KARA MATSON
Collegian Correspondent

In recognition of International Women's Day, a day dedicated to fighting for equal rights for women all over the world, the Student Activities Office presented an "International Women's Event" to celebrate the talents of the women of the University of Massachusetts.

Tuesday night in the Cape Cod Lounge in the Student Union, voices could be heard singing folk songs and reading poetry, while some women played the guitar and piano.

The first group introduced by Gloria A. Santa Anna, the Graduate Intern in the Student Activities Office, was "Okama Chali," a trio of Puerto Rican women. Jessica Arocho, Sandra Rivera, and Sandra Valentin, all UMass students, performed folk songs in Spanish and English. One group member explained that the significance of their name, which means "Listen Delight" is "to remind us of our background" and to acknowledge ethnic groups that have contributed to their culture.

Marilyn Wharton, a graduate student at UMass, read poems written by African–American women, including "Coal" by Audre Lorde, "The Heart of a Woman" by Georgia Douglas Johnson and "Lover of Darkness," her own work, written in response to a passage from the Bible.

"There are a lot of cages African–American women are caught in," said Wharton. "Once we get past those cages, we can live a full life. This is a recurrent theme that has stayed with us throughout history."

Wendy Gorman, UMass student and member of the UMass Theatre Guild played the piano and sang "Winter" by Tori Amos. Jen Eastman, also a UMass student and member of the UMass Theatre Guild, sang an acapella rendition of "The Rainbow Connection."

Yehudit Heller, assistant director of Hillel, said, "When we listen to poets from around the world, we'll find a lot in common. We inherit memories through generations." Heller read her own poetry, and that of other Jewish women in Hebrew, and her daughter followed with an English translation.

The UMass Gospel Choir, led by musical director Natasha Springer, added a festive finale to the night in their first performance of the semester.

Groups unite to rally against Israeli killings

By JUSTIN DOYLE
Collegian Staff

The Hebron Massacre was an event which occurred in a country halfway across the globe, but was felt by students here at the University of Massachusetts.

Today at noon on the Student Union steps, the Muslim Students Association, Radical Student Union and the Third World Affairs Office are sponsoring a rally to protest the Hebron Massacre.

The rally will protest the massacre of dozens of Palestinian Muslim worshippers killed in Hebron, Israel on Feb. 25 by Barukh Goldstein, an Israeli settler and political activist. Goldstein entered the Ibrahimi mosque wearing a military uniform and carrying a rifle. He opened fire and killed 62 Muslim worshipers at morning prayer.

"He forced his way into the mosque wearing an Israeli Army uniform and carrying a rifle," said Abdul Kanaan, the Vice President of the Muslim Student Organization. "He was shooting for 10 minutes before the Israeli Army arrived at the Mosque."

The massacre happened shortly after 5 a.m. when the mosque was crowded with worshippers for prayers during Ramadan, the Muslim month of fasting. Goldstein was subdued and killed inside the mosque.

The organizations will speak out against the Israeli government which has refused to disarm settlers, who are intent on sabotaging the peace process according to Kanaan.

"We are protesting the acts of terrorists or extremists," Kanaan said. "We are upset that the Israeli government will put the blame on an extremist, then do nothing about it."

The sponsors of the rally are in support of the peace effort in Palestine, according to Kanaan.

"I want to stress that the rally is not against the Jewish," Kanaan said. "We are only protesting extremists in Israel."

The speakers at the rally will included Charles Lenchner, president of the Radical Student Union, Elise Young, a Teaching Assistant in the History Department and Nelson Acosta, president of the Third World Affairs Office.

Flower festival proceeds to help cancer research

By BEN GEMAN
Collegian Staff

There may be snow on the ground today but the American Cancer Society is giving local residents the opportunity to welcome the coming of spring, contribute to cancer research and receive a beautiful bouquet of daffodils all at the same time.

On Wednesday, March 23, the Hampshire Unit of the American Cancer Society is sponsoring its 10th annual Daffodil Day festival, part of a nationwide program in which volunteers deliver pre–ordered bouquets of daffodils to local residents.

"It's the major fundraiser for the American Cancer Society...The daffodil is the first flower of spring and it's a flower of hope," said the Hampshire Unit's Daffodil Day Co–Chair Denise Goggins.

The funds raised from the sale of the daffodils, shipped from Washington State, go to cancer research, public education and patient service programs.

People interested in buying daffodils as a way of contributing to the American Cancer Society can either pre– order bouquets to be delivered on March 23 or get them in stores of the event's sponsor, CVS, during the week of March 21.

Event organizers are expecting strong sales of daffodils this year.

"There is a long history in Hampshire County of very strong, very sucessful Daffodil Day sales," said Leslie Frederte, director of the Hampshire Unit of the American Cancer Society.

"We usually raise between $15,000 and $20,000 a year in our area," Goggins said.

Monday, March 14 is the last day to pre–order a bouquet of 10 daffodils. Bouquets are $5, or $10 to have the bouquet come in a vase.

People interested in receiving bouquets should contact the American Cancer Society's Pioneer Valley Office at 536– 2255.

White House aides to testify

By LARRY MARGASAK
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Clinton told aides to "be very open" Wednesday, a day before they faced grand jury questioning in the probe of possible meddling in the Whitewater investigation. The special prosecutor pleaded on Capitol Hill for Republicans to hold off their own hearings.

> "We have assured the counsel we can conduct our hearings in a manner which will not deter or preclude him from carrying out his responsibilities."
> – Senator Alfonse D'Amato

With aides summoned to testify on Thursday, the White House bundled relevant papers for prosecutors. The appearances of at least two of President Clinton's closest aides — Bruce Lindsey and Harold Ickes — were postponed.

Special prosecutor Robert B. Fiske called the Clinton administration "very responsive and cooperative" after trying to persuade Republicans to delay congressional hearings until he completes his inquiry into whether the White House attempted to influence the investigation.

He said he planned to finish that part of his inquiry within a few months, after which he would have no objections to hearings. Fiske won half a loaf from the lawmakers he met with.

Republican Sens. Alfonse D'Amato and William Cohen said they couldn't agree with his request to hold off on all hearings. However, both said they had assured Fiske that prosecutors would get first crack at critical witnesses and that Congress would not grant immunity to anyone it called to testify.

Congress granted immunity to crucial witnesses in the Iran–Contra hearings, a factor in the reversals of several convictions.

"We have assured the counsel we can conduct our oversight hearings in a manner which will not deter or preclude him from carrying out his responsibilities," D'Amato said.

Fiske is probing the failure of Arkansas' Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan Association and whether investors in the Whitewater land venture — including President and Hiliary Rodham Clinton — benefited from questionable Madison transactions during the 1980s.

As part of his investigation, Fiske is examining a series of meetings between White House officials and federal regulators who were looking into Whitewater — contacts that raised questions about whether the investigation could have been compromised.

Guards let gunman into mosque

Man who killed at least 30 had no trouble getting in

By KARIN LAUB
Associated Press

HEBRON, Occupied West Bank — An Israeli inquiry commission retracing gunman Baruch Goldstein's steps heard Wednesday that army guards let him enter the Hebron mosque even though he wore a marksman's protective headset and carried a bag of ammunition. The major in charge of the guard detail greeted Goldstein at the entrance and asked why he was wearing an army uniform.

"I'm doing reserve duty," the Jewish settler answered, then walked unhindered into the Tomb of the Patriarchs where he opened fire, killing at least 30 Muslims kneeling in prayer.

The new details confirmed earlier testimony by army commanders who said security was lax before the Feb. 25 massacre, with only half the 10 guards reporting for duty.

Hundreds of troops patrolled outside while the five-member commission spent four hours Wednesday reconstructing the shooting spree inside the fortress-like shrine in central Hebron.

The site, holy to both Muslims and Jews, has been closed since the massacre that disrupted the Israel-PLO peace talks.

Tensions remain high between the city's 80,000 Palestinians and 450 Jewish settlers living in six enclaves. The Palestinians have been confined to their homes under an army-imposed curfew since the massacre, while armed Jewish settlers walked around freely.

In the Tomb, the commission met with Hebron's chief Muslim official, Sheik Saleh Natsheh.

"We are asking you to bring the truth to light for the sake of our two peoples, so they can learn a lesson," Natsheh told the commission head, Supreme Court Chief Justice Meir Shamgar, according to a pool transcript.

Natsheh complained to Shamgar that Israeli authorities had destroyed important evidence by cleaning up the massacre site, including washing blood-soaked prayer carpets.

The clergyman told Shamgar he would testify before the commission in Jerusalem after the weekend holiday marking the end of the Muslim fasting month of Ramadan.

Army investigator Yoav Gallant, citing testimony by two guards, said Goldstein was dropped off at the Tomb by a white car. He wore an anti-noise headset of the type used at shooting ranges and carried a purple bag with seven ammunition clips inside.

The major in charge of the guards, identified only by his last name, Rotem, said he didn't see Goldstein wearing headsets. He said that after his brief exchange with Goldstein about the uniform, he lost sight of the settler.

Rotem, deployed at a point where Muslims turn left and Jews right to their respective prayer halls, insisted Goldstein didn't get past him and must have entered through a side door in the Jewish section. But army investigators said they believed Goldstein entered the mosque at the main entrance.

Chancellor's Awards For Multiculturalism

On behalf of the Chancellor, you are invited to nominate an outstanding individual most worthy of recognition for his or her contributions toward a diverse, multicultural campus. A Certificate of Appreciation and four $1,000 awards will be presented at a special event to honor and celebrate their achievements.

One award each will be presented to an undergraduate student, a graduate student, a staff member, and a faculty member of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst. Faculty members are invited to use their award for research or scholarships.

Criteria will be based upon: (a) original contributions to the University; (b) attainment of high priority objectives; (c) crises of "beyond the call of duty" service; (d) achievement of significant improvements in the area of teaching or curriculum development; and (e) promotion of the awareness of multicultural issues and concerns.

Nominations should be written and include specific reasons or examples based on the above criteria, along with biographical and other pertinent information (including a resume or vitae, if possible) regarding the nominee's current position on campus.

Nominations should be submitted by

Injustices toward women discussed

By SONIA PAZ
Collegian Staff

The Five College Women's Studies Reasearch Center sponsored a colloquium with Laurie Nissonoff on Women and Economic Development: Family Policy and Third World Women in the Labor Force last Tuesday. Nissonoff specifically chose this date for her colloquium because it was International Women's Day.

Laurie Nissonoff

International Women's Day is a day set apart for the recognition of the need for equality for all women, all over the world. With this in mind, Nissonoff spoke her yet untitled book dealing with these such issues.

During her presentation, she explained how her soon to be published book was broken into four sections. Each one of these sections focuses on how women all over the world have been affected by being in the labor force in a modern society.

The sections discuss all aspects of issues that women deal with in the work force. These issues include theories on how partriarchies were developed, the invisibility of women's labor and women's labor being seen as "unskilled."

The main issue that evening focused on the injustices towards women in China. Due to the large population in China, there is the "one child per family law," in hopes of being able to raise the standards of living and increasing national production and income.

According to Nissonoff, this posed a serious problem due to the cultural importance of having a male child; if families were only allowed to have one child, the need for a boy rather than a girl is greatly amplified.

"If a family has more than one child, especially in rural areas, they are severely fined, farming profits can be impounded, utilities can be cut off, and the roof can be taken off your house," stated Nissonoff.

In many cases, the lives of infant girls are put in severe danger; many families, in an attempt to have a male child, may put their daughter up for adoption, or in the worst cases, these infants face death. Many times the family will just not register their daughter; but as the daughter grows older, she will realize that without documentation, she will receive no education.

Despite the subject of infanticide, the colloquium ended on a positive note. The women in the audience exchanged stories of women in other countries who banded together regardless of race and class to help each other. For example, SEWA, Self Employed Women's Association, a group at work in India which united women from all class backgrounds for the purpose of helping each other survive on their own.

"Why should you pay to go to college, get your degree, and then be unable to use it to solve the critical problems of your society," he said. "Then join the Army to be all that you could never be."

He said that Black students were only used for football teams and that their talents were being exploited by universities for revenue. He criticized the educational system as being "Eurocentric" and said that African Americans must learn to think for themselves and read their history.

"You get out of college and you don't know if you are a man or a woman," said Farrakhan. "Then someone tells you that you are not a man, and you are not a woman, and you call them a homophobe."

After speaking for three hours Farrakhan spoke directly to the audience to defend himself against his critics. He gestured to the media box several times, who by then had already reached deadlines for Thursday's papers.

"They have tried to make me anti-Semitic," he said. "Since the media did not create me, the media cannot break me."

He then spoke of Muslim groups that speak against him as being "controlled by the 10%" and by the media.

"You have the nerve to say Farrakhan is not a Muslim. I am not your kind of Muslim," he said. The minister said his "duty" as a Muslim is not to tolerate injustice or tyranny. He said the youth of today "lives like animals" and said that "some of the things you do a dog wouldn't do."

Farrakhan answered charges of being anti-White by saying, "I don't hate you because you are White . . . that would be silly. Your Whiteness may be an indication historically speaking but may not be you personally. There are always those people that rise above."

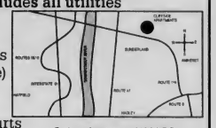
Farrakhan launched into an hour-long dialogue about the Reverend Jesse Jackson and the relationships between African-Americans and Jewish people.

"If you are a fair-minded person, you wouldn't think that I was anti Semitic," he said. Farrakhan said that hating Jewish people would be a violation of his principals and that "Black people never put Jews in ovens," but rather "were the first people to free you in the concentration camps."

Farrakhan called on Jewish students directly by saying, "You should be the most forgiving people in the world," and said that he has been persecuted for ten years because of a "misquoted remark" he made about Hitler.

Farrakhan "spoke the truth" about the Jewish involvement in the slave trade in Brazil, saying that 75% of Jewish people owned slaves. He stated that Jewish leaders in the United States have failed to speak out against the killings in Palestine, but the United States Congress can condemm him for his remarks.

"Don't say that I am anti-Semitic when it was said by your own scholars," he said. "Now you try to put your hands behind your back and act like you did nothing."



Farrakhan criticized the Jewish people in Hollywood with the making of the movie, Malcolm X.

"Spike Lee took the 30 million dollars from the Jewish people, which was like the 30 pieces of gold," he said. "Some Jewish commentators make the movie and said that young people love Malcolm and that is paradoxal since Farrakhan betrayed Malcolm X."

Farrakhan said that he never betrayed Malcolm X, but rather honored the teaching of Elijah Muhammad. Farrakhan also said that Malcolm X's death might have been from an FBI infiltration into the nation.

"What I Really Want to Do is Teach"

You're thrilled by different cultures - or maybe you were raised in one. You've studied a foreign language - or maybe your foreign language is English. You've always appreciated the strength of vivid communication through the written and spoken word - or maybe you've only recently understood its power. You sound like a Teacher of English as a Second Language.

The Master of Arts in Teaching English as a Second Language Program
- allows you to earn a masters degree in education and prepares you for provisional and full certification in 12 months
- provides the option of a year-long paid internship in one of several Greater Boston communities
- offers a scholarship to every degree candidate seeking certification while they student teach equal to nearly one-third the cost of the program
- enhances your understanding of culture and its impact on language acquisition

Trust your first instincts

Remember the days of our cautious youth, when mom and dad told us not to talk to strangers, not to tell people over the phone that we were home alone, and never to hitchhike? Remember when Officer So-and-so came in for show and tell to teach us what to do if we got creepy feelings about iffy grown-ups who were bothering us? Remember being taught to trust our instincts, to go to any measure to ensure our own safety and well-being?

Somehow, along the way to young adulthood, we lose our inhibitions about opening up to strangers. As college students, we are forced to take risks in getting to know people we don't know but, unfortunately, we often forget about the whole safety factor. Last week I learned the hard way that this is simply not wise to do so.

It is important for us to be aware of and trust our instincts regarding our safety in strange or dangerous situations.

Emily Marino

The initial situation was nothing unusual. I met a guy who I had known very vaguely, through friends for about a year. I had never really spoken to him for any length of time, but we were at a party and hit it off very well. He was very charming and warm, intelligent and funny.

I saw a lot of him in the next few days, to my bewilderment, and started to feel claustrophobic. A red flag went up in my mind when he swapped by my apartment late one night, unannounced and uninvited, after he had been out for a few drinks with a friend. This weirded me out; the hour was late and he seemed pretty drunk. He left after a while and I went to bed wondering if I was being too cautious in feeling as uncomfortable as I did about his visit.

A couple days later my friend Sean was over studying when this guy called. Wanting Sean to check him out, I invited him over to study with us. Eventually my friends Art and Laura came over to have a few drinks and unwind from a long day.

This guy proceeded to get really drunk — drunker than I had ever seen him. He became loud and obnoxious; the neighbors called to complain about the noise while he started hitting on my friends, who were rolling their eyes at his absurd behavior.

While he was walking Laura home (he insisted, and Sean kept a close eye on them through the window) I asked Art and Sean to please get rid of this guy, and pretended to fall asleep. When he came back they told him that they were leaving, and that my housemate and I were going to bed. Planning to come right back, my friends escorted this guy outside and made like they were leaving.

Not five minutes after my friends returned, the guy walked into my apartment without even a knock. Obviously surprised to see Art and Sean, he nonetheless took a look at me, who was supposedly asleep, and asked Sean if I was passed out on the couch with what Sean described as "a messed-up look that lasted a little too long."

They got rid of him and locked the door. I couldn't believe that this guy actually walked right in, uninvited. Then I remembered that he had returned thinking that the guys had left me and my roommate alone in the apartment, and thought of what might have happened had they actually left.

Before I could sigh with relief he came back; knocking only after having tried to open the locked door. By this time I was terrified, and couldn't comprehend what was motivating this guy to keep bothering us.

Art, Sean and my roommate kicked him out again. He left loudly and with much hostility, and I called the police to file a complaint. They sent an officer over who basically told us that they couldn't do anything to this guy until he actually broke into the apartment, and that I should consider a new study partner in the future.

The kind of response the police gave me reinforced the ambiguity that I had felt throughout the entire situation. Was I making a big deal out of nothing? Was I overreacting?

I think back to how differently the situation would have turned out if I had not been surrounded by supportive friends that night. I think of how many women who are sexually harassed or raped doubt their own actions leading up to the event or even blame themselves, and know that I am not overreacting.

It is important for us to be aware of and trust our instincts regarding our safety in strange or dangerous situations. As I discovered, our instincts are probably accurate, and can serve as our best defense against personal harm.

It saddens me to think that while we so easily trust others, we rarely trust our own impressions, feelings and thoughts. It saddens me even more that we have to.

Meet me at The Junction

Here we are. Yet another installation of Notes from the Campus Center Basement, the forum of choice for complaining about and ridiculing the University and its administration.

First of all, I would like to direct your attention to the hallway near the University Store. This passage over the weekend took on a new look. It isn't just "the tables outside the Coffee Shop" anymore. No, it's The Junction.

Lisa Jezowski

Who decided that a row of vending machines and pay phones needed to be called anything at all? For a school which can't even name its own buildings, naming what is basically the entrance to the Campus Center Garage is crazy.

Now, I'm not saying I do or don't support the activists working to name the library, but c'mon... The Junction?

Also, as far as the Campus Center is concerned, what is that green crumbly stuff that the janitors sweep around? Someone once told me it was disinfectant. I personally have no need for a Campus Center floor that's sterile enough to eat from, do you? A little Mop and Glo would go a lot further.

Disclaimer for anyone who is crazy enough to be tired of hearing about the basketball team by now: don't read this — skip directly to the next set of asterisks.

The matchup. Tonight I'll be the one with the ass-kicking boots on. Sports at this school are great. I love being able to join in with 9,000 of my closest friends and act like I have the I.Q. of a potato. What a release. Maybe the excitement will even get to season ticket holder and Dean of Students Jo Ann Vanin. Maybe she'll do the unthinkable — possibly smile, and maybe even... stand up. Nah.

No, really. I really think that the athletic program is one of the few things that's exciting and successful at this University. If I can't get a seat in my lecture in Thompson, at least I can find a spot at the Mullins Center.

On a related note: hats off to the Mini-Minutemen. Even though half of you aren't old enough to even read this yet, you're doing a great job.

Hats also go off to the women's volleyball team. Practicing in front of about a thousand basketball fans waiting for tickets in the Cage must have been pretty nerve-wracking. You gals looked great, though. You must have some pretty skinned knees from all those dives. Keep it up.

I've always wanted to play the half-time shootout. It looks like fun. Sometimes, though, you just want to cry for the people out there doing it, because they look so silly. People will do anything for money.

* * * * *

By the time you read this, the SGA elections will be over. The winner has not been announced as of my deadline for this column. I don't want to belittle any particular candidate, but the whole affair reminded me of the Brady Bunch episode when Marsha and Greg ran against each other for class president.

So many promises were made in this campaign regarding topics that students will never even dream of having control over — such as the University Health Services or the hours that the Dining Commons are open. For someone to think that they can single-handedly mandate that the D.C. will stay open later is insane. I can't even mandate that the light bulbs in the back hall of my office will get replaced. (But I can, however promise that when someone trips, falls and gets hurt, some administrator somewhere isn't going to be too thrilled.)

Trying to accomplish anything at this school that might actually be an improvement is to attempt to achieve the impossible. I know that when I come back to UMass many years from now for a reunion, the stairwell in Herter near the large lecture halls will still smell like rotten maple syrup, and those stalagmites on the floor and stalactites on the ceiling will still be there. Only bigger.

I'm the type of person who would love to donate my first million dollars to UMass. I'm not going to do that, though. Because it would not go to building repairs. It would, instead, pay administrators' salaries and give people jobs so that they can sit around and think of important things... like The Junction.

Opinion

Remembering Dr. Gunn

This past Saturday, a judge in Pennsacola, Florida, found Michael F. Griffin guilty of the murder of Dr. David Gunn. He sentenced him to 25 years to life in prison. Gunn was killed March 10, 1993, and it took a year for justice. Normally, this would not merit any special attentions, except that Gunn was not killed during a robbery or theft. He was killed because he was a doctor who performed abortions.

Marni E. Helfner

Gunn staffed eight clinics in Florida, Mississippi, and Alabama, travelling from clinic to clinic as often as three times a week. He openly challenged anti-choice protestors who tried to blockade his clinics. Gunn also performed his services with the additional challenge of being disabled from polio suffered during childhood. It was during a blockade of his clinic that he was shot three times in the back.

He is survived by his girlfriend, Paula Leonard, and a son and daughter. The clinic has still not found a replacement.

Griffin said he killed Gunn because he was performing abortions, and that it was a mandate from God. Dr. Gunn was a courageous man who died at the hands of a crazed madman, who thought he heard the word of "God." Griffin belonged to a church which was associated with Rescue America, a militant anti-abortion organization. The leader of the Pennsecola chapter is John Burt, an ex-Klu Klux Klan member, believed to have been a former Grand Dragon. But are there really any ex-Klansmen?

Leonard has been stalked by Burt and his followers, following her around from place to place, including her mother's home. Burt is militant in his actions, and when asked about violence in relation to anti-abortion tactics, Burt replied, "Whatever it takes." He is also the spiritual leader of four young people who bombed three clinics on Christmas Day, 1984. Kind of ironic don't you think? A day celebrating the birth of the religious leader of the Christian peoples is marked by the violence of four followers of John Burt. Burt has also said that the United States needs to be a country under one church and one type of thinking.

The point behind the concern over the shooting of Dr. Gunn is that here was a man who actively supported the reproductive rights of women who would otherwise have been denied access to reproductive services. In an isolated area of the country, where open-minded medical professionals are scarce, Gunn provided an important resource. He was a medical professional who knew how to, and did, perform abortions.

In most medical schools today, the techniques and methods of abortion are not mandatory, and are often discouraged. The procedure is not required to obtain medical certification. This largely reduces the number of doctors who know how to perform abortions and, for that matter, how to do so safely. Fewer doctors who know how to perform abortions means that there is less access to abortion and other reproductive health care.

Another major blow to the pro-choice movement is the new interpretation of the RICO (Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act) laws. While the Supreme Court ruled in favor of the National Organization of Women in NOW vs. Scheidler, it actually paved the way for the suppression of progressive movements like NOW. The court ruled that the RICO Act can now be applied to political organizations. While the case which created this interpretation involved keeping pro-life activists from harassing patients and off clinic grounds, it also paves the way for arresting anyone who the police believe may be conspiring to gain advantage over another organization. For Rescue America, and the national Operation Rescue, this is defined as clinic defenders, who keep clinics open in spite of the attempts to cower women into submitting.

So, you're asking yourself, what can I do to help the situation? What can I do to keep abortions safe and legal? There's a couple of steps you can take. First, encourage every medical student you know, as well as any doctors, to learn how to perform abortions, as well as to perform them. Second, write to your senator or representative about how the new interpretation of the RICO laws will actually hurt pro-choice activists by making it more difficult to keep clinics open. Third, take action today. Do something; wear a black arm band or ribbon in protest to the death of Dr. Gunn. Volunteer at your local clinic to help out, defend the clinic, or just provide information about reproductive health services. If you're interested in stretching out your spring break, from March 25th to April 2nd, Operation Rescue will be trying to close clinics in Birmingham Alabama and Little Rock Arkansas. To find out more information, contact the National NOW chapter.

So don't just sit there. The death of Dr. Gunn is unacceptable. If you believe in the idea that your body belongs to you and no one else, don't just sit there.

Letters to the Editor

BJRC chairperson responds to letter

To the editor:

On Tuesday, March 1 at 5 p.m., I sat in the Bluewall, waiting for the rest of the members of the Black/Jewish Relations Committee (BJRC) to arrive. Minutes later, I greeted the other members. The last people to join us were Martin Jones, junior journalism major, and a friend of his.

"Wow," I thought, "he hasn't met with the committee for almost two years." I hadn't expected to see him at a meeting this semester, since he failed to show after I invited him to attend on at least two prior occasions, and since he remained elusive and vague when asked how to contact him. Still, I was glad to see a "new" face. An extra body could provide much needed help in putting programs together and getting the word out.

One of the topics Martin brought up was the manner in which the committee and UMass Hillel should address the speech by Minister Louis Farrakhan. Martin was concerned because he felt this was an issue the BJRC must address in without engaging in Farrakhan bashing.

He suggested a positive dialogue, after we mentioned to him the speakers' panel featuring Jules Chametzky of the English department, and Michael Thelwell of the Afro-Am department which we put on this past Monday at which Farrakhan's visit was discussed, as well as Black/Jewish relations in an historical and campus context.

After the meeting adjourned, I mentioned to Martin that I would be driving over to Hillel to attend the Hillel Council meeting as well as the Farrakhan Committee meeting. I felt I should attend this meeting to keep myself informed on another committee's take on the Minister's visit.

At the council meeting, Martin and I both witnessed SGA presidential candidate Mirran Raphaely's identity as a Jewish person come into question as a result of her vote to allocate money for Farrakhan's speech, in a manner which was uncalled for, by one of the non-officer committee members present. Mirran was visibly upset, and I very much regret sitting silent. I mention this because I feel this was probably the "violent attack" that Martin claimed in his letter caused him to walk out. But after this incident, he also stayed silent and stayed put.

Martin decided to stick around for the Farrakhan Committee meeting as well, which mainly dealt with the organization of a planned protest. Martin voiced his disapproval of the protest, stating that members of the black community might have felt alienated and that the protest was directed toward them. Several times during the meeting, the protest's intent, to voice disapproval at Farrakhan's message, was explained.

Martin couldn't seem to grasp the concept and idea behind the protest and, a few minutes later, he uttered some cryptic statements about fear of potential harm that could come to the protestors. After finally managing to clarify his statements so that everyone present understood that he wasn't alluding to a conspiracy; Martin grew extremely frustrated when told that others had to speak so the meeting could proceed. Despite having been given ample time to speak, Martin stood, announced that he could no longer work with Hillel or the BJRC.

The purpose of this letter is to give the students of UMass a different spin on the events of March 1 before the BJRC continues our acts of "goodwill, care and concern" (to quote a student at this University) toward the Black and Jewish communities, completely free of "control and coercion," as always.

Dan Henderson
Chairperson,
Black/Jewish Relations Committee

A.L. Arts & Living Weekly — Break into Spring

The Collegian guide to the biggest vacation week of the year

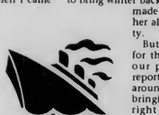
By ROB GHOSH
Collegian Correspondent

Another storm and more snow than anyone knows what to do with. Its novelty has lost its flare for this kid.

As an exchange student from Hawaii, this is the first time that I've lived through a New England winter. Despite all the bitching I have done, I have not only learned the value of long underwear, but have actually realized that the cold isn't all that bad. I do however, long to be back at home in the "sunny and 85 degree" weather that Hawaii has to offer year-round.

I keep asking myself, "Why, why here?" To tell you the truth, UMass looked like one of the better schools that the program had to offer. The real reason that I give to everyone else is that I'm here for a new experience, which I am, but it never occurred to me that this experience would involve a winter this bad.

As soon as it started getting cold last semester, I began longing to see it snow, and hopefully get a chance to fool around in it. When the first snow had fallen, I sat at my window and simply watched it fall. It was so special to see it fall and slowly cover up that brown colored grass that was so dominant around campus. It looked so peaceful and I really didn't want it to melt away.



However, there's something about the feeling of snow seeping through your toes that just doesn't appeal to me. It's nothing like walking along the beaches at home, having the warm sand play its little games through the crevices of your feet. It's nothing like the warm Pacific ocean lapping calmly around your knees. It's more like walking through your freezer, except on a much, much bigger scale.

Since I grew up in Hawaii, I hadn't had much experience with snow, and I wanted to see as much as possible. Unfortunately, it had only snowed twice last semester and I was wishing that I would see more of that white, flaky stuff before I returned to Hawaii for winter break. Little did I know that wish would come back to haunt me.

The anticipation of going home was almost too much to bear, and when I felt the warmth hit my face, I almost cried. It was so long since I had been under sunlight that would actually do more than provide light. The first thing that I did when I got back was to enjoy a local mouth-watering plate lunch, with rice, teriyaki beef and lots of sushi. It was heaven.

Once the local food had coursed through my veins, I began feeling like my old self, and started getting back into the routine I had once lived. My girlfriend (who had been terribly missed) and I decided to hit the beach, and maybe even fall asleep there under the stars. We walked the long black and white sand beaches.

My tan was back, and my stomach was a little rounder than it was when I came home, and I had fulfilled the dreams that were inspired by the cold of simply having fun at home. Of course the break passed by too quickly, and it was time for me to board a plane and return to the cold before I knew it.

The first step I took when I got back to UMass was into a snow drift that hadn't been there when I had left. I fell knee-deep into the white fluff and thought to myself, "Hey, this isn't too bad." I was ready to tackle this new semester and have some fun in the snow. Ha. That was the little naive kid from Hawaii, oh-so long ago that it almost feels like an eternity, when in reality it was only a month and a half ago.

Now, after more than 15 winter storms, I can consider myself a seasoned veteran, for I have survived one of the worst storms Massachusetts has ever seen — and so have the rest of you. I know I am not the only one who is sick of seeing snow, and I think practically everyone out there feels the same way I do.

When Mother Nature decided to tease us with a little taste of Spring two weeks ago, I wanted to run around in the grass and be able to wear shorts again. I was basking in an intoxication that only warmth could inspire, and I began thinking that the worst was behind us and life could return to normal. But no. She had to bring winter back to us ten- fold and it made us even more sick of her almost inhumane cruelty.

But do not fret, UMass, for there is hope. As all of our prestigious weather reports tell us, spring is just around the corner and it's bringing a week-long break right to our doorsteps in two short weeks. You can feel the same anticipation that I did when I was returning to the warmth, and if that doesn't bring you out of those winter blahs, nothing will.

Whether you are going up north to conquer those ski slopes or going someplace warm, as I will be when I jet off to Orlando; or even if you are going to be spending the week at home, make the most of it.

About the remainder of the bad weather: the way I figure it, if this kid from Hawaii can tough out this winter, then so can you — you simply have to make the best of it. Use this Spring Break to its utmost and relax, because there will only be a month and a half of school left when we return — then it's on to summer.

Now, when I ask myself why I'm here I tell myself that I'm not sure, but I am here and I have to make the best of it. Another storm, another day, when will it end? Oh well, I guess this is one of life's little lessons.

Cancun escape not far away

Sunny Cancun awaits.

By EMILY MARINO
Collegian Staff

Somebody recently told me that Spring Break would be here in about a week. I guess that, considering all the work I've had in the past month or so, this will be a good thing.

Actually, I am going away for Spring Break this year for the first time, and am pretty excited about it, although the vacation seems more a wishful distraction than a reality. The sunny beaches of Cancun lurk in my near future, but all I can think about right now is the pile of reading haunting me daily, not to mention a few choice midterms coming my way.

Cancun is a place where you can play non-stop day and night...or where you can simply relax and let its blue-green waters lull you into reverie, the travel brochure says.

Reverie? How about that midterm review on Thursday for Journalism 493? More than half a century of history concerning literary journalism, all packed into one exam. Cool.

Cancun is world famous for its spectacular array of water sports. Spend your days swimming and sunning...or try snorkeling, scuba diving, parasailing or waterskiing.

Tell me about water sports. Walking from Herter to the Campus Center is my personal favorite. With all of the recent snow and rain that has bombarded the campus, my feelings about the "tranquil lagoon" are, at best, ambivalent.

Dining in Cancun is an exceptional experience.

Sleep, movies beautify break

By CALEB COCHRAN
Collegian Staff

Cancun? Daytona Beach? California? Nope. Try sunny Stockbridge, Massachusetts. That's where I'll be spending my spring break. Sound fun? Just listen.

To me, spring break has never been a big deal. I have yet to take a vacation to a warm and sunny haven far away from UMass. Every year, I simply wrap up my dirty laundry in my sheets and take the hour ride home.

I sit around, watching television, rent movies, hang out with high school friends, and sleep a lot. And I do mean a lot. After a week of such activity, I wrap up my clean laundry in my sheets and take the hour ride back to UMass. Call me a simpleton, but this routine works for me.

The last thing I want to deal with my week off is travel. It's still winter, folks, and I don't feel like spending my week off in the airport waiting for that delayed flight to the Bahamas to take off. I'll just lay on my couch and watch the Indiana Jones trilogy over and over and be perfectly happy, thanks.

The mystique of spring break has always eluded me. I watch MTV and see thousands of drunk college kids running around like idiots, moshing to the likes of Joey Lawrence or NKOTB, generally acting the way kids are supposed to act on spring break: like animals who have been let out of their cages.

Maybe it's just me, but I can't figure out the point

Hit the slopes or the stores?

ARAM COMBAKIAN/COLLEGIAN

To ski, or not to ski?

By CHRISTINA ORWICZ
Collegian Staff

This winter has been one of the oddest I've ever experienced. I have been a skier since the age of six, and haven't missed a season since then (well, one year was cut short because I had seven stitches in my head after falling on top of someone's bindings — ouch).

Anyway, for the past four years I have groaned over how East Coast skiing is ludicrous after a trip out West. Well, we got more snow this year than any year in the past decade. So what do I do? You guessed it, stay home.

Besides the fact that I don't have a car, something ate my ski pants, and I've been really busy, somehow I've just been unmotivated. I had an accident last year, tearing the labrum in my right shoulder, causing the darn thing to just pop out at its fancy.

But since tropical dreams of mine were dashed when Dad looked at the check book, we figured we may as well go skiing. It looks like my father, brother and I will be doing the snow thing in a few weeks. I would feel like a complete and utter loser if I didn't hit the trails at least once this year, whereas after this break I will only feel like a partial loser.

Actually, I'd really rather spend the week in New York City. I always have a place to stay and never enough time to do everything I want to. Between the museums, shows, dining experiences and meandering in the Village and Soho,

Male bonding, beer for break

By BRIAN BABINEAU
Collegian Staff

Am I a dork?

Wait, before you answer that, let me explain the reason behind the question. I have never participated in the spring break ritual, at least in most definitive sense, in my previous three years of higher education, nor do I plan to this semester.

I haven't ever packed a car full of barley and hops, maybe one pair of boxers, and a bunch of good buddies and made tracks for the land of beach blanket bingo and dead brain cells. Nor have I ever spent the week with skis strapped to my feet during the day and drinks strapped to my face at night. Does this make me a loser?

I tend to think not, for, aside from the alpine events and tropical party scenes, I do participate in the spring break ritual that underlies the week no matter what you do — that is some serious male bonding and partying. And where do I go to play out this kind of week? No other than that spring break Mecca itself – you guessed it – New Jersey.

Now wait — stop laughing. There is a reason. My freshman year I attended Drew University in Madison, NJ, before transferring to our own State U. In fact, one of the reasons I no longer attend the University is my over- indulgence in the very party rituals that send me back to visit every March.

Now, you have to admit, it sounds intrinsically fun to spend a week partying anywhere without the fear of having to attend an early class the next day with a throbbing head and somersault stomach. Truly, it is almost a fantasy to have the free and crazy aspects of college life without the burden of everyday academic nonsense.

At Drew, I stay in a dorm, I get free food from the cafeteria, but instead of spending the night with my fingers banging out term papers, my fingers bang on Nintendo buttons and clutch twelve ounces of cheap beer. Now doesn't that sound pretty good?

Just imagine, if you will, that the UMass trustees call off school for a week so you can bond with your buddies. You can wake up and watch movies, maybe play some mini-golf or basketball, do a little mall hopping, and put all those silly little brain cells that are so overworked out of their misery.

That is exactly how I see my spring break.

I don't spend a lot of money, but I waste a lot of time. I get all of the perks and none of the burdens. Plus I have the advantage of seeing some good friends who I don't see that often.

Does spring break mean you have to take off to expensive and exotic places to be a slacker? Nope. All it means to me is that I get a week at a school to hang out.

Take some time off in the Garden State. Seven days

Hall hits the Iron Horse

By JON LUPO
Collegian Staff

COURTESY ROTH/LEHMAN
Folk songstress Kristen Hall.

In the world of folk music, earnest women singer/songwriters are a dime a dozen. This perhaps unfair edict only serves to highlight why Kristen Hall is good, damn good. Hall will perform tonight at the Iron Horse in Northampton.

I saw Hall for the first time when she opened for Indigo Girls concert at Great Woods. Her voice, though expressive, was lost in the bustle of the large venue. This makes her appearance at the just–right Iron Horse an honest treat.

Discovered by the Indigo Girls, Hall is a singer/songwriter whose work transcends easy labels. Part folk, with a tinge of country and a wisp of pop, if there's one unifying quality to Hall's music it's Hall herself.

Every song on her latest release, fact and fiction, is a quiet revelation. Most of Hall's songs focus on love; whether it be unrequited, love lost or her own brand of constant craving.

On "Empty Promises," Hall cuts the strings off of a love affair gone wrong while lamenting the loss of something unfinished, unresolved. In "Peaches," Hall assumes the role of the lovestruck partner relating, in a constant stream of questions, the thin line between concern and obsession — all the while keeping tongue firmly in cheek.

But what most impresses about Hall is that each song, whether it be a toe–tapping love letter or a somber romantic eulogy, she is never far from her audience. In a most remarkable way, Hall communicates on a one–way line to her listeners. The raw beauty, power and emotive qualities of Hall and her music speak — and sing — for themselves.

Kristen Hall will perform with special guest Danya B. Kurtz at the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton tonight at 7 p.m. Tickets $8.50 Adv. Call 586–8686 for more information.

Live Law is carnival–like fun

By RODERICK BELTRAN
Collegian Correspondent

Murphy's Law
Pearl Street
March 8, 1994

When a fan of Murphy's Law was asked, "Why do you like Murphy's Law," and, "What are the basic elements of the group which keep the fans wanting more," he collectively replied for both questions, "I like their Ska–core style, their hard–core edge, and the fact that when you listen to their music or go to one of their shows you are guaranteed a good time with their carefree, 24–seven party attitude."

These elements expressed are what have made Murphy's Law a must–see live act over the past couple of years and once again they proved these sentiments during their latest visit to the area.

The purveyors of booze and drug dogma Jimmy Gestapo (vocals), Todd Youth (guitars), Doug E. Beans (drums) and newly acquired bass player known as Phil (who is, according to Gestapo, their 100th bass player to date) were at their best on Tuesday. Their sound was clean and in the forefront while their set was tight without a weakness to be found.

They opened their two–hour set with a song entitled "We Make Holes in Teeth." The fact that this song was entirely made up on the spot was a clear indicator the fans were in for another classic carnival–like atmosphere that has always been a mainstay for Murphy's Law concerts.

The opening was followed by several Murphy's Law classics "Panty Raid," "Beer Bath" and "Quest for Herb."

Other outstanding auditory assaults from the Ska–core geniuses included "Attack of the Killer Beers" from their second album, Back with a Bong. "Deuce" was a surprisingly good cover of a KISS song, after which Youth claimed to have lived out his 13 year guitar God fantasy, and "Bong Song," during which Jimmy Gestapo took part in the smoking and passing around of his preferred plant.

In addition to their music their comedic presence contributed greatly to the concert's appeal. One example occurred during the song "Panty Raid," when many of the female fans decided to relieve themselves of their bras. Gestapo played on the obvious by claiming that maybe one of the bras belonged to, in his words, "A friendly neighborhood skinhead."

"How do we know that with his Doc Marten boots, his shaved head, braces, and leather jacket that his bra couldn't have come unsnapped...my friends we must return it," Gestapo claimed.

Murphy's Law finally closed their set with "All Ska," which erupted the entire scene into a big party with the pit at a frenzied

Spring break bathing suit blues

Diet tips for vacationers suffering swimsuit stress

By BILL BRADLEY

Does this sight make you dread Spring Break?

One week and a day left until spring break, and suddenly you remember that you are going to be on a beach somewhere full of people you want to impress (or at least not be embarrassed in front of).

You go to your closet and try on a bathing suit from last summer, and you swear that it must be someone else's suit. Panic sets in, and your plans to slim down in a week begin.

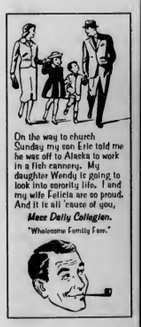
There is some good news and bad news. The bad news is that it's just not going to happen. Any diet plan that you go on today for only one week of fast weight loss is only going to make you feel awful and might make you sick for vacation.

Diets that claim that they will help you lose a lot of weight in a week don't work, because they don't change any of your eating habits overall. Besides being an unhealthy weight loss, it is almost impossible to maintain. Your chances of gaining back the weight plus some are quite high and you then become what is called a "Yo–Yo" dieter. "Yo– Yo" dieters, according to a recent study, are 70% more likely to suffer from heart disease and other medical disorders than dieters who lose weight over a longer period of time and keep the weight off.

Most reports suggest that you should lose no more than one pound a week, not only for health reasons, but also because you are more likely to maintain this amount of weight loss. Some of this weight should come off without any changes in diet if you become more active during the spring and summer.

The good news in all this is that most everyone else is in the same situation you are. Men gain an average of 5–10 lbs. in the winter and women gain 3–5 lbs. This is because activity usually decreases and people tend to eat the same or more during the winter months. It took most of the winter to put this weight on, so you shouldn't try to lose it all in one week.

Instead of using spring break as an excuse to slim down fast you should use it as a starting point to slim down slowly, over a month or two, which is when you will be able to wear a bathing suit in Amherst.



As for spring break, I would suggest that you go and enjoy it. Maybe you can find a bathing suit that fits better or looks better. You will have a more enjoyable time if you just accept where you are with your weight right now.

of traveling a thousand miles away to act like this. For the money you spend on plane fare alone, you could buy about 30 cases of Meister Brau and have enough money left over to hire some belly dancers for the evening. Isn't this what you guys want? It's not as warm here, but beer is beer whether you're drinking it in Amherst or Aruba.

Another reason why I don't feel like going away is because I just spent a semester on exchange at the University of South Carolina, which was basically a three month spring break. I was playing tennis and wearing shorts in late November, my grades didn't count, and I got free tickets for SEC football. If that sounds like reality to you, you've seen a lot more of the world than I have. My favorite thing to do was call up my buddies at UMass and ask how the weather was. Without fail, whenever it was 75 and sunny in SC, it was 45 and rainy at UM.

Anyway, after three months of sun and fun down south, I'm looking forward to a week of fog and slush in my hometown. Call me stupid, but just remember this while you're tanning your can in the sun: We'll all be back in Amherst in a week anyway.

Caleb Cochran Is a Collegian Arts and Living Associate.

I'm always busy while I'm there. I won't even mention the four-lettered-activity (shop).

Last year I spent most of my break in the city. Although the streets were completely flooded with slush, which disguises itself very well as pavement, and there were mountains of snow, if you remember the killer storm, I had a great time.

This year wouldn't be the same, though. I'm not Irish, but in New York on Saint Patrick's Day, everyone is. Even though Saint Patrick's Day is before break, my brother's fiancee lives around the corner from Paddy Reilly's, the joint that Black 47 plays every Tuesday night, thus giving me a chance to gobble some Irish culture down.

Going to the city would also give me a chance to see the C.S.O. (Canine Significant Other) in my life, not to mention important family members. Actually, my mom's house, Lenox, Ma., is really nice this time of the year in addition to a place to sleep, vegetate, and spend quality time with mom and Fluffy (Feline Significant Other).

I could be wrong, but I feel as though I'm going to have to talk myself into going skiing. Maybe I'll have a great time. Maybe my shoulder won't come out of it's right place. Maybe my brother and I won't pick on my father constantly. Maybe my father won't overreact at a situation and freak both of his children out yet once more.

"Hello, Daddy? So, can we talk about Spring Break?"

Christina Orwicz is a Collegian Arts and Living Associate.

You'll enjoy fresh seafood of every kind — savory grilled specialties and tantalizing shrimp and lobster. For a taste of Mexico, sample some of the local dishes...the delicious lime soup or fragrant chicken prepared wrapped in banana leaves. You'll be able to choose from every kink of restaurant — from casual to elegant and from French cuisine to pizza!

I will? Will I also be able to wash dishes in exchange for some of this fine cuisine? Fragrant chicken wrapped in banana leaves? Mmm, sounds good. The last time I saw a banana it was brown and hanging out in my kitchen.

Nightlife in Cancun starts early and ends late. Enjoy the many discos, piano bars, fiesta nights and beach parties.

Now we're talking. With any luck, every night will be fiesta night, and it sounds as though there are actually things to do while you drink, to enhance the entertainment. I wonder if there is an Antonio's in Cancun...

Legend has it that Cancun was once the Eden of Mayan kings — but today it is a paradise for modern sun worshippers.

The sun? That big, yellow ball in the sky that beats down and makes everything warm and happy still shines for someone, somewhere? I will be able to lay on the beach and read, my pages lit by the bright rays of sunlight instead of that toxic neon light in the library.

Just twenty years ago, Cancun was an almost desolate tropical island, untouched since the decline of the Mayan civilization in the 13th century. There were no roads, telephones, or buildings. Today Cancun is an attractive luxury resort area — it's hard to believe the first hotel only opened its doors less than 20 years ago!

No kidding — it's even harder to believe that just 20 minutes ago I was complaining that I didn't have the time to even think about my trip.

For those of you who aren't going away for break, I'm sure you can conjure up a few good things about having this week off. If not, give me a call. I'll let you borrow my Cancun brochure, and just maybe it will put a smile on your face that somewhat resembles the uncontainable grin on mine.

This time around Murphy's Law was accompanied by two groups. A dud local act called Montezuma's Revenge and the surprise of the night, a Worcester based group, Bonehead.

Bonehead had it together musically. They had complex arrangements, technically proficient skills at their instruments and in addition one powerful vocalist. Although due to technical difficulties with their microphones, this band, if not for Murphy's Law, would have been the act of the night.

If Fire Breaks Out in Your Home Tonight, Will You Get Out in Time?

There is a common misconception that smoke will awaken sleeping people if fire breaks out. However, the truth is the toxic smoke actually puts people into a deeper sleep, too often making it impossible for them to escape safely.

That's why smoke detectors are so important. The sound they make provides early warning of fire, giving you and your family extra time to get out alive. And that's what it's all about.

Test your smoke detectors today. Replace the batteries with new ones if needed, and test them regularly from now on. It could save your life.

Hadley wants ticket tax

Surcharge for Mullins Center events might help roads

BOSTON (AP) — State legislators were asked Wednesday to settle a dispute between the University of Massachusetts and the town of Hadley, which wants to add a $1 tax to the price of tickets for events held at the school's new arena.

Hadley officials say they need the money to help pay for police and road maintenance expenses to accommodate traffic to the William D. Mullins Memorial Center.

But UMass officials say the surcharge would hurt the center's ability to compete with other cities for concerts and other entertainment events that are needed to help balance the arena's budget.

The arena sits in Hadley, next to the main campus in Amherst. Roberta Crosbie, town administrator for Hadley, told the Legislature's Taxation Committee on Wednesday the town loses $465,000 a year in revenues because the arena and other university facilities are exempt from property taxes.

Supporters of the ticket tax said it could raise up to $300,000 a year for the town.

"Our needs far exceed our revenues," Crosbie said. "The users are paying in this. We are not taxing the university."

The ticket surcharge would only apply to for-profit events at the center, which has hosted the Boston Pops and pop singer Elton John since it opened last year.

The chaige would not be added to education-related or athletic events, such as UMass basketball games.

Richard Conner, director of state relations at UMass, said the university did not disagree that the center has had an impact on Hadley.

"We would just differ over how to solve these problems," he said.

Former state Rep. Kenneth Lemanksi, who is now the university's director of governmental relations, said the Legislature faces two options: rejecting the ticket tax and giving money to Hadley or passing the ticket tax, which would increase the chances of a budget deficit at the center and possibly require a state bailout.

But Rep. Angelo Scaccia, D-Boston, co-chairman of the committee, suggested the university might be able to negotiate an agreement with the town.

"There is a direct burden" on Hadley, which is looking for some financial relief, he said.

stand up and tell this country that bigotry and hatred will not be tolerated. Campus is so tense you can cut it with a knife. But we're going to be peaceful."

The mass departed the Cape Cod Lounge at about 7 p.m. and proceeded towards the Haigis Mall, part of which had been sectioned off to accommodate the protestors.

Another protester, Chaim Adelman, the Rabbi of Chabad House, came out because "It's important we make a statement against deplorable actions. Hatred, bigotry and all we've seen. People of all different backgrounds have joined us against this individual, to promote goodness around the world."

Many people held placards with quotes such as, "If you liked Hitler, you'll love Farrakhan!," "What would happen If UMass paid David Duke to speak?" and "Sharpton. . . Jeffries. . . and now Farrakhan. . . where does it end?"

At the start of the protest, there were about 400 people present. Father Francis Lavelle, of the Newman Center, expressed disappointment at the turnout.

"I would be happier if there had been a greater turnout," he said. Lavelle added that he was concerned about the apathy, not just at UMass, but in America in general, about anti-Semitism and bigotry.

There were a number of people who spoke through a bull horn, to the cheers of the crowd. Speakers included Rabbi Saul Perlmutter of Hillel, Lavelle, Reverend Chris Carlysle of the ARC-Episcopal Chaplaincy, Weinfeld, Slomich, Hillel member Robyn Novick and others.

However, the inclement weather caused the majority of protestors to leave between 8 p.m. and 8:30 p.m. While there were still about 20 people waiting to get into the Fine Arts Center, all but around 30 protestors had left.

Your Horoscope

By Joose Dixon

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Yielding to impulse could be costly now. Keep expenses down and emphasize thrifty habits. Listen to the advice of experts when making investments.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): The ways and means to get things done occupy your thoughts. Although routine work gets swift, solo efforts may suffer a yo-yo feel notable. A late afternoon phone call favors your spirits.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Casual handling of minute details will make you look like a real goof. Verbal or written proposals are well received. A loved one seeks your advice: give it.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Expect the unexpected! Influential people may attempt to get out of business commitments. Your ability to operate calmly when under pressure will help keep your ship afloat.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Friends and events at a distance are a good bet for today. Launch a new project. Entertaining business associates in your home puts you relationship on a new footing. Your love life sparkles!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): An overly lax day for negotiating contracts. You could seal a deal that means long- term security. Let negative thoughts walk the plank! A single, sensitive error. Attend a large public event.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Today could be emotionally charged! Best to seek refuge in solitary projects. A stove you've resented months ago could be returned without warning. Romance may be "only tonight."

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): It is up to you to set a good example for others. Show good taste in everything you do. Your romantic aims may sometimes seem like an impossible dream. Keep on believin'.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Using a contemporary approach will improve your chances for career success. A unique idea could add cultural experiences to the years to the joining.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Reviewing the past could give you the answers you need to get a business back on track. Children need guidance and friends. Regular events are attended your mental outlook as well as your health.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Review a difficult situation personally. An overdue assessment may be totally misleading. Good luck at companies you where you travel. Family members may need more attention.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): It is an idea is not sizable discard it promptly. To save time and money, I squandered responsibilities will open the door to career advancement. A co-worker could put you in a romantic spot.

Temple left out of expanded Big East

NEW YORK (AP) — Rutgers and West Virginia were invited to join the Big East Conference full-time Wednesday, leaving Temple and Virginia Tech as strictly football members.

The expansion to 12 schools was a compromise, with the 15-year-old conference facing the prospect of adding schools or breaking up over football, and will avoid divisional play.

"For all of us who have been dealing with it for the last four months we're glad it's over," Big East commissioner Mike Tranghese said. "We're excited about Rutgers and West Virginia and disappointed for both Temple and Virginia Tech. There just wasn't the support for the move to 14 schools."

The addition of the two teams for basketball will not take effect until the 1995-96 season since Rutgers and West Virginia are committed to the Atlantic 10 for next season.

Temple president Peter Liacouras, called the decision a "disappointment."

"For several years, we have recognized the advantages of being part of an all-sports conference of similar institutions," he said. "We have worked hard to achieve that objective."

Shupak, who is currently twelfth in the nation in vaulting, and fourteenth on still rings. Senior Jason Braud is fourteenth in the eastern region in vaulting and twenty-fifth in floor exercise.

During the Minutemen's last victory against Springfield College, UMass gymnasts Jason Braud and Ruslan Shupak sustained injuries; both are deemed day to day.

It is expected that they will be able to compete, but will remain unconfirmed until Saturday morning's competition. If either does not compete, Coach Johnson said the team has "a lot of depth," and would just have to get these gymnasts prepared.

Johnson said he was looking forward to a very exciting meet, and a good performance by his Minutemen.

"I think we can win the meet," said Johnson. "It will be a good chance for a lot of our individuals to get recognition and win events."

(Southeast) and Southern Illinois (West) are my No. 12 seeds.

No. 13s are as follows: SW Louisiana (East), Wisconsin- GB (Midwest), Weber State (West) and James Madison (Southeast). Drexel, Tennessee State, Wisconsin (yes, a 14) and Murray State fan at-large berth for the Racers) are No. 14s. No. 15s: Central Florida (Southeast), SW Texas St. (Midwest), Coppin St. (East) and Tenn.-Chattanooga (West). The final four seeds? Liberty (Southeast), Holy Cross (East), Loyola (Midwest) and Southern (West).

Obviously, because of conference tournament upsets, I may have miscalculated one or two teams, so show up to the hotel Sunday at about 5:30 p.m. with this bracket and rearrange as needed. (All hoops fans asserting my insanity should address letters to: Holding Court, Collegian, 113 Campus Center, UMass.)

sixth spot and now must face the third-seeded Hawks.

All is not lost for the Minutewomen though.

In the first loss, St. Joseph's scored 42 points in the second half — after scoring only 16 in the first on 16 percent shooting — capped off by Kristen Sullivan's hoop with 58.7 seconds left for the margin of victory. Sophomore center Melissa Gurile led the Minutewomen with 15.

After trailing by two at the half in the second one, the Hawks hit eight of eight from the free throw line down the stretch to come away with the win.

The winner of tonight's game adavnces to the tournament semifinals against the winner of No. 2 George Washington and No. 7 Duquesne.

Michigan St. 94, No. 18 Indiana 78

EAST LANSING, Mich. (AP) — Shawn Respert scored 40 points to help Michigan State improve its NCAA tournament chances with a 94-78 victory Wednesday night over 18th-ranked Indiana.

The Spartans (19-10, 10-7 Big Ten), who overcame a career-high 41 points from Alan Henderson, won their fifth straight and kept alive their chances for a 20-win season. Michigan State closes the regular season on Saturday at Penn State.

Henderson also had 13 rebounds for Indiana (18-8, 11-6). His 41 points were the most scored against the Spartans since Steve Alford had 42 for Indiana on Feb. 4, 1987.

The slumping Hoosiers have lost three of their past four. The Spartans led 48-40 at the half, but Indiana took a 61-59 lead with 13:54 to play on Henderson's 3-pointer. Respert and Daimon Beathea then hit back-to-back layups to put the Spartans back in the lead, starting a 9-0 run that ended with Kris Weshinskey's 3-pointer with 11:31 left.

Pat Graham's 3-pointer got Indiana back to 68-64, but Michigan State answered with a 12-4 run.

Respert's 40 was the second-highest point total of his career, while Weshinskey had 20, one short of his best, and a career-high 11 rebounds.

Henderson's 41 was 13 more than he had ever scored before, and the most ever scored by an opponent at the Breslin Center.

rivalry (ri vāl-ri), n. Two or more striving to reach or obtain that which only one can possess; as, rivalry of love, or, rivalry of business.

Tonight's business is the Atlantic 10 Tournament Final and the two rivals striving to obtain the right to be called A-10 Champion are the No. 9 Massachusetts Minutemen and the No. 12 Temple Owls.

The showdown tonight at the William D. Mullins Center (9:30 p.m.) will mark the third time this season that the Minutemen (26-6) will have squared off with the Owls (22-6). Temple has never lost to an opponent three times in one year. Never.

But if there was one lesson learned from the first two Minuteman wins, both of which were by one point, it was to expect the unexpected when these two fierce competitors square off.

Temple vs. Massachusetts: Atlantic 10 Conference Championship Game

We take you back to the Mullins Center on February 13. The first UMass–Temple game. At the half it was the Minutemen by two, 30–28. But the Owls roared to take an eight–point lead at 49–41 with 6:27 to go in the game. UMass looked doomed.

But no, the Minutemen would fight back, getting to within one at 55–54 with 10.2 seconds left in the game. It was UMass ball and Coach John Calipari called on his stump card, junior guard Mike Williams for the heroics.

And Williams responded, spinning past Temple guard Rick Brunson and hitting a leaning jump shot in the lane to put UMass up one, 56–55, with just under four seconds left. A wild shot as time expired by Temple's Aaron Mckie fell short and the Minutemen had their victory.

And then there was the aftermath.

Calipari was speaking in his post–game press conference when he was berated and then nearly physically attacked by Temple Coach John Chaney who was upset at the UMass coach for having words with a game official in a hallway after the game.

The attack, which recieved publicity similar to the Nancy Kerrigan–Tonya Harding fiasco, earned Chaney a one game suspension from the Atlantic 10.

UMass–Temple II took place nearly two weeks later in McGonigle Hall in Philadelphia. Chaney and Calipari embraced before the game; all was forgiven, the basketball game, between the two top teams in the A–10, was now the focus. And rightfully so.

The second battle resembled the first in a number of ways. First, it was a hard–fought, low scoring defensive battle featuring the ferocious UMass man–to–man D versus the tricky Temple match–up zone.

Another resembling characteristic was the fact that the Minutemen had the lead at the break (however, it was a nine (30–21) point bulge this time), only to watch the Owls storm back in the second stanza. Temple held a number of two point leads down the stretch.

And, of course, just like game one, it was Mike Williams who provided the drama via a game winning shot. Williams, with UMass down two 50–48, banked in a 25–foot shot from the right wing over Temple's Eddie Jones. Down 51–50, Jones missed a rough layup inside over Marcus Camby and the Minutemen ran out of McGonigle Hall with their second victory over Temple, and more importantly, their third straight A–10 regular season championship.

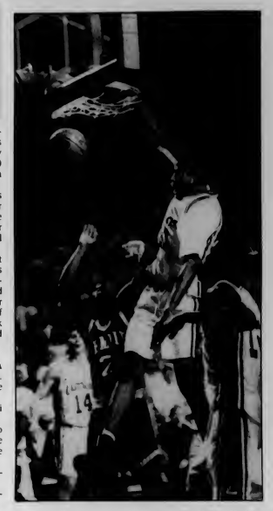
It is because UMass won the regular season title that the Minutemen are hosting tonight's championship game. This is very good news for UMass fans; the Minutemen are 18–0 in the two–year history of the Mullins Center and have won a total of 30 straight on–campus games, second only to Indiana in the nation.

This marks the second straight season which UMass and Temple have battled it out in the Mullins Center for the A– 10 Championship. Last year, the Minutemen rallied past the Owls 68–61 to earn their second straight A–10 tourney title. Tonight it will attempt to make it three.

The A–10's best will be represented in on the court tonight. Here's a list: Temple forward Eddie Jones (Player of the Year, All A–10 first team), UMass forward Lou Roe (All A–10 first team), Temple guard Aaron McKie (All A–10 first team), UMass center Marcus Camby (Freshman of the Year, Newcomer of the Year, All A–10 third team), Temple guard Rick Brunson (All A–10 second team), and UMass guard Mike Williams (All A–10 third team).

Pretty impressive stuff.

Seedings for both teams in the upcoming NCAA Tournament could be affected by tonight's outcome. With that said, both UMass and Temple should be looking at pretty high seedings in the Big Dance.



After the first game between the two rivals, Calipari praised the efforts of both teams.

"That was a terrific basketball game between two teams that I think have the chance to go somewhere in the NCAA's," Calipari said. "It was a great college game, both teams fought like heck."

But like most rivalries, only one came out victorious.

And it will be the same story in the A–10 championship game.

Atlantic 10 Women's Basketball Tournament Bracket

The University of Massachusetts women's basketball team is seeded sixth in the Atlantic 10 Women's Basketball Championship. They will meet in quarterfinal action on Thursday, March 10 at 6 p.m. against the number three seed St. Joseph's University.

Rutgers (13-3) captured the number one seed in the tournament via their regular season sweep over the (13-3) George Washington Colonial Women.

Host St. Joseph's is seeded third in the championship. St. Bonaventure is seeded fourth, Rhode Island fifth, Massachusetts is seeded sixth, Duquesne is the seventh seed, West Virginia is eighth, and Temple is the ninth seed.

The Championship, held at St. Joseph's Memorial Fieldhouse, began last night when Temple defeated West Virginia 70-61.

The Atlantic 10 Champion will earn the Conference's automatic bid to the NCAA Tournament.

With all the chips stacked against them, the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team headed to Philadelphia two days ago to prepare for tonight's Atlantic 10 Tournament first round game against the St. Joseph's Hawks.

The Minutewomen are faced with a double–edged sword tonight. They have yet to beat the Hawks this season, suffering a 58–57 setback at their place Jan. 31 before returning to Amherst after a road win at Rhode Island and dropping a 48–43 decision at the Curry Hicks Cage Feb. 9.

It also doesn't help Massachusetts that the first round game is being played at Alumni Memorial Fieldhouse — the home court of the Hawks.

Also take into consideration the fact the Minutewomen have yet to win an A–10 tourney contest under third year coach Joanie O'Brien.

It almost wasn't this bad. Had the Minutewomen beaten tournament top seed Rutgers Monday night (77–59 loss), they would have been the No. 4 seed and would have played No. 5 URI — a team they split with this season — in the first round.

With the loss, however, Massachusetts fell to the

Minutemen to host ECACs

The University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team will host the ECAC Championships this Saturday at the Boyden Gymnastics center with preliminaries beginning at 12 p.m. The finals will start at 7 p.m.

The event pits teams from the East in competition during the preliminaries to determine the best team, then in the finals the top eight individuals in each event battle for personal honors.

Minuteman Coach Roy Johnson talked about the excitement over the "big meet" that UMass is hosting in front of an "exciting home crowd."

"This will be a great meet," said Johnson. "You'll get to see ten teams, three events going on at once. It will be like a three ring circus."

UMass is currently ranked No. 10 in the East, and No. 18 in the nation with an average team score of 268.0167 points. Ohio State holds first place honors in the East and in the nation with 284.45 points.

The Minutemen as a team are ranked 15th in the nation on floor exercise and still rings, and 13th in vaulting.

In addition to the team's ranking, a number of individuals for UMass hold national and regional rankings, and UMass looks like a strong candidate for number of first place honors.

Among individuals ranked is freshman Ruslan

Letter to NCAA picks the field

To: The Men's Division I Basketball Committee, Kansas City, Mo.

I know how eager you men are to lock yourselves into the Hyatt and get going on the brackets for what could be the most wide–open NCAA Tournament ever.

One thing before you go — I've already figured everything out. Read this column and you can spend time with your wives over the weekend. My highly scientific method is the most accurate way to determine the 64 teams.

Being from UMass, everybody is abuzz about the Minutemen and I know that you'll put them No. 2 in the Southeast region. The No. 1 seed in the Southeast? The Duke Blue Devils. Louisville will be paired with UMass in St. Petersburg, Florida, as the third seed, while Kansas looms large at Rupp Arena as the fourth seed.

In the East, UConn should be a lock for No. 1, provided it wins the Big East tournament. To balance the weakness of the Huskies, put the Tar Heels in as the No. 2 seed and Michigan as a No. 3. Fourth in the East, and looking at Miami for the Sweet 16, are the Florida Gators.

Holding Court NCAA
Michael Morrissey on NCAA Basketball

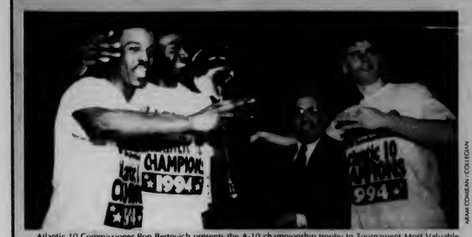
Out in the Midwest, the Razorbacks will get the No. 1 in Oklahoma City, while the Fab One of Purdue heads to Wichita as the No. 2 selection. Kentucky will have to settle for third with Purdue, and No. 4 seed St. Louis could throw a scare into Nolan Richardson, provided the Billikens get that far.

In the West, the Missouri Tigers have earned their No. 1 seed (they'll have to play in Ogden, Utah), but keep a streaking Arizona team in their region as a strong No. 2 seed in Sacramento. The Owls will be seeded third and the Orangemen and Jim Boeheim, back after a one–year probation–induced hiatus, will be fourth.

The first sixteen seeds are always the toughest to do, right? Wrong, at least this year. There'll be a mad scramble for the middle of the brackets.

Indiana will be the fifth in the Midwest, and the Hoosiers are personally one of my sleeper teams. Other No. 5 seeds: Marquette (East), UCLA (West), and the one team nobody wants to face: the Penn Quakers.

The Quakers? That's right. The same team that nearly upset UMass last year could be a Sweet 16 team this season. But Penn's not the only shocker, sixth seeds like Alabama–Birmingham (Midwest), California (with Jason Kidd and Lamond Murray in the Southeast) and Oklahoma State (at USAir Arena in the East) could surprise, as could Tom Penders' Longhorns of Texas out West.



Seven through 10 will go as follows in the East: Cincinnati, Minnesota, Oklahoma and Ohio (University, not State. The Buckeyes are NIT–bound). In the West, look for New Mexico, Illinois, Georgia Tech and Vanderbilt to get Nos. 7–10.

The Southeast gets no easier with the likes of Wake Forest, George Washington (at eight), W. Kentucky (ninth despite a Sun Belt tourney final loss), and Xavier, which doesn't get an automatic even if it win its title. John Calipari may not like his potential second round matchup with the Demon Deacons.

The Midwest has a pair of Big East teams, Boston College and Providence, at seven and eight, and Nebraska and Maryland at nine and 10. Gary Williams takes his young Terrapin squad against the last squad he coached, BC.

Michigan State is the strongest of the No. 11 seeds put into the West, while Texas A & M is the weakest in the Midwest. Pepperdine (East) and Villanova (Southeast) are the others. Stanford (Midwest), Virginia (East), Alabama

Minutemen threepeat as A-10 champs

AMHERST (AP) — The threepeat T–shirts were in a box waiting to be used. The students started pushing toward the court with 20 seconds left in the game. Massachusetts was about to win a third straight Atlantic 10 championship, and like the first two, the Minutemen would win it at home.

"With the season we've had it's always been the next game," coach John Calipari said. "We build to the NCAA tournament, that's what we've been about the last three years. This one was no more special than any of the others."

The ninth–ranked Minutemen (27–6) opened Thursday night's game with a 24–3 run and held off a couple of second–half rallies for a 70–59 victory over No. 12 Temple. It was the third time this season the Minutemen beat the Owls (22–7), but the first two were one–pointers, with Michael Williams hitting game–winning shots in the final seconds both times.

Williams' 3–pointer eight seconds into the game started the big run and it was his consecutive 3–pointers that gave control back to the Minutemen after the Owls had closed within 35–32 with an 11–0 run to start the second half.

"Somebody had to step up," said Williams, whose 21 points, seven rebouns Js and five assists earned him tournament MVP honors. "I was saying before the game I didn't want any last–second shots. I had enough of those."

Temple has had enough of the Minutemen. The Owls had never lost three games in one season to a team in their 98 years of playing basketball and they have now lost five in a row to Massachusetts. "That team is as good as any in the country, as far as I'm concerned," Temple coach John Chaney said. "They have great players outside and inside and they play excellent defense. This team has a chance to be the best in the country. I haven't seen any better with all the elements and the ability to control them."

Mortar shells hit Heathrow

LONDON (AP) — London's Heathrow airport evacuated staff and passengers from Terminal Four and closed its southern runway early Friday after the second attack on the airport in 30 hours. "Some incendiaries have been fired," airport press officer Anita Newcourt said.

No one was hurt and no buildings or other facilities were damaged. Other parts of the airport remained open.

On Wednesday night, the Irish Republican Army had fired four mortar shells from a car parked at a nearby hotel and the airport closed its northern runway. The shells failed to explode.

No group immediately claimed responsibility for Friday's attack. But Gerry Adams, president of the IRA's political ally Sinn Fein, had warned on Thursday, after the first attack, that more would come if Britain did not accommodate IRA–Sinn Fein demands.

Officials testify in Whitewater

WASHINGTON (AP) — In a politically charged atmosphere, White House officials testified before a federal grand jury investigating the Whitewater affair Thursday, and President Clinton's aides delivered an attache case full of subpoenaed documents.

The leadoff witnesses were two of Hillary Rodham Clinton's senior aides: Chief of Staff Margaret Williams and press secretary Lisa Caputo. Clinton's communications chief, Mark Gearan, also went to the U.S. District Courthouse to testify.

"This has been a difficult day for people, it's been an emotional day," White House counselor David Gergen said on CNN. Seven other administration officials under subpoena were allowed to delay their appearances.

While not accused of wrongdoing, the officials were subpoenaed in a probe of whether the White House intruded improperly in investigations of the Clintons' interest in the failed Whitewater land deal and its ties to a collapsed savings and loan.

Irish gays want spot in parade

BOSTON (AP) — A gay Irish group that wants to march in the St. Patrick's Day parade is using the event as a "bulletin board for sexual politics," a lawyer for a veterans' group told the state's highest court on Thursday.

The legal wrangling between the South Boston Allied War Veterans Council and the gay group has gone on for two years. This is the first time it reached the state's Supreme Judicial Court.

Last December, a Superior Court judge blocked the veterans council from excluding the Irish–American Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Group of Boston, or GLIB. The judge ruled that the veterans council acted only as administrators of the parade, and that the gathering was a place of public accommodation where discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation was illegal.

Illegal votes scar election

By JUSTIN DOYLE
Collegian Staff

In the aftermath of a seven–candidate battle for Student Government Association positions, the newly–elected student trustee and president must deal with a scandal.

Unofficially, Al Lizana was re–elected as student trustee and Mirran Raphaely was elected president. Lizana received 495 votes more than Diego Figueroa and Raphaely edged Joe Vozza by 180. The totals are unofficial because of the need for verification due to the closeness of the presidential race.

The election was marred by a ballot box stuffing scandal. About 100 illegal ballots for Figueroa and Vozza have been identified as stuffed ballots, said Lynn Robitaille, the Student Coordinator of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy.

Other sources reported that the number of stuffed ballots was approximately 200. If the illegal ballots had been included, the vote would have made Vozza the new SGA president. SGA officials did not comment on the number if invalid ballots.

On the first day of elections, the SGA ran out of white paper. The ballot paper was changed to pink the next day. According to Robitaille, white ballots were found bunched together on the second day of voting, all of which were votes for Figueroa and Vozza.

"Any ballot found that had a positive sign of tampering, the election committee invalidated," said Cam Tewksbury, chair of the SGA governmental affairs committee.

Voter turnout for the SGA elections was approximately 20 percent of all undergraduate students on campus. Unofficially, 5,618 students voted for both student trustee and president.

"I think the voter turnout was really good this year," Lizana said. "I think that it is directly stemming from the success of SGA as a whole over the last few years, with the student leadership of David Nuñez, Matt Pavesi and myself."

Lizana and Raphaely will unofficially move into office. Raphaely will replace Nuñez as SGA president. Nuñez did not run for re–election. Lizana will enter his second term as student trustee.

"I am really looking forward to another term," Lizana said. "I think there is a lot of unfinished business I would like to square away, a lot of new things I would like to try."

Farrakhan calls to end confusion

By RODNEY POWELL
Collegian Staff

There is still misunderstanding and confusion concerning Min. Louis Farrakhan and his message — even now that he has come and expressed himself, giving everyone a chance to hear his message from his own mouth, in his own words.

From the beginning, Farrakhan's speech Wednesday night at the Fine Arts Center confronted what has been said about him on this campus and in the national media. He addressed such issues as the cost of his visit, Farrakhan as "the hate teacher," Farrakhan as an anti–Semite, whether Farrakhan is a "real" Muslim, and crime in the Black community.

News Analysis

There seem to be two sides with different understandings of what Farrakhan said and meant. Much of the reason for these two understandings stems from Farrakhan's use of language. Many of the words he chose to describe things may not have been words people are used to hearing.

According to Farrakhan, controversy is rooted in the discomfort of some people when he used such words as "great" and "genius" to describe Adolf Hitler. He said they fail to realize that he is using these words in a different context than most are used to hearing.

He said that although his choice of words and more popular choices of words mean the same thing, unless the listener is coming from the same background, the understanding may be different. Most people in the audience seemed to understand what Farrakhan was saying, jumping to their feet in applause from time to time.

"I say he was a great man, but he was wickedly great," Farrakhan said in reference to Hitler. Farrakhan said that people fail to recognize that he also uses words like "wicked" and "evil" to

Minister inspires debate

Speaker inspires, saddens curious FAC audience

By DARIENNE J. HOSLEY

Supporters and critics of Min. Louis Farrakhan finally found one point to agree on after his Wednesday night lecture: the man is a talented speaker.

"It was a dynamic speech," said freshman Eric Sutton. "I was inspired, motivated, exuberated."

"He was probably one of the most charismatic speakers I've seen in my life," agreed Dan Henderson, who is chair of the Hillel Black–Jewish Relations Committee. "I came out a little more enlightened than I once was."

Security was heavy for the Nation of Islam leader's campus appearance, but police reported no problems. A pocketknife and a can of mace were confiscated as a precaution, and later returned to their owners, who were members of the audience.

Approximately 350 protesters gathered outside the FAC to argue against Farrakhan's views but did not cause any major disruptions.

"He's a very professional speaker," sophomore Abdul Kanaan said of the minister. "He defends himself well."

NATHAN MARTIN / COLLEGIAN

Minister Louis Farrakhan

Freshman Cherry Jenkins found Farrakhan to be a strong speaker with an important message ignored by the media. "I was very much impressed. He made me want to work harder toward my goals as an African–American young woman."

Black, White, Christian, Jewish, Muslim — most in the audience agreed that the controversial speaker did have a valuable message to deliver. But some saw another, troubling side to Farrakhan.

"The kind of scapegoating that I heard especially in the second half of Min. Farrakhan's appearance really set up barriers rather than help build bridges of understanding," said Rabbi Saul Perlmutter. "Debate and discussion is a positive thing, but I'd say there are much better way to stimulate discussion than the way it happened here."

"He did say hurtful things," said Rebecca Laverdure, a junior. "He said he wasn't anti–Semitic but at the same time he seemed to target Jewish people. . . I'm still confused about his stand on Jewish relations."

GLBT students addressed

STEPHEN C. CAMPBELL

A consultant for the National Education Association said yesterday that school employees have a responsibility to face the needs of students of all sexual orientations.

Karen Harbeck, teacher of law and education at Boston College, spoke at the Lesbian, Gay and Bisexual Brown Bag Lunch Series about the needs of gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgender (GLBT) students.

Harbeck is senior author and editor of Coming Out of the Closet: Gay and Lesbian Students, Teachers and Curricula.

Harbeck said employees in the school community affect the academic development and personal well being of all young people. She also said they have a moral imperative and a professional mandate to face the needs of this often silent and invisible minority.

According to 1989 Federal Department of Health research findings, 30 percent of all 5,000 adolescent suicides per year are attributed to distress and prejudice experienced because of sexual identity issues.

GLBT adolescents between 14 and 24 years of age often go unnoticed by school officials regardless of whether the student is average or extraordinary in comparison to their more actively distressed peers.

Currently there eight states — Massachusetts, Vermont, New Jersey, Hawaii, California, Connecticut, Wisconsin and Minnesota — have passed anti–discrimination statutes that mandate equal treatment in the workplace regardless of sexual orientation.

It is also against the law in Massachusetts to discriminate against or exclude anyone from admission to public schools on the basis of race, color, gender, religion, national origin, disability or sexual orientation. The

An unhappy group of students left Chancellor David K. Scott's office yesterday afternoon after meeting with him to further a petition changing the name of the library at the University of Massachusetts to the W.E.B. DuBois library.

Scott met with five representatives from the W.E.B. DuBois Petition Coalition in his office in the Whitmore Administration Building. The representatives submitted a petition to Scott with more than 1,000 signatures in support of the name change.

The coalition requested that Scott submit the petition to Michael K. Hooker, president of the University system, before Hooker's March 16 meeting with the Board of Trustees. Scott refused to support the group before he had time to investigate the process of naming the building.

"I cannot support or decline the petition until I receive recommendations," Scott said. "I have to refer to President Hooker as well as the Faculty Senate and the student government. And the library has to be a part of it."

The coalition was disappointed with Scott's unwillingness to commit to a position on the renaming

Yiddish Book Center ok'd for '96

By JACOB W. MICHAELS
Collegian Staff

If all goes according to schedule, the National Yiddish Book Center will move to the Hampshire College campus in the spring of 1996. The Center was founded by Aaron Lansky in 1979, and is a nonprofit organization for the "preservation and revitalization of Yiddish culture."

Fittingly, the National Yiddish Book Center began at Hampshire College when Lansky took a course titled "Thinking About the Unthinkable: An Encounter With the Holocaust."

Lansky became interested in modern Jewish history, but soon found he needed to master languages to read from primary sources. He studied Hebrew and German through the Five College Consortium, but realized he needed to learn Yiddish as well.

Although Lansky could not find a formal class, he joined a small group which met three hours every week. After two years he felt he could he handle the Yiddish texts on his own. After studying at Hampshire, and then as a graduate student at McGill University in Montreal, Canada, Lansky became interested in the inaccessibility of the Yiddish texts.

In the summer of 1979, Lansky picked blueberries in Maine to make money for start–up costs of his new organization. While working on his master's thesis, he moved to Amherst, took out a lease on a loft in Northampton, and sent out press releases asking anyone with unwanted Yiddish books to send them to him.

Since its humble beginnings, the Center has saved more than one million Yiddish books all over the world, and has established collections at 170 universities and research libraries in 20 different countries. The center is supported by more than 15,000 members, and was called "the only completely grass roots Jewish cultural organization in America," by Esquire Magazine.

Hampshire College's Board of Trustees approved the Center's purchase of a 10–acre area on the southeast corner of the campus. The facility is being designed by noted architect Allen Moore.

The building will be designed after the Shtetl, the traditional Jewish towns of Eastern Europe, but will also incorporate modernity in that it will be "bright, playful, open and inviting." According to Lansky, the building is intended "to give permanent expression to the broad vision of the National Yiddish Book Center – and to the irrepressible spirit of Yiddish itself."

Upon approval of the sale of the 10 acres, Hampshire College Trustee President Gregory Smith Prince Jr. said, "We are delighted to welcome the National Yiddish Book Center to campus in a partnership that will enrich the experiences of students, faculty and community members."

describe the same man.

Preconceived opinions of Farrakhan that are formed on the basis of what we hear through the media could be the source of misconceptions of Farrakhan. These opinions could cloud understanding and limit open–mindedness.

Some people went into this event with preconceived notions, and left feeling they understood clearly where he was coming from and what he meant by what he said.

Some students feel Farrakhan should be more careful with his choice of words. They argue that if he is such an intelligent man, he should realize that what he says can easily be misconstrued, taken out of context by the media.

It is clear that Farrakhan is not concerned with the media's views about him. "The media did not make me, so the media can not break me," he said.

According to Farrakhan, his agenda has to do with the uplifting of his people. As long as he is doing all that he can to solve the problems facing his people, such as crime, violence, racism, oppression, poverty, etc., the media is not a threat to him.

Now that Farrakhan has come and gone, the question is what do we do now. Since there is still confusion about what his true beliefs are, there seems to be a need now for some of that "healthy debate" that this event was supposed to spark.

BOSTON — Nation of Islam leader Louis Farrakhan spoke out on black-on-black crime Thursday in a speech that left some women supporters disappointed because only men were allowed to attend. About two dozen women huddled under the Strand Theater marquee shortly before the start of Farrakhan's speech. Some chanted, "We love the black men," while others argued with members of the Nation of Islam.

"I'm not mad, but I am disappointed," said Danya Best, one of the women. "I wanted to see the man. I hope he comes back and gives us women equal time, something like this. I'm going to tell the Nation."

Earlier, the Nation of Islam had said all comers would be allowed to attend, and police asked the women if they wanted to file a complaint. One woman said she would.

Geri Guardino, executive director of the M. Harriet McCormack Center for the Arts, which runs the Strand, said she was assured by a Nation official that the speech would be open.

Correction

In yesterday's story on the rally to protest the massacre of Palestinian worshippers, the location of the killings was incorrect. The violence occurred in Hebron, Occuppied West Bank.

"That is precisely what he said in October when we met with him at the 'Strategies for Combating Racism and Promoting Civility Conference,' when we asked him why there were no buildings named after a person of color," said Shyamala Ivatury, president of the Graduate Student Senate.

"At that time in October he said he would investigate the process of naming buildings," Ivatury said. "He's saying the same things now and it's March."

Scott stressed that he would not be able to make a decision until after futher consultation. He promised the coalition that he would make a decision by Tuesday.

"I think he's lying and stalling," Ivatury said. "He will try and stall until the end of the semester when the students have left."

"That is exactly the way institutions and administrators are complicit with racist policies," Ivatury said. "We will wait until 5 p.m. on Tuesday to find out his position."

dent of the Black Student Union and an organizer of the event, said the night was "very moving."

"He was so much more inflective, so much more thoughtful than I expected," he said. Shamapande said Farrakhan's visit seems to have inspired Black students to get involved in the campus community.

Shamapande recieved death threats for his role in bringing Farrakhan to campus.

"It's taught me that when you stand up you have to expect someone to try to push you back down," he said. "It's also taught me about the sacrifice that many Black leaders made, to go on with these death threats."

Media from across the country covered the lecture. MTV will air a segment of "This Week in Rock" tonig.at at 7:30 p.m. EST. "Eye to Eye With Connie Chung" and NBC's "Now," with Katie Couric and Tom Brokaw, also sent cameras.

"People that think Farrakhan is a ministry of hate are probably looking through the eyes of the media," Sutton said. "Farrakhan is just a strong Black man trying to raise his people to the potential that they have."

Our Happy Valley: the next big scene?

R.E.M.

For quite some time now there have been rumors circulating that our happy little Valley would be the next breeding ground for up and coming bands (i.e. Seattle). Unfortunately most of these rumors have been proved unfounded since little to nothing has happened in the area besides the occasional yet! show. Why? The Valley has all the makings for a hip music scene.

There's plenty of young, spunky college kids, who must just be bursting with talent and ideas. There's a wild and crazy eclectic college radio station (WAMH, at Amherst College). So what exactly is the problem? Venues. There is really no place for any band to play, unless of course you have those good–hippie vibes that everyone around here seems to just love.

The Iron Horse tends to cater towards folky acoustic strummers who have consumed too much coffee and read too much Sylvia Plath. Nevertheless it is a great place to see an intimate show, and they consistently showcase the unsung heroes of the music world from the Dirty Dozen Brass Band from Luka Bloom.

Pearl Street draws some of the best acts that come to the Valley, but it's hard to not notice that it is also the area's premier dance club as you stare into neon lights while trying to watch the show. Disco balls and hardcore definitely do not mix. Lastly, The Bay State Cabaret is by far the leader in the area of supporting local and independent bands, but their "21 and over" rule makes many miss out.

What the Valley needs desperately is a place that will nurture young bands and provide an atmosphere that everyone could get into. Hmmm, any savvy entrepreneur's out there.

Remember Bad English, the supergroup that consisted of members from every glossed over "lite–rock" band from the last two decades? Well, we now have our "alternative" equivalent in the group assembled for the Backbeat Soundtrack. The film documents the life of Stu Sutcliffe, the original bass player for the Beatles. Six of alternative music's "big–wigs," Nirvana drummer Dave Grohl, head Afghan Whig Greg Dulli, Winona–dating Dave Pirner, Sonic Youth's noise terrorist Thurston Moore, Gumball leader and producer extraordinaire Don Fleming, and R.E.M.'s diminutive bass player Mike Mills.

SOUNDS FROM THE VALLEY
Compiled by Brian Sobrinski & Matt Sutchko

This ensemble of egos romp through some of the old "soul" covers that the lads from Liverpool played in their early days. The verdict is still out on the movie itself, but the soundtrack may be definitely worth checking out.

Speaking of that angry young man, Dulli produces the latest effort by Cleveland homeboys Throneberry. Not surprisingly, the album would sound a bit like the Whigs if they took a more consistently mellow, countryish approach to their tunes.

Could the next musical mecca of the world be. . . Dayton, Ohio? it seems there is a flood of bands pouring out of that area, due to the hot independent label Scat Records. Bands such as V3 and Prisonshake are starting to make some noise in the alternative world and the buzz is steadily growing. The most noteworthy of these young pioneers is Guided By Voices. This group of recluses are making some of the most interesting "lo–fi" (actually this stuff is recorded so badly it could be considered "no–fi") music today. Their latest release Vampire on Titus, which also compiles their previous album Propeller, is 40 minutes of some of the most twisted pop music around. Genius comes in many forms.

On a non–musical note, we all should mourn the passing of funny man John Candy. Whether it was Uncle Buck, Summer Rental, or The Great Outdoors, he always made us laugh at really silly things. As a generation, we grew up with John Candy, and he made all of us chuckle at one time or another. How many people can say that?

Morphine junkies headed to Amherst

By ADAM GOULSTON
Collegian Staff

All diseases deserve a cure. Cliche and derivative music is most definitely a disease. Thanks to the miracle of modern science, there is now a drug which slowly, but oh–so– effectively wipes out the nervous twitches, needling headaches and small–scale depression which are symptomatic of the glut of alternative music. The drug is Morphine.

I think I'll have some now. . .

Ahhhh. . . that's better. Now I'm relaxed, soothed, but just a little questioning of these blue feelings I'm having. Maybe the dose wasn't strong enough. I know, I think I'll head to Amherst College's Frontroom tomorrow night at 8 p.m. and get some more Morphine.

Of course. I'll be treated to another drug few know about. It's called the Young Fetts – odd name for a drug. I know nothing about it. Oh well, I'll check it out anyway. Maybe it'll give me a head rush.

I'm a junkie? Well, yes, I guess I am a junkie.

But Morphine is wonderful. Cure for Pain just got placed on the market a couple months ago and it's better than 1992's Good. Songs like "In Spite of Me," which chronicles a morose little infatuation of the singer, are so sedating they become a part of your conscience. "Thursday" introduces the notion of jealousy. Mark Sandman has one of the most low– key deliveries around as he pontificates on these and other depressing topics.

Replacing the usual injection of guitar is an unusual instrument for an indie band — saxophone. Dana Colley's sax sometimes wanders slowly with Sandman's vocals, but more often elevates the tunes into a jazzy and wailing crescendo.

Morphine can have profound effects on your psyche, which is why it's good with a friend, just in case you get a bit low. But, ohhhh, it's so good! Give some a try, I'll join you. Hey, let's overdose.

Get your Morphine prescription filled in Amherst College's Campus Center Frontroom this Saturday at 8 p.m. Tickets are $8, $5 with an Amherst College I.D.

Terrible flick Chases interest away

By DANIEL PELLEGRINI
Collegian Correspondent

The Chase — With the Oscars only weeks away, it's time we start considering the potential runner–ups for the category of worst picture in 1994. The Chase is more than a prime candidate.

Tragically pointless and unoriginal, The Chase opens with unjustly accused escaped convict Jack Hammond (played by the shameless Charlie Sheen), who gets pinned by two policeman who spot him in a convenient store. The chase begins when Jack takes dopey rich girl Natalie (Kristy Swanson) hostage with a Butterfinger, and the two flee for the open road together in her new red Mercedes. This is actually where the film should have ended.

Intended as a comedy, Chase turns about to be an endless, anti–climactic car ride that embarrassingly tries to parody the Hollywood action film. After the actual chase begins, nothing happens. Sheen's character locks the cruise control into 65 and drags the stereotypical dim–witted police and the entire picture behind him bumper to bumper for the whole film.

The humor is based on the ignorance of all the people on Sheen's tail: the highway patrol, police headquarters, Natalie's parents, and the "Six O'clock News." Every character here is an uninteresting, never–developed cartoon, and the only thing humorous is just how absolutely moronic they all are. Among the worst displays is the thick–headed, incredibly dull, and unfunny patrolman played by post–punk star Henry Rollins.

Just when you thought Sheen was on the comeback curve of his rollercoaster career, he plummets back down into the depths of such fiascos as Men at Work and Cadence with a harshly bad, so–called comic performance.

Swanson is equally as poor, going almost exactly back to the role she surfaced with in Buffy the Vampire Slayer as a witless fugitive–turned–companion who just whines, complains and asks meaningless questions throughout the whole film.

As far as the action goes, Chase proves to be hopeless there as well. in a span of 95 minutes there are about 25 minutes devoted to boring, predictable action, and the rest is a sappy, unconvincing bonding session that brings Swanson and Sheen together. Sheen moans of how he was wrongly accused and how much he's "against the system," while Swanson envies his rebellious attitude. All of this in the front seat of the Mercedes.

Inevitably they fall in love, and the film comes to its most absurd moment when the two have intercourse on the highway, going 80 mph and being tailgated by the police.

In a nutshell, The Chase never should have been made. Its brainless comedy is unsuccessful, and the terrorist– hostage relationship tries to develop in the same way as A Perfect World. Instead of a perfect world, it's a perfect failure. F (Hampshire Mall).

Relationships: a bumpy ride

This piece is a little change of pace for me. I had to write this because I write whatever's on my mind. All apologies to my conservative fans. I hope you all enjoy this anyway...

This past month has been like no other month for me. My life took a 180 degree turn in one night. I easily turned from being the happiest guy to being the most messed up. I feel bad for my roommate because he had to put up with me through my roller coaster ride (thanks, Razor!). What's this roller coaster ride that I'm talking about? We're all familiar with it — relationships.

David Chan

I'm no expert on relationships. if I was, I wouldn't be all messed up right now. Well, here's the story: I met this girl who lives in my dorm and who was also in one of my small classes. She was like no other girl that I've met at UMass. I remember the first time that I called her on the phone. I was nervous. My reason for calling her was to ask her if she goes to church in the Amherst area (it wasn't as dumb a reason as it may sound). I had talked to her a few times in class, but a phone call was a big jump.

Well, we talked — we wanted to get to know each other more. There was a mutual interest. But, of course, (and especially in my life), there's someone else. She had a boyfriend back home. I thought it was alright. There was nothing I could do about it. I knew that we'd still make good friends — and we did. Here was a unique, wonderful woman in my life. We talked freely to each other and we had so much in common. We're both Christians and we knew that God had brought us together.

But we soon drew closer. There was always that potential for us to become more than friends, and it happened sooner than we expected. She broke up with her boyfriend and the roller coaster ride began.

We hung out together everyday. We'd watch television In my room just about every night. Beverly Hills 90210, Melrose Place, Seinfeld — I was addicted. My poor roommate felt like an intruder, or as we say, "a blocker." In a nutshell, I was the happiest guy in the world. I received my first rose ever and I had the best Valentine's Day of my life (Oooh, how sweet...). And yes, I was one of the many guys that was in Stop & Shop that Valentine's Day night frantically searching for flowers.

I gave a lot to this girl, and I'm not talking about flowers and my flannel shirts. I gave her more than I've ever given to any person. We had always both felt the same way about each other — and we still did. I hope I don't sound sappy, but we were in love. How much happier could I be? I remember us going to breakfast at the Dove's Nest, ice cream at Bart's, and movies at the Hampshire Mall. I remember ice skating (my first time ever) at the Mullins Center and seeing David Copperfield with her.

Then I was knocked out of the clouds. I was reminded that relationships are a roller coaster ride. She came into my room one night and told me that she wanted to go back to where we were before — friends. She told me that she was confused and that she wasn't ready for what we apparently had. I had to suddenly go back a month before everything that had happened. I was too numb to say anything. For the first time, the two of us did not feel the same way about each other.

That heartbreaking night was a little over a week ago. I miss how everything used to be. Everything we did seemed so right. I guess it was too good to be true. I tell myself that I can get over her, but I know that I'm only lying to myself. Actually, I've never had to get over anyone before. I also tell myself that I shouldn't give up. This is the girl that I've wanted for awhile and now that I have her, I shouldn't let go so easily. Is there something that I can say or do? I've talked to some good friends of mine (thanks Amy and April) and they don't know what to say.

There's something about this girl that throws off my concentration in class. My flannels still smell like her. Her box of Kleenex is still next to my bed. Her Valentine's card is still taped up. I still find pieces of her hair around my room. I can't listen to the radio. I guess Billy Joel said it best: She's got a way about her; I don't know what it is; but I know that I can't do without her.

The roller coaster ride of relationships is a rough one. It can be exciting, fun, scary, and even dull. It goes up and down, and it can sometimes end before you know it. But if I had a choice, I'd certainly jump on that roller coaster again.

David Chan is a freshman majoring in journalism.

Ticket system isn't working

Good things come to those who wait. That is, unless you're in line for UMass basketball tickets. For my roommate, Colin, his five-hour display of the sort of rabid enthusiasm that this school's athletic program thrives on left him empty-handed.

Athletic Ticket Director Thorr Bjorn has utilized space on these pages each time tickets have been distributed to denote what I'll call the "6:30 policy." For those who haven't read one of these notices, they read that if students form lines for tickets prior to 6:30 a.m., tickets will be distributed through a lottery.

Bjorn can't be knocked for his consistency. In the instances when diehards queued up at some ungodly hour, such as 4 a.m. Tuesday, out came the big red box, which soon was filled with thousands of student activity cards. Cards belonging to everyone from Colin, who missed one home game and was on line before 5 a.m. Tuesday, to kids who know the Atlantic 10 as a two-team league, whose cards had not a single punched hole. Guess who got the tickets?

It is Bjorn's notion that he is a legislator as well as athletic ticket director that I find fault with. Why can't he and his staff get off their high horses and stop telling students when they can and cannot get seats to watch the team they helped make great?

"You shouldn't be here," Bjorn told a flock of a few hundred students outside the Cage early Tuesday morning. But they were there. They were there because they know their peers; if they weren't there before 6:30 a.m., someone else would be. And why not? Can someone — Bjorn, the UMass police, Chancellor Scott, John Calipari — please tell me the harm in students waiting patiently in 30-degree weather in hopes of seeing UMass become the first team to beat Temple three times in one season?

If any of these people believe there really is something wrong with these lines forming before 6:30 a.m., so be it. But it's disappointing that the thought process engaged by Thorn resulted in the worst possible scenario.

His lottery essentially punished Colin for wishing to continue the support the Minutemen needed to beat Temple the first time here this season, and George Washington, which UMass took by the same score of 56–55. UMass isn't 18–0 at Mullins for nothing, and people like Colin went a long way toward preserving that streak in those two nail- biters. Not the ones who haven't been to Mullins since Feb. 13, when the Owls last were here.

"You shouldn't be here," Thorr Bjorn, the athletic ticket director, told a flock of a few hundred students outside the Cage early Tuesday morning. But they were there. They were there because if they weren't there before 6:30 a.m., someone else would be.

Ted Kottler

Also, I resented Bjorn's relish for his role as dictator. By going to the lottery, Thorn forced some of the students who were in line earliest to hang around the Cage well beyond when they would have received tickets had they been allowed to stay in line. Some missed classes, everyone was exhausted, and some still hadn't heard their name called when the announcement came shortly after 10 a.m. that all seats were sold. And Bjorn loved every minute of it. He didn't love having to be present all those hours and having to call off all those names, but he took genuine satisfaction in making those students suffer. He said so.

I suggest that students be rewarded for attending regular season games regularly by being assured seats to the Atlantic 10 Championship. That's odd, I think this policy is utilized elsewhere; ah yes, for season ticket holders. You didn't see any middle-aged Wall Street residents strolling into the Mullins Center Box office for the first time to purchase tickets, because they hadn't earned the privilege.

In conclusion, I must address opposing viewpoints introduced by two friends. One notes that a large student assembly requires police supervision, an additional cost to the University. i can't dispute this, but the crowd was by no means hostile, and we're talking about one cop who appeared to have shown up on his own power at the same time the students did.

Finally, another friend offered the next in a long line of witticisms when he pointed out that you can't buy a Megabucks ticket after the drawing's begun. He referred to the students who sauntered into the Cage after 8 a.m., more than one hour after the drawing began, and dropped their cards in the box. And many of them, too, heard their names called well before Colin's. Poor kid — I gave him my other tickets.

Me and my 5 o'clock shadow

I have a confession to make: I hate to shave.

It isn't that I don't like to be clean–shaven, simply that I hate the daily blood–letting ritual. I don't understand why shaving has to be so difficult.

I've heard that, in the Stone Age, cavemen used to take a piece of sharp flint and shave their faces in order to be clean and healthy. Centuries later and many generations removed, I have to take my Gillette Sensor and nearly slash my jugular in hopes of finding a member of the opposite sex who will be impressed with my fuzz–free face.

Michael Morrissey

If you want to know the way things stand now, there are three days of growth on my face. I have not put razor to skin since I returned three days ago from a trip. To be honest with you, I don't care.

This is not a column just for men; I know many women who let their legs go for a week or two. I know others who don't ever shave their legs, but I don't write about them anymore.

I think everyone can empathize with my depressed state and lack of care in my facial appearance. Many of my friends wait until the end of the semester to shave their finals ugly. It's traditionally a way to hold off physical fulfillment until a task is seen to its end.

To make things simpler: Remember Rocky IV? Rocky Balboa went to Russia to train for his fight against Ivan Drago, and he didn't shave. At all. In fact, he looked like the Abominable Snowman. Or my colleague Matt down here.

Today, goatees rule Generation X. To have a goatee and sideburns puts you on a level equal to God in some circles of Southwest women.

Jealousy has nothing to do with this assessment. Although I admit I took me until I was 15 and well into my sophomore year of high school before I started shaving, I've caught up quick. But not quick enough to grow sideburns or a goatee.

My friends use every chance they get to ridicule my pathetic attempts at goatee–growing. I get a good growth underneath my chin like a billy goat but nothing on the chin. It's stupid, just like this discussion.

But as stupid as it is, facial hair does leave a lasting impression. It used to be cool in the '20s to have a mustache. Now when see a mustache I think, "He's either a child molester or a bank robber."

The Amherst bouncers take an extra look at you if you leave your beard and mustache at home. I basically look about 17 when I shave and wear a baseball cap, so I'm always in danger of being rejected although I'm a legit 21 years of age.

There are a lot of athletes who shave religiously before contests and others who won't shave if they have a bad performance. Priests are either clean or fully–grown, but never in–between.

Politicians never have their faces concealed because they don't want people to think they're hiding something. I don't think Bill Clinton has had a beard since he entered political life. William Howard Taft, to my knowledge, was the last president in office with facial hair. I'll take Taft over Clinton any day.

I have a friend who has decided not to shave from the end of the World Series in November until opening day of the baseball season in early April. How's that for dedication? If you haven't already guessed, some of us take this shaving stuff seriously.

Okay, if you must know, there is a reason behind my growth.

To be honest with you, I'm waiting for the NCAA Tournament to see where the UMass basketball team gets put. Then I'll head to the bathroom with my razor before I head on the road to the Final Four. After all, there may be plenty of women who'll be impressed by my clean face in Miami or Los Angeles. Or Charlotte.

Letters to the Editor

Farrakhan has been singled out unfairly

To the editor:

Since the political views of Minister Louis Farrakhan have been given sufficient criticism in this paper and elsewhere, I wish to address another issue, that of the climate which has been engendered by the media and the politicians around the man and his views.

The growing number of challenges directed to the Black Caucus and other Black leaders that have risen in the last several weeks concerning statements made by a leader in the Nation of Islam calls to mind those times in the history when it was deemed necessary to subject certain groups of people to an acid test of loyalty to the power structure.

That any Afro–American leader or individual should be cornered (a phrase used in a major newspaper), and quizzed as to whether or not he or she will condemn Farrakhan, is an imposition that is clearly based on the acceptance of racial divisiveness, the desire to split the Black community by creating a situation of infighting and by attempting to diminish the personal integrity of that leadership. All this is simply a recapitulation of past practices.

This scenario takes us right back to the days of McCarthy and the hearings that frightened people into naming names, back to the Salem witch trials, and back to the Spanish Inquisition. The lessons, then and now are still the same, appease the power structure and acquire social legitimacy.

What is unnerving about all the self–righteous voting in Congress, the new Time magazine cover story, and the local outcry about this man and his organization is the silence that these same groups will exercise on issues that are clearly a matter of life and limb for thousands of people.

As far as I know Congress has never condemned the Klu Klux Klan or any white racist hate group. In fact, prior to World War II the Nazis Bund openly practiced and exercised their right to hate and do so to this day, but no condemnation has yet been issued from the Congress of the United States. When Rabbi Meir Kahane preached his undying promise to rid Israel and the West Bank of all Palestinians (who he referred to as "dogs") no vote was taken to condemn him and the Jewish community was not asked to renounce him.

Ben Chavis and the NAACP, to their credit, have taken the higher ground by refusing to participate in this witch hunt and instead have proposed a dialogue to understand the origins of the "rage" in the Black community that Louis Farrakhan has so well understood. The problem, however, is not just to understand but to find and act on the solution to racial injustice. There is unfortunately more of a desire in the United States to ignore the crisis in the inner city than to meet the challenge head on. But a public outcry, similar to the criticism of Farrakhan, might sound the wake–up call needed to force action by Congress, state and local officials.

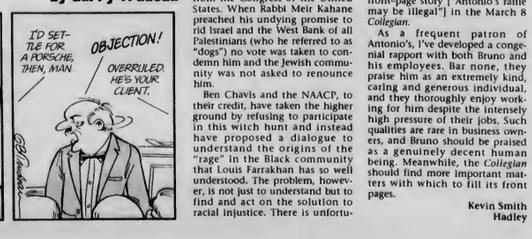
Says Antonio's owner a kind, generous man



To the editor:

I'm writing to express my thanks and gratitude to Bruno Matarazzo, owner of Antonio's Pizza in downtown Amherst. This past weekend I participated in a Bowl–A–Thon to raise money for the Men's Resource Center, a local organization which is doing superb educational work on issues of sexual conditioning and domestic violence. Many people contributed financial pledges and I am very grateful to all of them. Yet I find it necessary to single out Bruno, not only because his was the singularly largest pledge, but also because of the ludicrous front–page story ["Antonio's raffle may be illegal"] in the March 8 Collegian.

As a frequent patron of Antonio's, I've developed a congenial rapport with both Bruno and his employees. Bar none, they praise him as an extremely kind, caring and generous individual, and they thoroughly enjoy working for him despite the intensely high pressure of their jobs. Such qualities are rare in business owners, and Bruno should be praised as a genuinely decent human being. Meanwhile, the Collegian should find more important matters with which to fill its front pages.

Your Horoscope
By Jonna Bloom

ARIES (March 21–April 19): Become more aggressive where a job pursuit is concerned. Your money-making ideas require careful planning; consult experts. Your off-spring and friends are relying on you.

TAURUS (April 20–May 20): Problems involving an account shared with a loved one could affect your mood this morning. It is unwise to dwell on differences of opinion. Keep your own actions. A you want something done.

GEMINI (May 21–June 20): Avoid political and religious discussions this morning. Although you will get some friendly help around midday, a goal may remain out of reach. Show intrigue in the evening. Share secrets with mate.

CANCER (June 21–July 22): By using your wits to overcome obstacles this morning, you will be able to pursue key aims in the afternoon. Accept an invitation to an interesting cultural event. Seek valuable introductions.

LEO (July 23–Aug. 22): Be aware of ego clashes and how you appear to others. A close friend offers good advice. Buying things on impulse can be expensive; become a comparison shopper.

VIRGO (Aug. 23–Sept. 22): Collecting a debt or cashing in on a promise could be difficult. Tend the needs of children before analyzing weekend plans. Do not get caught in an emotional tug-of-war.

LIBRA (Sept. 23–Oct. 22): Watch what you eat this morning; otherwise, a treatment may yield poor results. There could be unexpected benefits when doing business with influential friends.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23–Nov. 21): You can accomplish more by working behind closed doors now. Try to remember a dream's particulars, especially if it had to do with money. Glossing over a key difference of opinion would be a mistake.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22–Dec. 21): You now see the wisdom of making your own decisions. Avoid listening away your energy or letting friends impose on you. Romance will make your heart sing this weekend. Show your tender side.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22–Jan. 19): Rely on your sixth sense for spotting real value in people and products. Friends who are closely attuned to your moods make powerful allies. Be careful not to rule household over a relative's feelings.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20–Feb. 18): Good financial news! Do not count on your domestic situation to remain the way it is. Some surprising events may be in store. Pay more attention to your loved one's needs.

PISCES (Feb. 19–March 20): Do not allow an emotional upset to affect your job performance and productivity. Work is excellent therapy. Dig in! Loved ones serve as a buffer to some disappointing news. Read for entertainment.

Minutemen sweep Temple, take A-10 crown

By ARTHUR STAPLETON JR.
Collegian Staff

There would be no buzzer-beaters on this night for Massachusetts and Mike Williams against Temple. Instead, Williams poured it on early in the second half, nailing two three-pointers on consecutive offensive sets which broke Temple's back, leading the No. 9 Minutemen over No. 12 Owls, 70–59, last night in the Atlantic 10 Championship.

With the victory, Massachusetts (27–6) became the first team to ever win three championships in a row, as well as the first team to hand the Owls (22–7) three losses in a season in 98 years.

In the previous two contests, Williams' shots in the waning seconds sent the Owls home with a loss; this time, the A–10 Tournament's Most Valuable Player scored 21 points, dished out five assists and snared seven rebounds, making sure that the outcome of the game was decided before the final buzzer.

"I was saying before the game that I don't want any more last second shots. I've had enough of those. I just wanted us to be up by 10 points with 30 seconds to go," said Williams, who held his toddler daughter Mishawn in his arms when he received his MVP trophy at center court.

Massachusetts, the number one seed in the tourney and regular season champions for the third straight season, jumped out to a 15–2 advantage before the first stoppage of play. After a Temple time–out with 13:46 left in the first half, the Minutemen extended their lead to 24–3 behind a Derek Kellogg trey, two Dana Dingle free–throws and jumpers by Williams and Donta Bright.

The run was halted by a dunk from Temple's Derrick Battie some four minutes later.

"You're in the finals, you know you are going to get the person at their best. We knew Temple was going to come out and play its best," said Massachusetts center Jeff Meyer, who has been on the team for all three championships.

"You've got to come out and play the same way. You've got to give them everything you've got; and personally, what we had was a little bit more than they had and we pulled it out."

During the run which opened the game, Massachusetts shot nearly 60 percent while holding the Owls to only one field goal. The Minutemen outrebounded Temple 18–11 in the first half, while forcing their opponents into 8–of–21 shooting (38 percent).

"I think we just defended them," said Massachusetts forward Lou Roe. "They made some tough baskets in the first half, but I think we really defended them. The biggest thing was they missed shots and we were able to rebound 'em."

"The biggest thing we did was we rebounded the basketball against a very big basketball team," said Massachusetts Coach John Calipari.

Trailing 35–21 at halftime, Temple clawed its way back into the game by scoring the first 11 points of the second half, cutting the Massachusetts lead to three, 35–32, and forcing Calipari to call a time–out.

Temple's Aaron McKie and Eddie Jones, who were both named to the All–Tournament Team with Williams, Roe and Duquesne's Derrick Alston, combined for all of the points in the comeback, beginning with a trey from each on the first two trips down the floor for the Owls. On the next series, Jones (18 points, eight rebounds, five assists) slammed one home, slicing the Minuteman lead to 35–29.

"Every shot Aaron and Eddie made tonight were tough shots," said Temple Coach John Chaney. "They were all tough shots."

McKie (game–high 33 points) followed on a dunk of his own with 16:41 left which pulled Temple within four points; the Owls' star guard was fouled in the act by Williams. With the completion of his three–point play, McKie brought Temple back from a 14–point deficit and the Owls seemed poised to take the lead away from the Minutemen. Then came Williams' two treys and a three–point margin that was disappearing became a comfortable nine–point bulge.

The closest Temple would get after Williams' shots was six points on two different occasions. Each time, the Owls efforts were thwarted by a Marcus Camby one–handed alley– oop, once from Williams and the other from Kellogg.

Temple's 2–3 match–up zone had shut down Roe in the scoring column in the two previous meetings, keeping him under double–digits in both games. However, early on in last night's championship game, Roe made it a point to get on the board, scoring nine of Massachusetts' first 15. The junior co–captain finished with 17 points, eight rebounds and four assists.

"You look at these two guys right here [Roe and Williams]," said Calipari. "Champions step up in games like this. This is what you live for."

Three's company in thrilling three–peat

By MICHAEL REISS
Collegian Staff

Okay, are you ready for this?

Last night, the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team captured the Atlantic–10 title for the third year in a row with the help of an early 24–3 first half run, leading the Minutemen to their third victory over the Owls this year, by picking apart the visitors nasty 2–3 zone with the help of third team A–10 guard Mike Williams' three– point shooting ability, that helped bring the Minutemen's on– campus winning streak to 33–0, as Lou Roe made the all– conference team for the third time in three seasons, solidifying Massachusetts' position as the third winningest program over the last three seasons, which had the fans chanting three–peat while they rushed the court.

Let's break down this three–scenario:

• With its 70–59 victory over Temple, UMass won the Atlantic–10 Tournament for the third year in a row. A three–peat.

"This might be the best win of the three," said Roe, who has been a part of all three teams. "With this win, we made history."

• In the thrilling win, UMass held Temple's Rick Brunson to three points, well below his average of 13.1 points per game; add this to Brunson's line: three assists, three turnovers, three personal fouls, one trey.

Brunson failed to reach double figures in all three UMass– Temple contests.

• Temple's Aaron McKie scored 33 points last night, as he was one of only three players to score for Temple in the first 38 minutes of the game.

• Coach John Calipari obviously knew about the importance of the number three last night. After the Owls ripped off an 11–0 run at the start of the second half, he called a timeout to regroup his club.

"I told Mike to shoot some threes," he joked.

• UMass went on a 24–3 run to open the game that was keyed by its intensified man–to–man defense The effort made things tough on Temple's three main scoring weapons.

"We really defended those three guys," said Roe. "We gave them a lot of help, but they got some good shots off. When they missed, we rebounded and were able to go down the other end and convert."

• Wearing number three, Dana Dingle grabbed five rebounds in the first half, scoring six points. What was perhaps even more impressive was the defense of Jones, who was held to 18 quiet points on the night.

• UMass beat Temple three times this season. No other school in the history of college basketball has ever done that.

• 33–0 on–campus winning streak and still undefeated at the William D. Mullins Center (19–0).

• Somewhat lost in the shuffle is that UMass has now won 81 games over the past three years, the all– conference team for the third time in three seasons, solidifying Massachusetts' position as the third winningest program over the last three seasons, which had the fans chanting three–peat while they rushed the court.

• Roe has played three seasons here and has won three A– 10 championships. All three years, Roe has been on the A– 10 all–tourney team.

• To win the A–10 tournament, UMass had to win three games.

• Eddie Jones was held to three points in the first half.

• UMass connected on three, three–point field goals in the first half, shooting 30 percent from behind the arc. The first shot of the game was a Williams three.

• The closest Temple got in the game was three points, after Williams' opening three–pointer.

• Temple played its trademark 2–3 zone and the Massachusetts players had their opinions on its effectiveness and how to work against it.

"The job of the point guard is to try to penetrate and get the other guys shots'. It's tough to get the offense moving against them because they play the passing lanes so well," Kellogg said. "That's why we struggled a little bit in the second half."

"You have to move the ball, penetrate and kick it out. You have to get inside the lane because the zone is expanding out," said Dingle. "As soon as you penetrate you have to reverse the ball quickly."

• With Lou Roe garnering numerous honors over the past three years, he's getting used to obtaining things in threes.

"They tripled teamed and did some things against Lou," Calipari said. Still, Roe managed 17 points, shooting 3–for–3 from the free–throw line in the first half.

• In all three UMass–Temple games, the Minutemen led at halftime.

• Counting Sunday, there are three days left until the NCAA Tournament pairings are set.

• Unlike in the past two years, after last night's win, the Minutemen probably won't have the same seed — which was a three.

Williams–McKie: the big duel

By JEFF CROFTS
Collegian Staff

It was a classic duel.

Mike Williams vs. Aaron McKie.

Mr. Clutch vs. Mr. Smooth.

And in the end it was Williams' Minutemen who defeated McKie's Owls 70–56 to win its third straight Atlantic 10 Championship. But what a battle between the two guards while it lasted.

It began nine seconds in when Williams, who was wide open on the wing, took a three. Good. UMass 3, Temple 0.

A minute and a half later though, it was McKie scoring the game's second bucket on a tough jump shot in the lane with Williams right in his mug. UMass 3, Temple 2.

On the next possession down for UMass, McKie (33 points, four steals) picked up a personal foul going for a loose ball. And then just over a minute later, the Temple guard picked up his second foul, this one a retaliatory effort against Williams (21 points, seven rebounds, five assists) down the offensive end.

It was Williams' physical style of play against McKie which McKie said earned him his second foul.

"It was a dumb foul on my behalf," McKie said. "The ref doesn't always see the first foul (by Williams), but he does always see the second one. But I think it was the right call."

That foul earned McKie a spot on the Temple bench. Temple coach John Chaney said he didn't just have to protect McKie from future foul trouble, but he also had to get his senior star refocused.

"I tried to survive with him on the bench and tried to calm him down," Chaney said.

Survive? Temple was down 4–2 with 16:58 to play In the first half when McKie when to the bench. When McKie returned to action a little over three minutes later, the Owls were down 15–2 and struggling against a UMass tidal wave of two–way play.

Things did not get better immediately for McKie and the Owls as UMass held a 24–3 lead with 9:57 to go in the half.

But then things began to brighten for Temple. Thanks to McKie. The senior pumped in 14 points in a seven–minute span to help bring the Owls to within 11 at 32–21. Williams, however, answered with a three point bomb which restored the UMass lead back to a more comfortable 14, 35–21, at the half.

The second half would start off all McKie and Temple. McKie opened the stanza with a tough three pointer with Williams once again draped all over him like a cheap polyester leisure suit.

Then McKie got free on the fast break and jammed one home while drawing a foul from the trailing Williams. The ensuing free throw brought McKie and Temple to within three at 35–32 with 16:41 left to play. Tiineout UMass.

It was now Williams' turn as the junior guard from Hartford knocked down back to back long range bombs from just outside Route Nine. Chaney said Williams' threes, which put the Minutemen back up by nine at 41–32, were key shots. Williams said he was glad to take them.

"Someone on our team had to step up," Williams said. "They were doubling down on Lou, so one of the guards had to step it up."

McKie tried valiantly to keep Temple from falling, scoring nine points down the stretch, but UMass never let their lead slip to under six again.

And it was Williams who was smiling afterwards as he held up his one of his twins, Mishawn, in one arm and his A–10 Tournament MVP trophy in the other.

Minutewomen victorious

Women's hoop topple St. Joe's, take on GW tonight

By ANDREW BRYCE
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's hoop team made school history in defeating St. Joseph's 76–63 in an Atlantic 10 Tournament quarterfinal game last night.

The Minutewomen (14–13 overall) advanced to their first ever A–10 Tournament semifinal. In doing so, the big win also prevented St. Joseph's from reaching the semifinal round for the first time in 11 seasons. The Hawks were trying to add to their A–10 record 10 consecutive years as a semifinalist.

The UMass women will now take on A–10 power George Washington tomorrow at 8 p.m. GW is coming off a 91–78 quarterfinal victory over Duquesne.

History was made for the second time of the night, as the Minutewomen shot a school–record 93.3 percent from the free throw line. The torrid percentage broke the previous record of 90.9, set earlier in the season vs. Providence on Dec. 11.

With the score 62–59 and 1:52 left in the game, the Minutewomen hit 10 consecutive free throws in the final two minutes to increase their lead to 72–59 with 28.1 seconds in the game. It was all but over for the Hawks.

The Minutewomen came out strong in the first 20 minutes, taking a 32–21 halftime lead and withstanding two Hawk runs in the second half. St. Joseph's cut the UMass halftime lead to one at 44–43 on a Robyne Bostick jumper with 11:07 left.

The Minutewomen then responded with a 12–2 run to go up 56–45 on an Octavia Thomas layup with 5:24 left to play in the game. St. Joseph's made another run at UMass, chopping down the lead to three at 62–59, but could not get any closer.

Thomas, selected to the First Team All A–10 a couple of days ago, led the Minutemen with 19 points and 8 boards. Kuzmeski added 17 points, five rebounds, and four assists, and Gurile chipped in with 13 points.

The Minutewomen shot a season–best 59.5 percent from the field, hitting 22 of 37.

African leader ousted

MMABATHO, South Africa (AP) — A South African diplomat took over as leader of Bophuthatswana without ceremony Sunday to ensure the black homeland takes part in South Africa's first all-race election.

Ambassador Tjaart van der Walt told reporters a return to normal life was essential so political campaigning could begin in a stable climate. He also assured residents he would address complaints that led to strikes and protests against the homeland's president, Lucas Mangope.

Although Bophuthatswana is nominally independent, it is to be reincorporated into South Africa under the new constitution. The government body overseeing the election has been given broad authority to ensure the balloting takes place, and that authority is construed as allowing it to depose Mangope.

The pre-dawn announcement that South Africa no longer recognized Mangope's authority appeared to defuse civil unrest that killed at least 24 people last week.

The takeover showed the resolve of South Africa's white-minority government and the African National Congress to open the entire country to free political activity. The ANC had been pressing for Mangope's ouster for several days because he opposed participation in the April 26-28 election.

Mortar closes Heathrow

LONDON (AP) — New bomb threats prompted authorities to close London's two major airports, Heathrow and Gatwick, for two hours Sunday night — just hours after the third mortar attack on Heathrow in five days.

Scotland Yard said no explosives were found after the last warnings, which it called a "cynical ploy by the IRA to cause unnecessary confusion and fear amongst the public." The airports were reopened at 9:45 p.m. local time.

Thousands of airline passengers, many of whom were diverted to outlying airports or forced to wait in terminals for hours, had other words for the chaos resulting from the attacks and threats. "It was nothing short of hell," said June Tomkins of Sussex as she waited for a flight to Barbados.

In all, 12 mortar shells have been fired at Heathrow since Wednesday, all failing to explode. No one was injured although air traffic was seriously disrupted.

On Sunday, one mortar landed on the roof of Terminal Four, used primarily for British Airways international flights, and three others landed nearby.

The Irish Republican Army, which had claimed responsibility for the first attack, issued a statement in Dublin, Ireland, late Sunday accusing the British government of ignoring its warnings. "The luck of the British authorities who are deliberately taking these calculated and cynical gambles with peoples' lives will inevitably run out," it said. "Our coded warnings should be heeded."

Parade called off

BOSTON (AP) — Organizers of the city's annual St. Patrick's Day parade made it official Saturday: They will cancel next week's parade to protest a court order allowing gays and lesbians to march.

"They're not going to shove something down our face that's not our traditional values," John "Wacko" Hurley, president of the South Boston Allied War Veterans Council, said at a news conference.

Hurley said gay marchers would be excluded when the parade resumes next year. But Mayor Thomas M. Menino has said the city will sponsor the parade next year and will include the Irish-American Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Group of Boston.

On Friday, the state Supreme Judicial Court upheld a lower court's ruling that a parade is a public event covered by a Massachusetts law barring discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation.

HECC head worried about student access

By JUSTIN DOYLE
Collegian Staff

Contact with universities is an important concern for the Higher Education Coordinating Council, Stanley Koplik, chancellor of HECC, is trying to improve contact between the schools and the committee by touring various colleges and universities in Massachusetts.

On Thursday, Koplik and Michael Nosetzel, the executive assistant to the chancellor, visited the University of Massachusetts to meet with administration and speak with representatives of student groups and local unions. They are touring all the universities in Massachusetts' public higher education system.

Koplik is trying to get more involved with the individual universities. By talking to both students and employees he said he hopes to better understand the concerns and problems students and employees have to deal with on campus.

"I like to meet various people and see what's on their mind, talk about the issues, the problems and how we are going to get better," said Koplik.

After a tour of the campus and meeting with Chancellor David K. Scott and his staff, Koplik and Nosetzel sat down with representatives from student organizations and local unions in Memorial Hall.

Koplik asked the representatives questions concerning problems on campus and on the job. The first topic discussed was the accessibility of the University and the rising tuition and fees.

"A major concern that came across from everyone is tied up with the word 'money'," Koplik said. "Funding uncertainty is the way I would term it. There is no pattern of consistent support."

"I'm concerned about access for students," Koplik said. "As I visit the campuses, I find more students dropping out of school. I find students who can't afford to come back."

HECC will make the decision today on what the tuition increase for the university will be. Koplik has recommended to the tuition and finance committee for HECC that tuition be increased zero percent.

"They adopted that and that's what we will take to the full council on Monday," Koplik said. "I've talked to just about everybody in HECC, and I think we are okay."

After the meeting with the representatives, Marcellete Williams, the deputy chancellor, presented Koplik with a momento of his visit. He spoke briefly after the presentation.

"I will continue to travel, listen and hopefully learn," Koplik said. "I'd like to spend a little bit more time talking and a lot of time doing."

This spring, break for safety

By SHARON FROST
Collegian Correspondent

It's mid–March and the important question for most students at the University of Massachusetts seems to be "What are you doing for spring break?"

This week, however, the big question Peer Health Educators will be asking is, "How will you be keeping yourself safe for spring break?"

On Tuesday and Wednesday of this week, peer educators will be on the Campus Center Concourse between 9 a.m. and 3 p.m. giving away free "Coed Naked Safe Break" kits.

The kits will include information and items to help promote safer sex, responsible drinking and skin protection over spring break.

"The kit is to help students safely enjoy spring break, whether they're going north, south or staying at home," said Rita Hirsch, a health educator.

The kit will contain such items as condoms and sunscreen, advice on how to stay burn-free on the beach or in the snow and facts about blood alcohol levels, and drinking and driving.

The outreach campaign will be staffed by students involved in a Peer Health Education class. The class is a year–long program which teaches students about

UMass needs to work on health, nutrition

Some students complain that the reason they don't eat right is because the dining commons doesn't serve enough fresh fruit.

By REBECCA PETERSON

The '90s may seem like a health conscious decade, but many people do not have a balanced diet. Gorden Wardlow claims in his book, Perspectives in Nutrition, "One in five people are malnourished and undernutrition is detrimental to a person's health."

Poor nutrition is equally apparent on the University of Massachusetts campus. "The majority of students here do not consume a balanced diet," said Lauren Wallace, a community health graduate student.

Sam Adeline, a UMass freshman, said she agrees that students do not consume a balanced diet. She said, "The dining commons do not provide students with enough fresh fruits and vegetables."

Junior Sean Donnely says he doesn't receive a balanced diet because "the meat is unappetizing and processed."

Students at UMass who are not on the meal plan also feel that they are not ingesting the proper nutrients. Kelly Varrieur declares "it is inconvenient to plan out meals, never mind balanced meals."

April Hoskeeper said she doesn't mind cooking, but has no "idea what to eat from each food group."

Generally, ignorance tends to be the root of the problem. Wallace concedes "students want to eat healthy, but have no idea how to approach it. Many students simply don't have the basic nutrition information."

She suggests students do research and reading in order to learn more about nutrition. Students need to develop healthy eating patterns because "the goal is to live a long healthy life, and what you eat today does effect that."

Dianne Sutherland, a registered dietitian who works for the dining services, said students "can eat healthy at the dining commons if they choose." She also said she is available for consultation if students have questions about what they should be eating.

University Health Services suggest that students follow the Food Guide Pyramid to eat healthier. The pyramid contains the five food groups and summarizes the percentage of food people need from each group.

The UHS also suggests that

GMAT gets a makeover

New format will stress writing skills, add more time

By GERI SAHN
Collegian Staff

Although the next Graduate Management Admission Test is in June, if writing skills are not your specialty, this will be the last time you will be able to take the test without having particular writing requirements.

The GMAT is a required exam both college students and professionals — who hope to attend business school — have to take. More than 200,000 people take this exam each year.

In October, 1994, the GMAT will add two scored essays to the exam. The essays were added in hopes of creating a challenge for those students who have weaker writing skills.

"In order to excel on this part of the GMAT, students will need to organize their thoughts quickly and write with clarity and precision," said Timothy Patrick, director of GMAT programs for Kaplan Educational Centers.

The students will have one half–hour to complete each essay. They will then be scored by, "holistic grading." This grading process enables the scores and copies of the essays to be sent to business schools by Educational Testing Service. ETS administers the GMAT.

"These essays will be judged according to very specific criteria. Test takers have to master a broader range of skills to succeed on the new GMAT," Patrick said.

Patrick said the change is a response to the concerns made by business schools and corporate recruiters who have said that several MBA applicants do not have strong communication skills.

"Success in the business world requires more than good quantitative skills. Business leaders must communicate goals and agendas clearly and effectively," he said.

The other parts of the test will include a math and verbal section. Both will be cut by 15 minutes which will make the exam 30 minutes longer than the old exam, making it now four hours long.

The Clinton–Nixon parallel

By ANDREW DAVIDSON
Collegian Staff

Editor's note: This is the first in a three–part series comparing Whitewater to the Watergate scandal.

It is somehow ironic that 20 years, exactly one generation, separate Watergate and Whitewater. The first scandal brought the end of the Nixon presidency; the second has the potential to do the same to Bill Clinton. And the similarities don't end with the fact that both names have a surprisingly similar headline–grabbing ring to them.

It may still be too early to compare the two incidents; after all, the debacle Clinton finds himself in has yet to snowball to the epic proportions of Watergate. Nonetheless, a number of similarities have people drawing comparisons in circles from New York to Washington and beyond.

Whitewater and Watergate
NEWS ANALYSIS

What both Whitewater and Watergate have in common is that they both raise question about the abuse of power. The United States government derives its power from the consent of the people, unlike most western European democracies, which have always assumed the soverign to have power. "We have always looked to the President and Congress as holding office by delegation from us," said Elliot L. Richardson, former attorney general under President Nixon. "Whenever they behave in a way that avoids accountability, we get really excited about it."

Critics of Clinton's activities in Little Rock, Ark., felt that the closeness between then–Gov. Clinton's administration, the banks and the Rose Law Firm, of which Mrs. Clinton was a partner, were too dominant and controlling of the affairs in the state. "It wasn't a level playing field," said an anonymous Little Rock lawyer in The Economist. "Everyone knew that if you took on Rose, in effect you took on the governor's office."

What forced Nixon out of office was the obstruction of justice and interference with investigation that ensued after the break–in of the Democratic National Committee Headquarters at the Watergate hotel on June 17, 1972. Twelve days later, and continuing for almost a year, a total of nearly $450,000 in hush money was paid by Nixon aides to the those accused in the break–in. Since relatively little information is available yet about the Whitewater incident, it is difficult to compare the activities of the two administrations in this regard. "We may never know whether there is serious wrongdoing that the White House is trying to hide," said former Nixon solicitor general and one–time Supreme Court nominee Robert Bork in regard to Whitewater, "but the sounds of document–shredding raise legitimate questions and may amount to an obstruction of justice."

What probably ties the two events together more than anything is the media's scrutiny of the events. Gerald Warren, Nixon's deputy press secretary, remembers how the media covered the Watergate incident. "We would spend an hour talking about energy policy or the economy or some domestic thing. I would then brief the press and, of course, I would get no questions about these matters. The questions were all on Watergate."

But the media has changed since the days of Watergate, and it has had a dramatic effect on how Whitewater is perceived. "In Watergate, there were two guys trying to win the the Pulitzer," said Leonard Garment, former acting counsel to Nixon, "and in Whitewater there are roughly 50,000."

George McGovern, the 1972 Democratic challenger to Nixon, says he doesn't think "there was any major corruption in the Whitewater case or a major breakdown of the president's authority. I think it's largely a creation of the media in New York and Washington."

The differences in media climates, however, is not the only thing which separates the two scandals. Many people have drawn clear distinctions between the abuses of power in the two situations. "At most," Richardson said, "I see questionable dealings at a financial level between a local savings and loan and the governor's office and the law firm where the governor's wife worked."

Another major difference, albeit beyond the control of the current administration, is the intensity at which the Justice Department is conducting its investigation. During the Watergate deliberations, Nixon told his chief domestic aide John D. Ehrlichman that he had Henry Peterson, the Justice Department official who originally prosecuted the Watergate burglars, "on a short leash." Nixon also authorized the use of Central Intelligence Agency facilities, which was prohibited for domestic use, to plug leaks of classified information.

Special Counsel Robert Fiske, who is heading the Whitewater investigation, does not plan to let the same obstruction of justice occur this time around. Last Thursday, he brought three White House aides to the grand jury to discuss their contacts. Wall Street Journal staff reporters Michael K. Frisby and Paulette Thomas know what the Justice Department's message is. "The sight of top officials walking into a grand jury provided a clear warning: obstructing Mr. Fiske's investigation or federal regulators will be dealt with harshly."

Fiske's swift action is forcing all of the executive departments to circle their wagons and cooperate with the investigation. Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen has been forced to hold all Treasury documents that would have otherwise been trash in order to accommodate the 15 special investigations internal auditors are conducting at his department. "I hesitate to say come look in my basement at Treasury because someone would probably call me a pack rat," he told a House Appropriations subcommittee. "But we've been holding back our trash to the point that I've had to use a warehouse in Alexandria."

The one twist Whitewater has that Watergate lacked is the death of White House Counsel Vincent Foster. "There was not in Watergate anything similar to Vincent Foster's death, nor to the inexcusable way it was handled by the White House," Bork said.

The Economist has another analysis of Foster's death. "Documents removed under the noses of investigators included Whitewater papers and, it seems, a diary. All this is odd. Was it plain incompetence, or part of a cover-up?"

McGovern believes that direct comparisons are premature. "I don't think it was a crime or anything that compares to the Watergate scenario," he said.

But Charles W. Colson, a Nixon White House aide convicted in Watergate, has a slightly more cynical angle to the whole situation. "We moderns have forgotten [a] foundational truth — that man is a sinner. Then we are shocked that a governor apparently made sweetheart deals, and White House aides overzealously protected their president."

Which brings to possibly the most dynamic factor that has affected both scandals: almost the entire White House has been willing to defend Clinton just as they defended Nixon a generation earlier. In a letter directed to recently–ousted presidential counsel Bernard Nussbaum, G. Gordon Liddy, convicted Nixon aide and Washington radio talk–show host, offered the following advice. "Despite our political differences, I offer this letter of encouragement and urge you to do the right thing. Your actions and mine were motivated by the same desire to keep our respective president in the White House. What is important is that you remain loyal, keep your mouth shut, and don't give up Hillary!"

A lot of events must unfold before any more conclusions can be drawn. "The special counsel's investigation has just begun," said Senate Watergate Committee Counsel Samuel Dash, "and we should all patiently await its outcome before pointing fingers and making accusations." Given our current media–dominated political climate, Dash's advice might just be falling on deaf ears.

REQUEST FOR PROPOSALS

The Chancellor's Commission on Civility in Human Relations is soliciting innovative proposals for educational and program activities which have the following goals:

- enhance understanding of multicultural issues
- encourage collaboration between different campus communities and constituencies
- promote mutual respect

Eligibility: Undergraduates, graduate students, staff and faculty, as individuals or groups

Award Criteria: Proposed activities

- must bring together persons from two or more communities or constituencies in a joint activity
- must demonstrate collaboration of communities or constituencies in the proposal planning process
- must promote multicultural understanding and mutual respect on the campus or larger community
- should represent new programs or collaborating partnerships as opposed to annual programs or continuations of past projects
- should be completed by the end of the fall 1994 semester

Examples of Activities Which Could be Funded: Forums, speakers, film/video series, seminars, workshops, public education programs about hate crimes and incidents, outreach activities to secondary schools and home communities, community public service programs, faculty/student collaboration to develop new courses, performance events, printed materials, posters.

Proposal Components:

- a clear description of how the proposed activities will meet both the goals and award criteria
- a list of groups involved and the person or persons responsible for the activity
- a mechanism for evaluating impact and effectiveness of the activities

Cabinet slams extremists, condemns their actions

By RON KAMPEAS
Associated Press

JERUSALEM — The Cabinet on Sunday outlawed two Jewish extremist groups, branding them terrorist organizations on a par with long-banned militant Islamic activists.

The decision was a step toward PLO demands that Palestinians in the occupied territories be protected from settler vigilantes before peace talks on implementing Palestinian autonomy can resume. The ban on the Kach and Kahane Lives groups followed the massacre in a Hebron mosque Feb. 25, when American-born settler Dr. Baruch Goldstein killed at least 30 Palestinian worshipers.

Both groups seek religious rule in Israel and were inspired by the late Rabbi Meir Kahane, who advocated expelling Arabs from Israeli-controlled territory and said Judaism was made stronger by violence against its enemies. Goldstein was a Kahane follower.

The Cabinet voted unanimously to ban the two Jewish extremist groups, using anti-terrorist laws that since the 1960s have been implemented only against Palestinian organizations such as the PLO and Hamas.

"For us they are terrorist organizations just like Palestinian terrorist groups," Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin told reporters. "Using violence and attacking people is something Israel cannot accept, and certainly when it is done with the aim of foiling government policy," Rabin said.

The PLO technically remains on the list of terrorist groups. But a source close to Rabin, speaking anonymously, said the Cabinet would remove it.

Reports said Rabin wanted the Kahane organizations banned before meeting with President Clinton in Washington this week, as a concession to get the PLO back to the talks.

Deputy Foreign Minister Yossi Beilin said the two sides are very close to resuming talks. Israel radio reported a starting date of March 21.

Clinton coming to Boston, solo

BOSTON (AP) — President Clinton comes to Boston Monday to talk public policy and help fill Democratic Party coffers, after a week of intense scrutiny over the Whitewater affair,

He will also hear a personal plea from his host, Mayor Thomas M. Menino, for police money.

White House aide Jess Sarmiento said Sunday: "I think the president will address his major legislative initiatives, health care and crime. I also think he'll talk about the G-7 jobs conference (held in Detroit Sunday) ... and where he sees the country going and how all these initiatives will do that." The president is due to arrive at Logan International Airport late in the afternoon. After taking a water shuttle over to Rowe's Wharf, he will address the public for about 20 minutes.

From there, Clinton is scheduled to travel to the Park Plaza Hotel, where he will address the New England Presidential Dinner at about 8:30 p.m. The $1,000-per-head, invitation-only event is being sponsored by the Democratic National Committee.

Sarmiento said the president is not trying to escape Washington pressure over his and his wife's involvement in the failed Whitewater real estate venture in Arkansas. First Lady Hillary Rodham Clinton will not accompany her husband on the trip. Sarmiento noted that the Boston visit, as well as the president's trip to Detroit and one through New Hampshire on Tuesday, were scheduled months ago.

"These things have been on the schedule for awhile... and he's going to continue to go out and speak about his legislative initiatives so people have a clear understanding about what they are and what they mean to them," she said.

"I think the people are interested in what he's going to do for the country and their lives and that's what he's going to talk to them about," Sarmiento said.

During a news conference to discuss preparations for the president's visit, Menino said he will also use his time with the president to lobby for police funds.

health issues that specifically pertain to college–age people. The program also provides field experience in workshops and outreach campaigns so that students can share their education about health issues with other students.

Myra Edelstein, a senior health educator said, "Peer educating works because it is students helping students. They live together, talk together, they might as well talk about health issues together."

Peer Health Education class 213 and 214 is open to all majors. The only requirement is that the student makes a two semester commitment to the class. The class is limited to 20 students per semester, to allow the students to get to know each other and work better together, said Edelstein.

There are also opportunities available for students after the end of the program, like volunteer work with health education and independent studies.

The coordinator of the Safe Break campaign, Melissa Graves, took the Peer Health Education class and did an independent study the next year. Graves, a human resources major, said the goal of the campaign is to tell students that whatever they're doing for break "to have fun and do it safely."

In addition, the Health Education division reminds students to:

•Apply sunscreen 30 minutes prior to going out in the sun, and reappiy it every hour.

•Drink plenty of water and alcohol–free beverages when exercising or out in the sun.

•Know your limit when drinking, any more than one drink per hour leads to intoxication.

•Wear your seat belt for all your road trips, and share the driving.

•Keep condoms in a cool, safe place — not In your beach bag or glove compartment.

•Travel smart, secure your belongings, lock your room and look like you know where you're going.

Two-party system has failed

There has been a great deal of talk in this country lately about the need for more than two political parties. We are witnessing corruption and gridlock that plagues both the Democrats and the Republicans from iran–contra to Whitewater. While these stories make the front pages, we continue to ignore the growing polarization in economic status that has brought about open class and race violence in Los Angeles and perpetual civil uprising in the inner cities of New York. it is now evident that the current political status quo is a failure.

Democrats and Republicans trade off terms in the White House and the Congress without ever bringing about real change. This is the nature of the one–party "Republicratic" system: the two parties are so ingrained that they have become identical except in terms of rhetoric. Both fear to truly represent their constituents because the cost might be their own pork–barrel lifestyles.

Democrats and Republicans trade off terms in the White House and the Congress without ever bringing about real change. The two parties are so ingrained that they have become identical except in terms of rhetoric.

Peter J. Orvetti

There are already two governors and one U.S. representative who are neither a Democrat nor a Republican, and Ross Perot's legions captured one–fifth of the vote in the last presidential election. Furthermore, there are two smaller parties, the Libertarians and the New Alliance Party, which receive occasional media notice, even if it is still rare. The one–party system is beginning to show its age.

The so–called "minor" parties are already stronger than the Republicrats would have you believe. The Republicrats rely on percentages, the domain of political spin doctors, to minimalize the popularity of the smaller parties. If one million demonstrators march in front of the Capitol, it is the lead story on the evening news. But when Libertarian Ed Clark received about one million votes in the 1980 presidential election, it was ignored because that amounted to only 1.1 percent of the whole. Never mind that Clark received as many votes as there are people in Rhode Island.

Bruce Babbitt is now the Secretary of the Interior. But in 1988, when Babbitt was dubbed a "major" candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination, he received 77,780 votes in the primaries. Meanwhile, "lunatic fringe" candidate Lyndon LaRouche received 70,938 votes in those same primaries.

In this year, former Secretary of State Alexander Haig won 26,617 Republican primary votes, which was less than the 27,818 fall election votes for American independent James C. Griffin. Of course, Griffin's name never made the news.

Another similar case is that of Lloyd Bentsen. He is now Secretary of the Treasury, and in 1988 he was the Democratic nominee for vice–president. (Bentsen was nominated without a single vote by anyone that year; some democratic process!) In 1976, when Bentsen tried to become his party's presidential nominee, he received 4,046 votes as an active candidate. In the election 12 years later, while Bentsen was running for vice–president, Socialist Party presidential candidate Willa Kenoyer received 3,882 votes. A similar total, so how come the Socialist Party does not get the same attention that Bentsen does?

Could it be that one day, one of these "minor" candidates will be a Secretary of the Treasury or the interior like presidential aiso–rans Bentsen and Babbitt? After all, when American heroes like Victoria Woodhull and Norman Thomas ran for president, they, too, received only a tiny fraction of the vote.

There have been many leading parties in the United States since the country's inception. Never before have there been two, though, that have stayed as secure as long as the Democrats and the Republicans have, with their dominance unchallenged since the Civil War.

It is time for America to move on, and the sources for change are here — dozens of new ideas waiting, from the left to the right and at all stops in between. These voices deserve to be heard, not mocked. Who knows? The next Wilia Kenoyer could very well hold the answers to our country's ills. All of these news ideas deserve the chance to be brought to the forefront.

New ideas are waiting. We need only to take a look.

Everyone can feel insecure

Right now, as I type this sentence, I am alone.

How, you may ask, is it possible for someone to be alone while living on a campus with 11,000 other students? It is very possible and I am sure others have experienced the same feeling.

Loneliness, in its most basic form, implies that you are by yourself — something which we all experience in one form or another almost every day on this campus.

As members of the UMass community, we all come in contact with each other during our travels on campus. In that mad rush of pedestrian traffic, we may not even recognize one face in a crowd at any given time and place.

One of the most elemental human needs is companionship. Nevertheless, most of us insist on putting on a facade of indifference and ignorance to disguise this desire out of pure insecurity.

One of the most elemental human needs is that for companionship, but most of us insist on putting on a facade of indifference and ignorance to disguise this desire out of pure insecurity.

John Winchell

My own role in this charade began when I transferred here from a small community college in the autumn of 1992. I hardly knew anyone, and was immediately intimidated by the sheer size of the campus and the student population on it. So, I just pretended not to care. I went about my business, with butterflies in my stomach all the while, hoping no one would notice my apprehension.

To this day, I still don't think anyone ever realized my insecurity.

Over time, the situation graduaiiy improved. I met people on my dorm floor, in my classes and within my major. I began to feel more comfortable walking around campus alone, eating alone, etc. But, there are still times when I yearn for companionship. Nobody, no matter how familiar you are with your acquaintances and surroundings, is totally immune.

And there are also different levels of companionship. For example: In my case, the desire for companionship represents the lack of a meaninglul personal relationship with a woman. Now, to some people this may sound absolutely ludicrous, but consider the lengths people go to in search of a romantic relationship. Personal ads, dating services and (God forbid) blind dates are all by–products of the pursuit of this most powerful human need.

On college campuses, the standard procedure is to put on your fanciest duds and head off to, depending on your preference, either a party or a bar. Neither of these presented themselves to me as very appealing options. I was over 21 and could easily get into a bar if I wanted to, but the fact is that I'm not a real bar aficionado in the first place.

And parties... oh, those wonderful parties! Crammed inside a room, which was on average roughly the size of my double singie, with 50 or so sweaty, loud and drunk people wasn't exactly my idea of a good time. Especially since there was usually some kind of nominal charge involved to cover the cost of the kegs that, after I waited in line an hour just to get one eight–ounce cup of, would mysteriously run dry.

So, how do you meet people other than through those time–honored traditions?

To return to my original premise, the problem lies in this pervasive attitude of faise casual indifference. If people could let down their guard for just an instant and reveal their true feelings and needs, we all might be surprised to discover that everyone is just as vulnerable and insecure as we are.

All that facade really does is to isolate us even more from others and, ultimately, ourselves. And if we can't be true to ourselves, how could we ever expect to be true to someone else? No matter how cooi and confident you try to appear, you can't fool yourself.

Neil Peart, drummer and lyricist for the band Rush, stated it best this way:

When we lift the covers from our feelings,
We expose our insecure spots
Trust is as rare as devotion–
Forgive us our cynical thoughts
If we need too much attention–
Not content with being cool
We must throw ourselfes wide open
And start acting like a fool
If we meet too much approval
Then the cuts can seem too cruel

The fear of those emotional cuts becoming too deep and painful is exactly what holds everyone back from each other, and to what end? To project an image of false seli– assurance. If we cannot acknowledge out own weaknesses as human beings, we will never truly grow. Don't be afraid to let down your guard — a little honesty goes a long way.

Opinion

Sharing random thoughts

A hectic week, indeed.

As i was running around like a madman for the past week, doing this, that, anything and everything, I had some interesting thoughts, peculiar thoughts, outrageous thoughts.

Not that anyone particularly cares. Not that any of the thoughts are particularly exciting. Not that my thoughts are particularly news–shattering. Not that I am particularsly self– conscious at the moment.

Andrew Bryce

Well, I am going to spring my random feelings on you, whether you like it or not. And by the way, when I say random, i mean random; very random, iandom as can be, terribly random, horrendousiy random...

The dream I had the other night — i didn't know I was capable of having such a messed up dream in just three hours of snoozing. This kid that I have not seen in five years was in it. My friend and I were in this kid's room, and he, out of nowhere, began stealing all of the kid's stuff. I asked my friend why the hell he was stealing all of the kid's belongings, and he replied, "He set three fires!" Oh. That explains it.

When I heard that in the dream, though, I was pissed. I totally agreed that since the dude set three fires, we had every right to steal things from his room. I can remember trying on his beautiful jacket, and being so excited while admiring myself in the mirror.

And then, I remember hitting the jackpot. I dropped the coat, and opened the drawers. The drawers were filled with...are you ready?...packages of underwear. I was ecstatic. I think I was crying tears of joy at first glance. Screw the coat. The underwear was mine. i can remember hiding the skivvies, hoping that my friend wouldn't see them so I can have them all.

Doodling in class — During one of my classes a few days ago, i totally spaced out, and began to doodie on one of my notebooks. Somehow I snapped out of it, and looked at the result of my mindless doodling: I had written, in colored–in block letters... get yourself ready for this one... "Survey says — Richard Dawson".

I'm still trying to figure out where the hell I pulled that from. It did make me reminisce, though, about how the former studly host of The Family Feud sucked face with all the women on his show. One of the more affectionate game show hosts of our time.

1–800 numbers — Bob has an 800 number. The Bob from Bob's Mattress Discounters. It just gives all of those phone– sex fans a tough decision to make as to who they are going to call first. Let's see, Luscious Lana...or Bob.

Wanted — i'm searching for a Bee Gees poster. If anyone sees one, finds one, wants to give one away, or whatever, write to Andrew Bryce in care of the Collegian. I've been in a disco mood lately, and you can't get much better than Barry Gibb and the boys. A poster would be key.

Spring break — I'm not doing anything too special for the break, but I realize how fortunate I am to actually have some place to reside. I saw a sign in my building at the beginning of this week that stated no one would be able to stay in the dorms for the week — including international students. I'm glad I'm from Massachusetts and not a foreign country. My home is a short car ride away, while others are just a bit further from home. I must be missing something, because it sounds evil to me.

Erasers — At one point this week, I found myself daydreaming about clapping the erasers, ridding them of chalk, for my elementary school teacher. What a great excuse it was to go outside during class. No college teacher has asked me to clap the erasers just yet. But I'm waiting, patiently.

SGA elections — My praise goes out to the campaign committees for their seemingly tireless work. I can't count the number people who, over the course of the week, stuck a flyer in my face, or hollered in my ear urging me to vote. I got sick of the hounds — in other words, they did their job in spreading the word about their person.

Rocky vs. Apollo — I still can't get over two of my buddies from home getting into a fight in my room when they came to visit me. I left the room for about a half–hour, and when I came back, my roommate and another buddy from home were sitting there, watching the spectacle featuring Eric and Steve, as they clocked each other in the face.

I then proceeded to split them apart, puzzled at why they were going at it. It wasn't anything. They were fine after. They are still friends. They had a little too much to drink. Steve came out with a black eye. We all had a hangover. Average details of one hell of a night.

Letters to the Editor

Farrakhan's visit revealed injustices

To the editor:

I believe that the reason Mr. Farrakhan's visit is so difficult for this campus to deal with is that it knows, beyond the destructive rhetoric, Mr. Farrakhan speaks of a system which at the bottom is simply wrong. Mr. Farrakhan speaks of a system which continues to discriminate against Black people, which renders heartbreak in lives compromised simply by the color of their skin, and which debases God's children in order to further elevate those in power.

Why are we so afraid of him? Is it just the hatred he espouses against gay people, against Christians, against Jews? Is it just the fear he engenders in us by the violent remarks he makes? Is it just the finger he points at you and me, whom he doesn't even know; or is there something else at work which stirs in us a still greater fear?

I believe Mr. Farrakhan touches in us the truth of our own injustice. I believe Mr. Farrakhan touches in us the truth of our own greed. I believe Mr. Farrakhan touches in us the truth of our need for power as the way to fulfill ourselves, no matter who might have to suffer.

Few in this country have had to suffer as African– Americans have. Despite the rhetoric of the liberal establishment, nothing has really changed. L.A. still rages, apartheid divides, far more subtly than in South Africa, and nothing, it seems, will change the hearts of those who cling to their power.

So what is wrong? What is wrong is that it seems to take a voice like Mr. Farrakhan's to wake us up. We know better than to continue to live without regard for our brothers and sisters. We know better than to turn our heads, when they are suffering as they are. We know better than to cling to a power which we know in our hearts cannot fulfili us, but which is destined to destroy our very souls, and all that we could be.

So Mr. Farrakhan's visit is difficult because it visits our own injustices. What Mr. Farrakhan is doing to gays, Jews, Christians — all he would call his enemies — we have done to him, to his community, to the powerless of this land. We must stop, just as he must stop, if we are to share the lasting fruits of this life, which will always endure past the pleasures borne by exclusive power.

We will be all that we can be when we face our own injustice. We will be all that we can be when we grow beyond our greed. We will be all that we can be when we relinquish our private power, and discover the only lasting fruits of this life will be found in one another.

SGA elections didn't include Butterfield

To the editor:

In the past, the SGA has provided those students on the Butterfield meal plan with a ballot box in their dining commons to facilitate their voting. Despite our reminder, however, the current SGA seems to have forgotten this fact, and no ballot box was provided on either of the election days.

This is a most unfortunate oversight. The fact is the Butterfield meal plan traditionally has the highest per capita voter turnout of any residence hall on this campus.

It seems to me that on a campus that has been plagued low voter turnout, the SGA has a responsibility to ensure that students are given every opportunity to do so. Furthermore, if it was the SGA's intention not to place a ballot box in Butterfield, they should have informed us before the election.

Prior to writing this letter, many attempts were made to contact SGA staff in order to resolve this oversight. Much to my dismay, we did not even receive the courtesy of a return phone call. Are we to believe that this is responsible and effective govemment? I think not.

Without equal opportunity of representaton, an election is inherently non–representative and therefore void. If measures are not taken to redress this situation, I cannot recognize the validity of the SGA election. Maybe now they will see fit to give us a call.

TV has–beens: where are they?

Do you ever sit and wonder what has happened to people who used to be big television stars and have somehow faded into obhivion? I know I do. See if you know where these former stars are now.

•Greg Evigan. He was the truck driver in the popular "B.J. and the Bear" and played Joey on the underrated "My Two Dads." Evigan showed his comic side on "My Two Dads" as Paul Reiser's sidekick. He was an essential cog in the show, and while Reiser now has another show ("Mad About You"), Evigan is probably sitting around drinking Pabst and watching tapes of "B.J." Why hasn't Evigan been able to find a job? Someone in TV land could surely find a spot for this talented actor.

•Emmanuel Lewis. Remember "Webster?" Of course you do. So why can't anyone tell me what has become of this famous small fry? Did he grow? Has he been working at all? Does he still hang out with Michael Jackson? Do we really want to know? Welcome to life after childhood stardom, pal. Shortness alone does not a good actor make. Now you know how Gary Coleman feels.

•Morton Downey Jr. What an entertaining fellow Mr. Downey was. It's too bad he ruined himself by pretending to be attacked in a bathroom, and then by shaving his head. What a moron. My friend Mike and I did catch a glimpse of Mort the other day on TV. We couldn't tell what the show was, but it looked an awful lot like an infomercial. I didn't want to see Downey in this sorry state, so I promptly changed the channel. I have a sad feeling that we won't be seeing a comeback from Mort in the near future.

By Caleb Cochran

•Justine Bateman. She was fabulous as Michael J. Fox's ditzy sister on "Family Ties." She then went on to star in such box office fiascos as Satisfaction. Why? She's talented, young and attractive. While we're on the subject, what happened to justine's brother Jason? I haven't seen anything from him since the days of "Valerie"/"Valerie's Family"/"The Hogan Family"/"Sandy's Kids" or whatever else they called that damn show. Jason is also a major talent who has been on the sidelines as of late.

I think a smart move would be to team up the Bateman siblings in some sort of action/comedy. They could play brother and sister on the screen. This is always interesting, as when Martin and Charlie Sheen starred together as father and son in Wall Street. Don't worry, I'm not comparing the Batemans to the Sheens, but I'd sure like to see Jason and Justine back in action soon.

•Howard Hesseman. This guy had great success in two very funny roles, playing Dr. Johnny Fever on "WKRP in Cincinnati" and Mr. Moore on "Head of the Class." Where is he now? Only Andy Travis and Les Nesman may know for sure, but I hope he comes out of hibernation soon. It disgusts me that Fred Savage's little brother can star in a TV series while talented actors like Evigan and Hesseman sit and watch.

That's all for now, viewers. If you need me over spring break, I'll be the kid with two–day–old pizza hanging out of my drooling mouth, watching old tapes of "B.J. and the Bear" and "WKRP." If you see any of these missing actors on your exotic travels, let me know. I'd like to know what they've been up to.

Dynamic duo stirs Bluewall

By STEPHEN C. CAMPBELL
Collegian Staff

too of many
The Bluewall
March 12, 1994

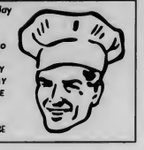
If you weren't in the Bluewall last Saturday night at 8:00 p.m., you missed one of the best singing duos I have heard in a long time. This new and definitely moving pair of women are based out of Cambridge, Mass., and go by the name, too of many. The group was presented by the Lesbian, Bisexual, Gay Aiiiance and the Program for Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Concerns.

Amy Hartmann and Valerie Anne are the openly queer members of too of many. They write and arrange all of their own music, music that is just fantastic. They harmonize beautifully as if their voices were meant for each other, and the melodies that they arrange just grab one's ear.

They have been performing in various groups all their lives, and met in an ali–women's a cappelia group called Goddess Gospel. There Amy and Valerie found that they really performed well together, and that the music they were writing and sharing with each other were so similar in feeling and style, that they started writing music together. They left the group in 1993 and have been performing as a duo for over a year now.

Too of many give their music a personal touch that the audience fell in love with. It wasn't hard to start feeling connected to them and their music. The duo blended wonderfully on stage, working as one. Also, the rapport they had with the audience was terrific. It made for an enjoyable evening that was well worth it.

Too of many have been performing around Boston at the Crone's Harvest and Christopher's. They will be playing at the Middle East, the Kendall Cafe and a return engagement at the Naked City Cafe in the next two weeks.



For more information on club dates write to: too of many/P.O. Box 381824/Cambridge, MA 02238.

My eyes teared as I hacked my desert dry cough at the road dust that swirled up from behind the passing semi. Yes, I was lost... a long way from the rotting New York cul-de-sac I had called my home. Why HAD I eaten that moldy bread. Why DID I let that circus bear break my heart.

Singing praise of women

Smith African Students Association Choir
Wright Hall Auditorium, Smith College
March 10, 1994

As part of International Women's Day celebrations, the Smith African Students Association (SASA) Choir Friday night danced and sang their message: "Side by side, women of the world fight for freedom."

Dressed in black tops and brightly–colored skirts, the nine women, who are African students at Smith College, swung side–to–side, clapping their hands and singing in vocal harmony at the Wright Hall Auditorium as a fundraiser for the organization.

The women invited the audience to join them in clapping and singing African songs about subjects as serious as apartheid and slavery, to more traditional songs about marriage or the welcoming of young men after an initiation rite.

This is the choir's first year, and they hope to increase their visibility. "We always sang together," said Marang Setshwaelo, a government and anthropology major, "but this is the first year we sang as a choir."

The poignant moments of the show were songs dedicated to women, such as the song "Jikelele," a cali for a revolution for women.

In one of their two encores, the women performed a song from Botswana which played out the fiirtatious courtship between a line of men and women facing each other, much to the delight and enjoyment of the audience, who gave them a standing ovation.

The choir wants to perform in many more events at Smith College and the five–college area, including the upcoming A Capella Fest.

Check out campus music scene

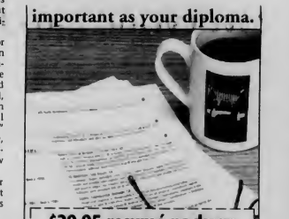
By JOSHUA BOYD
Collegian Correspondent

Little do some students know, but there is a good handful of talented musical groups on this campus. You may see the posters in the hallway between the Campus Center and the Student Union for bands playing for two bucks in the Hatch or the Van Meter basement, and think "they can't be that good. i have better things to do." On the contrary, these bands are highly talented. This column will be dedicated to bringing light to our great little musical scene here at the University of Masachusetts, via album and show previews and reviews.

Cottonmouth & Electric Noodle Factory
Van Meter Dorm
March 12, 1994

In the dim light of the Van Meter lounge, one of a series of moving shows took place. First on stage was solo congo player Chip Dunne, who hammered out pulsating African– Cuban rhythms and got the audience's hearts beating before the main attractions.

Cottonmouth took to the stage as the first band for this night. This group of UMass students has been playing together for about a year now, and could really fall into a great jam that causes the mind to dance around with the rest of the body soon following. Lead vocalist and rhythm guitarist Josh Martin had a loud, authentic "rock" voice, which bellowed out such tunes as The Beaties' "Do It in The Road," and full originais like "Preserved To Death" and "Ants." Although the audience was moving with the groove, they seemed to hang back as if the band had a contagious cold. Bassist Kevin Champney ended the show praising the likes of the band's "free form" style.



While the next act set up, vocalist/guitar player Gypsy Rogers and vocalist/flute player Leila Nolet sang and played such songs as George Gershwin's "Summertime."

Electric Noodle Factory, a four–man band boasting two UMass students, played two sets with passion, creating a unique sound. Opening up with Traffic's "Low Sparks Of High–Heeled Boys," singer and keyboardist Pete Fernandez and the band had the crowd satisfied from the first notes on. Drummer Loren Weisman slammed away at his set like it was his worst enemy, but with rhythmic beats to make those least fond of dancing get moving. One of the band's originais, "Going To Gibraitar" was a very hoppy one, and inspired the crowd to bounce like pogo sticks all over the floor. After all the audience's commotion during the tune, one fan yelled, "What? Are you trying to kill us?" They also did a jazzed–up, funked–up version of The Who's post–Keith Moon hit, "Eminence Front," and a whole handful of great originals. if you need something heavy with flavor, check out either of these bands in the future. You will not regret it.

Yes, times are tough. I can't even reach into my pocket and get a decent one half of pocket lint. The other day I looked under my couch cushions and found only four bottle caps. Yes, sometimes you have to scrape a little.

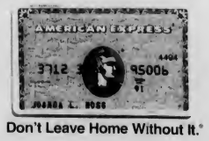
JOSH MOSS, SENIOR, FILM MAJOR

Bananas unpeeling themselves. Fruits attacking each other. These were the actors in my first film.

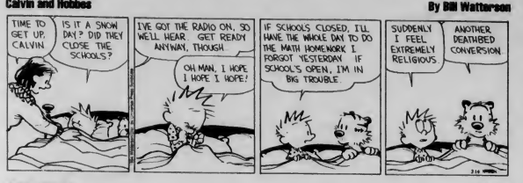
My professor is big on editing. And editing. And editing. 800 ft of film ended up on the floor.



Ever since I was a kid I wanted to make a sci-fi movie. Now it's in the can.

MY FILMS ARE ABOUT LIFE IMITATING ART.
(ON MY BUDGET, I CAN'T AFFORD THE REAL THING.)

A lot of people don't realize how much goes into making a film. Creating illusions with photographs being flickered, that in itself, that's art. But as a student, reality kicks in fast. Having a budget of a few hundred dollars for my senior thesis film, that's reality. I couldn't afford 'Star Wars' type special effects. I got the actors to volunteer to be my aliens, free. And used the American Express® Card to charge major expenses like film and processing. The Card helps me stick to a budget. (It even helped me save serious money on a flight to New Orleans, with my Continental voucher.) Working on the film for no money, and long hours, tempers got a little short. So, the Card came in handy at my wrap party. We all became friends again. The American Express® Card works. For real.



Using the American Express® Card at my wrap party helped neutralize hostile aliens.

Your Horoscope
By Jeane Dixon

ARIES (March 21–April 19): Display a positive attitude and an important relationship will turn around. A preoccupation with your health takes as you begin to feel better. Get out and socialize more.

TAURUS (April 20–May 20): Watch your step when dealing with hard-to-please authority figures. Projecting an aura of confidence will get you a front-row seat at an important meeting.

GEMINI (May 21–June 20): Change is inevitable. Sooner, there is no reason for you to fear the future. Although the love boat sails under cloudy skies at times, it will not sink. Have faith.

CANCER (June 21–July 22): It is time to rethink your priorities and review the direction your life is taking. Let past mistakes guide, but discourage you. Newfound resources help you get a pet project launched.

LEO (July 23–Aug. 22): You have more energy than in recent days. Tackle a complicated project you have been postponing. Protect a romantic dinner from interlopers or uninvited guests.

VIRGO (Aug. 23–Sept. 22): Avoid dwelling on a recent disappointment. Concentrate on winning — the odds are in your favor. Your personal appeal is at an all-time high. Plan a romantic interlude.

LIBRA (Sept. 23–Oct. 22): Financial worries can overshadow all other concerns. Refuse to let about matters beyond your control. A chance encounter could lead to a profitable business venture!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23–Nov. 21): Today will be a really good day. You will make lots of money without working so hard you get all stressed out and upset. Enjoy it.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22–Dec. 21): Your new self-esteem enhances every aspect of your life. Review your goals before making any sudden moves. Family members should be consulted on domestic matters.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22–Jan. 19): Better results will be obtained once you learn to go with the flow. A loophole will help you get out of a contract you no desire. Listen to your conscience.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20–Feb. 18): Your partner may be more vocal than usual today. Play the waiting game in both business and romance. If a legal matter reaches a settlement the delay could work in your favor.

PISCES (Feb. 19–March 20): A secret that is revealed now makes you wholly with surprise! Your luck changes for the better. Before buying a car or experiencing poverty, put some money away for a rainy day.

Quote of the Day

"Serious sport has nothing to do with fair play. It is bound up with hatred, jealousy, boastfulness, disregard of all rules and sadistic pleasure in witnessing violence: in other words, it is war minus the shooting."

— George Orwell

the middle of dealing with a controversy surrounding Maine, one of its premier members, answers his own phone.

Speaking of the Hockey East playoffs, since Maine broke the rules, they shouldn't get to play in the Hockey East playoffs or the NCAAs. But instead of replacing them with a bye, why not let UMass fill the final seed and play BU in the first round to give Coach Mallen's troops some playoff experience.

Congratulations to intramural Hockey's Blades of Steel sniper Keith Francis for breaking out of his lifelong scoring slump with two goals in one shift.

UM show to hit the road

Minutemen in Midwest, face SW Texas State

By ARTHUR STAPLETON JR.
Collegian Staff

Destination: Wichita, Kansas.

At about 6:45 p.m. last evening, the University of Massachusetts basketball team found out the same way everyone else in America did: the Minutemen watched the NCAA Selection Show on television, which revealed John Calipari's squad would be packing its bags and hopping on a plane for the Midwest Region of the NCAA Tournament.

Massachusetts garnered the No. 2 seed behind No. 1 Arkansas, the best team in the land according to last week's Associated Press poll. The Razorbacks were beaten in the Southeastern Conference semi-finals by Kentucky but still got the top spot in the region.

The Minutemen will face Southwest Texas State this Thursday at the Kansas Coliseum, a place that has never been the site of a competitive collegiate or professional basketball game. Yesterday marked two firsts for Massachusetts — the Minutemen will venture out of the East in its three-year tourney history, toting its highest seed ever.

For the past two seasons, Massachusetts was the third seed in the East, falling in the second round to Virginia last season and in the round of 16 to Kentucky the year before.

The players and coaches along with members of the media, including a television crew from CBS, were assembled in the Calipari home in Shutesbury to watch the event yesterday.

Calipari said that he was pleased with the seed and the prospects of playing in an area new to the Minutemen.

"I'm happy; getting the two seed means we're one of the top eight teams in America right now," said Calipari. "We're excited about getting out of our region and really getting out of a region where everybody else is . . . they've shipped a lot of us around so I'm not too upset about that at all."

For the players, the announcement of the pairings was overdue and the team, according to many, is ready to go, regardless of who it is playing.

"We're looking forward to go out there not only to play but to win it all," said freshman Edgar Padilla who experienced his first Selection Sunday as a collegiate player.

"We really didn't want to be in the East because everybody wanted to get away from the weather. Hopefully we can get out there and keep up the good basketball that we've been playing," junior co-captain Derek Kellogg said.

"I'm just worried about game-by-game. We'll worry about the teams and who we might play later. It didn't matter where we were going; it's all about business. We have to take care of business wherever we go," said junior guard Mike Williams.

"I think our team's mentality is different," Calipari said. "Instead of just going into the tournament, we're trying to win the thing now. Whether we can or not, I don't know yet."

The off-the-court business is settled. Massachusetts is hoping that tomorrow's flight to Kansas has connections to Dallas, Texas, and Charlotte, N.C., the sites of the Regional Final and the Final Four, respectively.

The University of Massachusetts women's basketball team, down 43–32 in the second half, were trampled by a 14–3 run, and fell to George Washington 91–60 on Friday night.

The Minutewomen, who finished the season at .500 (14– 14), were coming off their first ever Atlantic 10 quarterfinal win against St. Joseph's on Thursday.

UMass lead the Colonials 11–8 after Kim Gregory nailed an eight foot jumper — and, at 12:46 of the first half, that was the last lead it had for the entire game.

The Colonials, who eventually lost to Rutgers 79–71 in the tourney finals, went on a 10–2 run to make it 21–13 before the Minutewomen cut it to 23–21 on a 16–footer by Melissa Gurile. The Colonials had the last word of the first 20 minutes, taking a nine–point lead into intermission, 35–26.

In the second half, the Minutewomen kept the Colonial lead at nine, the closest they would come. With 16:12 left to play, UMass was down 43–32, only to have the Colonials embark on a 14–3 run to make it 57–35.

The Minutewomen then cut the lead down to 17 on a pair of free throws by Gurile, before a 28–9 run kicked the GW lead out to 36, 85–49.

The rest of the game was filled with reserves seeing some playing time for both teams— and even the Colonial bench achieved success from the field in the 31–point GW victory. In the loss, each member of the Minutewomen saw action. Also, nine of the 12 players put points on the board for UMass.

Gurile led the Minutewomen with 13 points and six rebounds. Crystal Carroll added 12 points, and Maleeka Valentine chipped in with 11. All A–10 First–Teamer Octavia Thomas was held to just 6 points on 2–7 shooting.

GW star Darlene Saar led the Colonials with 18 points and 11 boards. Martha Williams came off the bench, scoring 15 points. Debbie Hemery added 12 points and Tajama Abraham scored 10.

Valentine, in what was her final collegiate game, also had six assists. The senior tri–captain finished the A–10 tournament averaging 10 points and seven assists, which included a career–high eight assists in the quarterfinal game against St. Joseph's.

The Great One closes in on 801

Through the midst of a disappointing season for the defending Western Conference champion Los Angeles Kings, Wayne Gretzky is closing in on a record many experts said would never be broken - Gordie Howe's record of 801 career goals.

Through the magic of conference telecommunication, instead of attending class Tuesday afternoon, I found myself on a conference call listening to the ideas of none other The Great One. From the NHL participating in the Olympics in 1998 to the death of his friend and business partner John Candy, Gretzky was candid and classy.

Howe has been critical of Gretzky's record quest, stating that Howe's WHA goals should also be included in his career total. Gretzky has handled the issue deftly.

"To me Gordie has done so much for hockey. If that's the way he feels thats fine," said Gretzky. "I still look at Gordie the same way I did when I was nine."

BETWEEN THE PIPES — Matt Vautour on the NHL

Gretzky refuted the idea that it was a better league when Howe played, noting the much broader base of talent coming into the NHL.

"You can't convince me that our league is worse than it was 25 years ago," said The Great One, "The game has just changed."

Despite rumors swirling that after his record is broken he will hang up the skates, Gretzky still plans to be around for a while.

"I still enjoy coming to the rink. When next September rolls around, I'll still be here," said Gretzky.

The Seventh Sign is upon us: The Detroit Red Wings traded for a goalie with talent. The Motown bunch sent underachievers Tim Cheveldae and Dallas Drake to Winnipeg for Bob Essensa and Sergei Bautin. If Essensna can even play close to his peak years, the Red Wings will emerge as a legitimate Stanley Cup contender.

How this column affects the NHL: in recent weeks it seems like everyone that I've bashed has improved their play considerably (see Jon Casey, Vincent Riendeau and the Islanders). With this in mind, Darius Kasparitis has left numerous messages on my voicemail begging me to mention him, in hopes that it might revive his plunging career.

Hea Market, NHL style: Need to bolster your hockey club at a cheap price? Come to Hartford, where we give better deals on our stock (i.e. talented players) than at Unclaimed Freight and Bob's Discount Furniture. The Flames needed to bolster their offense for the mere price of Paul Ranheim, Ted Drury and Gary Suter, so they obtained Mikael Nylander along with talented defensemen Zarley Zalapski and James Patrick. Well at least Hartford got Gary Suter right?

Wrong. One Day after acquiring Suter, the Whalers sent Suter and Randy Cunneyworth to Chicago for Frantisek Kucera (Who?) and Jocelyn "Don't Call me Mario" Lemiuex. I'm currently talking to Whaler management about a deal that would send two of my intramural players to Hartford for Geoff Sanderson. They've been very interested so far.

This Week's It Could Only Happen in Hockey Award: During the Gretzky conference call, just after the operator announced that there would only be two more questions, a reporter from Dublin, Ireland, asks The Great One, "What skills are nessesary to make it in the NHL?" Evidently the hockey reporters on the Emerald Isle are as talented as the Irish National Hockey team. Stick to soccer guys.

Honorable Mention: Hockey East Commisioner Bob Degregorio answers his own phone. I couldn't make a call to the Old Dominion field hockey office without going through three secretaries. And in college hockey's premier conference, the commisioner who is in

While the Wichita metropolitan area has grown in population to more than 400,000 and the city continues to look toward the future, traditional midwestern values are still the foundation of Kansans' lifestyles.

As the largest city in Kansas, Wichita is considered the economic hub of the region. In manufacturing and wholesale and retail trade, Wichita comes out the leader.

Wichita is a city of fascinating contradictions — old and new, city and country. The city retains its early western hospitality, but the outlook is toward the future. When it plays, Wichita has the flavor of the Old West. And when it entertains, visitors are bewitched by the mixture of the old and the new.

Men's gym second in ECACs

By DAVID GLEESON
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team hosted the ECAC Championships this weekend at the Curry Hicks Cage, scoring their second highest team total this season and capturing second place.

UMass also had a number of gymnasts in the individual competition finals, where the top eight finishers from the team events battled for ECAC event medals.

The Minutemen, who are ranked 17th in the nation, scored 269.35 points to earn second place honors. William & Mary took first place with its best performance of the season, scoring 272.30 points, their previous best being 5.8 lower at 266.5 points.

UMass coach Roy Johnson said he was pleased with the team's performance, but the team seems to be at a "plateau." He also said the team has been competing well of late, and hopes that they will start to "peak" and break the 270 mark, which could earn them a first at the EIGL Championships.

"It's disappointing that we fell short this time," said Johnson. "But the guys looked good."

In the individual event finals, UMass senior co–captain Jason Braud was the only Minuteman to win gold. Braud took first place on the still rings with a 9.45 to become the top rings gymnast in the ECAC. Braud also made the finals for the floor exercise, where he placed sixth, and for the vault.

Among other UMass event award winners were freshman Lorenzo Macaluso, who placed fifth on the pommel horse; Steve Goldman, who placed sixth on parallel bars; Kiat Olber, who took fourth on the high bar; and Gabe Columbus captured second on floor exercise with a 9.45.

Columbus also placed fourth in the all–around competition scoring 54.20, while William and Mary's Tim Tozer won the all–around with 54.95 points.

March 26 when Springfield College hosts the EIGL Championship.

"With two weeks to do it, we're looking to hit mid–270's," said Johnson. "That can win EIGLs. We've got to get the guys in tip top shape."

In addition to the two extra weeks of training, UMass will need some time to mend as well. Ruslan Shupak still has problems with an injured knee, and Braud injured his hand in competition last week. Both are already on the road to recovery.

Following the EIGL competition will be the New England Championships and the NCAAs, both of which are during the month of April.

Police sweep tabs rabbi

JERUSALEM (AP) — Police searched houses in the Jewish enclave in Hebron for weapons and detained a prominent settler rabbi Monday, a day after banning two extremist groups linked to anti-Arab violence in the occupied territories.

The sweep came as Israeli envoys met with PLO chairman Yasser Arafat to discuss new proposals for restarting Palestinian autonomy talks that have been stalled since a Jewish settler massacred Muslims at a Hebron mosque Feb. 25.

The Palestine Liberation Organization has demanded Israel act against settler vigilantes before it will return to the talks. In Hebron, police briefly detained Rabbi Moshe Levinger for questioning about two incidents in recent months at the Tomb of the Patriarchs, a religious site sacred to Jews and Muslims where an American-born settler shot 30 Muslim worshipers to death Feb. 25.

In January, Levinger barged into a Muslim area of the site despite army orders to stay out and in November he allegedly threatened an Islamic religious official, said Moshe Mizrahi, commander of the Judea police.

S. African right wing threatens

VENTERSDORP, South Africa (AP) — A neo-Nazi leader asserted Monday that the sight of his fighters begging Black police for their lives did not hurt his group's credibility.

His blustering was one more sign of the greatest threat from South Africa's right wing - its fanaticism even in the face of humiliation.

"We will use any means and ways to keep our people free and independent in the fatherland which my ancestors paid for in installments of blood and tears," Eugene TerreBlanche said. He berated reporters who questioned him about the horrifying television and newspaper pictures of three of his men being killed in Bophuthatswana.

Interracial prom dates banned

WEDOWEE, Ala. (AP) - A high school principal who students said had tried to ban interracial dates at the senior prom and told a mixed-race student she was a "mistake" was suspended Monday pending an investigation.

The action was taken after an emotional school board hearing over Randolph County High School Principal Hulond Humphries' comments, which reduced her to tears. The Randolph County school board's only black member was joined by four whites in voting to suspend Humphries with pay pending an "immediate, serious, in earnest and in full scope" investigation into his actions. The other two board members dissented.

AIDS supporters gather

BOSTON (AP) — Family and friends of people who have died of AIDS gathered at the Statehouse Monday to remember their loved ones and forge ahead to find a cure for the HIV virus.

"While we're here to remember, we're also here to rededicate ourselves to the fights against AIDS," said Mike Savage, director of the Fenway Community Health Center.

Project ABLE, a coalition of some 200 AIDS service providers, set up a "Wall of Remembrance" in the Statehouse's Doric Hall. The panels feature photographs, letters and other mementos of people who have died from AIDS.

In his budget for the fiscal year that begins July 1, Gov. William Weld is seeking an increase of approximately $3,300 in six years.

HECC did not realize the financial situation of the students because they are so far removed from the schools," said Amy Lloyd, legislative coordinator of SCERA.

Stanely Koplik, the chancellor of HECC spoke at the meeting in favor of no increase in tuition. Koplik cited his recent tour of Massachusetts' colleges and universities as reason for his position.

"Koplik said more students are taking off time from school because they couldn't afford it, they are doing more work– study programs and taking less classes to save money," Mombourguette said.

Koplik also said the increase in pressure from groups around Massachusetts signaled a need to stop tuition from increasing.

The Student Government Association and SCERA began taking action on fighting for a zero percent increase in tuition and fees on Feb. 2 when David Nunez, former SGA president issue an ultimatum to Chancellor David K. Scott.

Scott's refusal to support the students resulted in the takeover of the Admissions Building on Feb. 14. The takeover made national news and gained the backing from Scott on the students demand of no increase in tuition.

"The zero percent increase in tuition is the result of four months of hard work by the students," Lloyd said.

After the long fight with the administration and legislature, students at the University of Massachusetts will not see an increase in tuition for next semester.

At a meeting in Boston yesterday, the Higher Education Coordinating Council unanimously voted on a zero percent tuition increase for all state universities and community colleges starting June 1.

"Today's verdict was monumental because the state is finally acknowledging the financial problems that the students are facing," said Marc Mombourguette, legislative coordinator of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy.

HECC recommended a zero to two percent increase in student fees, not including room and board. The Administration and Finance Committee of the Board of Trustees will hold a meeting tomorrow to decide on what their recommendation to the full board on April 6 will be.

"HECC also said that it would begin to do gradual increases in tuition, instead of huge jumps," Mombourguette said. "Smaller increases are easier to compensate for."

Prayer call at Hampshire

Muslims end Ramadan with Eid celebration

By JUAN JOSE CHACON QUIROS
Collegian Staff

Azaan is the Muslim call to prayer. It was used on Sunday night in Hampshire College to call people to the celebration of the Eid, marking the end of a month of fasting named Ramadan.

After thirty days of fasting, an spiritual cleansing experience, Eid (which means celebration) takes place. It celebrates the expectations of the fastin period, being wiser, having learned to do good, to say good, to hear good.

There are two Eids in Islam. Eid al Hajj, takes place during the annual pilgrimage during Zil hajj, the last month in the Islamic calendar or June in the Gregorian calendar. Eid al Fitr is celebrated after Ramadan. According to the Hampshire College Student Association, organizers of this event, Eid al Fitr "is the most celebrated Islamic festival around the globe."

During the event people greet each other Eid Mubarak, phrase used to say happy greeting for Eid. Mohammed Ladha, a citizen of Tanzania, read from the Holy Quran. The passage was taken from Chapter of Sura Maidah or Chapter of the Table Spread, verses 68 and 69: "Lo! those who believe, and those who are Jews, and Sabeans, and Christians — whosoe believeth in Allah and the Last Day and doth right— there shall be no fear come upon them neither shall they grieve." The voice and eloquence of the reader created the proper atmosphere for the words to be meaningful.

The participants in the celebration, already spelled by the readings, startled to the voice of Nadia Jail, who sang the Hamd, a praise of the Almighty. She was followed by words from Hampshire President Gregory Prince Jr. He expressed the "importance of having a diversity on campus and of celebrating cultural and religious events." The Eid is an institutionally supported event.

Perhaps without the funding for this event, Fariba Nawa may have not read poetry from Persian poet Hafiz. She read "The New Day" based on the Nawroz or Persian New Year.

Jamal Ilias, an Amherst College religion professor, was also on hand for the activities.

The event benefited from the words of Jamal Ilias, a religion Professor at Amherst College, and Ahmad Dallal, Five College religion Professor. Ilias explained how the meaning of Ramadan is to put yourself "in the position of those who suffer, who lack water and food." He also expressed that by fasting you are gaining compassion for those circumstances. Ahmad's speech overlaped with the ideas of Ilias. He talked about the Hebron Massacre and how it meant to go beyond the meaning of a month of fastin. A minute of silence was held for the massacre of Muslims in Palestine, Bosnia and other place of the world.

This section of the event was concluded with the beautiful voice of Sumeeya Chishti who sang Munajaat, the final prayer of the night.

The second part of the event consisted of a delicious dinner for everybody. The menu consisted of spiced and cashewnut rice, chiken peas, Gulab Jamu (sweet desser) and Chiken Masala (curry chiken). After Dinner, Bashir from Chai Khanna or Tea House of Northampton performed Sufi, a cultural and religiously based show.

According to Mohammed Ladha the event "culturally enriched the Five College community from other people from other cultures and from other geographical areas." He added how "the end of Ramadan is specially important in the U.S. where Muslims are a minority."

Hundreds of University of Massachusetts athletes and fans gathered at the Curry Hicks Cage last night to give a warm send off to the UMass men's basketball team as it prepares for its NCAA tournament game Thursday.

The pep rally, which featured performances by the UMass basketball band, the cheerleaders and the Funk Club, was highlighted by the appearance of the men's basketball team and Head Coach John Calipari.

Calipari praised the UMass fans for supporting the team and for generally showing class throughout the season. He also praised the efforts of his own team.

"This is the most talented team I have ever coached without a doubt," Calipari said. "There is no selfishness on this team. The players are looking to make plays for each other."

"All I can say is that we're going to be in the Final Four down in Charlotte," said junior forward Lou Roe.

The pep rally was also an opportunity to recognize the other UMass varsity teams and the outstanding performers on each team. Bermuda, Florida, Cancun. The possibilities are endless. Spring break is just around the corner, and University of Massachusetts students are leaving Amherst behind and keeping local travel agencies buzzing with activity.

According to the US Travel Agency in the Campus Center, the popular places for spring break are Cancun and Florida. The components for a package are simple: suntan oil, sunglasses, a credit card, and a hefty amount of money.

"The students spend about $500 to $1,000 dollars if you count plane fare and spending money," said Katie Boisvert, the receptionist at US Travel. "We have been inundated with phone calls. We have been really busy."

Boisvert said the trips are booked in groups to Daytona Beach and Cancun. There have been some bookings for ski packages in Vermont.

"People come and they want to go someplace warm because they have had a bad winter," said Terry Atkinson, an agent for Adventura Travel in Amherst. "We are busy."

According to Atkinson, the agency has received about 200 inquiring phone calls per day because of spring break activity and a recent air fare war with commercial airlines.

Atkinson said that she has seen an increase in student travel this year than in past years, and cited a rise in the economy and said that the popular destinations are in the Caribbean and in Mexico.

Second top official resigns from post

By CAROLYN SKORNECK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Associate Attorney General Webster Hubbell, a longtime friend of President and Mrs. Clinton, resigned Monday, saying distractions from a probe at his former law firm "will interfere with my service to the country."

Hubbell was the second high-ranking Clinton official to resign in just over a week. White House Counsel Bernard Nussbaum quit under fire on March 5 after revelations of White House briefings with federal regulators who are investigating an Arkansas savings and loan with ties to the Clintons.

The president said Hubbell had done valuable work at the Justice Department but "he made the right decision" to resign and return home to Arkansas to deal with an investigation into billings he charged while in private law practice.

As a personal friend, Clinton said he found it "hard to believe" that Hubbell was guilty of wrongdoing.

Attorney General Janet Reno said his departure would be a loss for the Justice Department, where he has been the No. 3 official for nine months. "I don't believe he did a thing wrong," she said.

Hubbell did not attend Reno's brief news conference, but released a statement recalling the "wonderful journey" he took from Little Rock, Ark., to Washington a year ago when Clinton was inaugurated.

He lamented that "private issues" involving his billings at the Rose Law Firm in Little Rock, where he and Hillary Rodham Clinton were partners, were "elevated to public speculation." He said he was confident the dispute would be resolved satisfactorily. The law firm has been investigating whether Hubbell overbilled clients. He has denied doing so and has said he was cooperating with the firm's probe.

Women and HIV discussed

By AMY MACDOUGALL
Collegian Correspondent

Drugs, the feeling of hopelessness and the non-questioning of traditional sex roles are reasons for the rising rates of infection for women, an experienced nurse asserted at a was the topic of a lecture given by Ellen Miller-Mack last night the Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton.

Ellen Miller–Mack, a women's health nurse practitioner of seventeen years, works at the Brightwood Riverview Health Center in Springfield and focuses on HIV in a primary care setting. Her lecture was titled, "A Medical, Social and Political Perspective on Women and HIV."

REBECCA PETERSON/COLLEGIAN

Ellen Miller-Mack

She deals with the health needs and other concerns of HIV patients as well as going to the Hampden County prison each week to provide care for the HIV patients there and plan post–discharge care with them.

Miller–Mack began her lecture by giving statistics on the 36,000 women currently diagnosed with AIDS in the United States. Of those 36,000 women, she said, 70% were African American and Latino women, 51% were intravenous drug users, and that the child-bearing years, between the ages of 15 and 45, is when most women are diagnosed with the AIDS virus.

She went on to discuss the rising rate of infection among women was due to sex, drugs, the traditional sex roles that state that women accept the way things are and don't have the self esteem to question them.

She also discussed the low expectation of risk, about which she explained that for those women living in constant crisis rooted in poverty and always expecting the worst, unprotected sex is not that big of a deal. The last issue concerning the rise of the rate of infection was that of lack of routine health care, due in most cases to lack of insurance, transportation and language barriers.

"There are many practical issues that women with HIV have to deal with," Miller–Mack said. Among those are housing, health insurance, a source of income, employment and child care. Since most of the women diagnosed with AIDS are mothers, the latter is crucial for the times when the infection takes lts toll and the mother may not have someone to take care of her children.

In response to this problem, there is a "Stand By Guardianship" bill that was lobbied for Monday at the State House which would offer this sort of temporary child care for those women who need it

Miller–Mack concluded by discussing some methods of preventing the spread of HIV, which included focusing not only on education, but also on behavioral changes concerning risk perception and condom use. "But the thing to keep in mind," she said, "is that AIDS and HIV is only a symptom of the very, very, serious problems that we have as a society."

fall from any role in the department's investigation of the Clintons' investment in the Whitewater Development Corp., the co-owner of which also owned Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan. The Rose firm had represented Madison in the past, and Hubbell later sued an accounting firm blamed in the thrift's failure on behalf of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

Hubbell said he would "stand and take the blows from wherever they came" if they affected only him. But he decided to resign, he said, because "I believe too much in this country, the president, the attorney general, the Justice Department, my wife and family, and my colleagues."

"After a thoughtful weekend, I believe that my continued service will not be as effective as it has been; that the distractions on me at this time will interfere with my service to the country and the president's agenda, and that my family, although totally supportive, is being harmed," he said.

Hubbell said his association with Reno "has meant more to me than words can describe. She knows that I consider her one of America's heroes."

As for the Clintons, Hubbell said their 20-year friendship "has been a never-ending source of pride and sustenance. Their support of me has been unfailing."

Hubbell said he hopes to re-enter public service some day. House Republican Whip Newt Gingrich of Georgia, renewing a call for congressional hearings on Whitewater, said he was disturbed that Reno said Hubbell was leaving to take care of old private issues."

Beantown greets Clinton

By TERENCE HUNT
Associated Press

BOSTON — Hammered for days about the Whitewater affair, President Clinton got a welcome respite from his troubles Monday when a flag-waving crowd of thousands of people gave him thunderous welcome at a waterfront rally.

"I'm thrilled by this enormous crowd, honored by your enthusiasm and support," the president said in a speech at Rowes Wharf.

He got the kind of reception that politicians dream about — and one that could be counted on in heavily Democratic Massachusetts. Warming up the audience, Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., said Clinton would go down in history as one of "the great heroes, the great presidents of this country."

Other speakers praised Clinton as a president who fights for health care, anti-crime measures, jobs and welfare reform. "If we can go back to Washington and wipe away all the forces that seek to demean, to divide, to downgrade and just focus on the spirit and the hope and the dignity we see in the faces of these young people here, we could solve the problems of this country and do it in short order.

"That is what we ought to be about," Clinton said.

Clinton took a boatride across Boston Harbor from the airport to the speech site. His entourage was accompanied by a fireboat that spewed water high into the air. A Dixieland quartet and a fife and drum corps in colonial costume enlivened the scene.

During the boatride, the president called Associate Attorney General Webster Hubbell, a close friend, who resigned to deal with an investigation at his former law firm in Arkansas. "It was personal, to buck him up," a senior administration official said. Clinton came here to speak at a $1,000-a-plate Democratic fund-raiser expected to raise close to $1 million.

For days, the White House has been swamped by the Whitewater investigation of the Clintons' investment in a failed Arkansas land development deal and its ties defunct savings and loan. Six White House officials and four Treasury officials were subpoenaed to testify about questionable contacts with federal regulators on the status of the investigation.

Administration officials expressed determination to press ahead. "We'll do everything we can to get attention back on the things that matter," White House press secretary Dee Dee Myers said. She said polls showing public uncertainty about Whitewater and Clinton's actions "reflect a lot of negative publicity. I don't think it's an item for long-term concern," she said.

increase in activity and estimates an even bigger rise in sales on Thursday and Friday as spring break approaches.

"A lot of people are going to Boston, and it seems like a lot of people are escaping on Wednesday and Thursday instead of waiting until Friday," said Brian Deeley, an employee at the Peter Pan terminal in the Campus Center.

Deeley also said that there have been many inquiries about routes and times to Logan International Airport and Bradley International Airport.

Forecast cites New England spring floods

By MELISSA B. ROBINSON
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Winter may be over but the heavy snow it left behind could mean spring floods in western parts of Connecticut, Massachusetts and New Hampshire and much of Vermont, the National Weather Service said Monday.

"This whole area is just prime for flooding," said Frank Richards, a National Weather Service hydrologist, at a news conference. "Whether that risk is realized depends on how fast the snow melts."

The service's 1994 spring flood outlook predicted high flood potential in Pennsylvania, New York, Vermont and western parts of Connecticut, Massachusetts, New Hampshire and New Jersey. Also at high risk are eastern parts of the Dakotas and western Minnesota.

Specifically, rapidly melting snow, plus heavy rain, would almost assure serious flooding in the Susquehanna, Delaware, Hudson and Connecticut river basins of the Northeast, the service said. Last week, heavy rain and warmer temperatures combined to put most of New England on a flood alert. There were puddles more than a foot deep in Concord, N.H., more than two dozen flooded basements in Providence, R.I., and a leaky roof that closed a state motor vehicle office in Lowell, Mass.

Besides melting snow, the weather service also warned of ice jam flooding on northern rivers that remain covered with as much as three feet of ice.

If rivers rise rapidly before the ice softens, the ice can break and jam in sharp bends, bridge abutments or other constricted river areas, creating dams that cause rapid, upstream flooding.

Once a jam breaks, water can surge downstream, sometimes carrying along large ice chunks that contribute to flood damage.

Two gear up for National College Dance Festival

By AMY MACDOUGALL
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts Dance Department won highest honors in the Northeast Regional American College Dance Festival that took place February 25–27 at Boston University.

Seventeen UMass dance students attended the festival attended by 39 colleges from the Northeast. The pieces submitted by UMass include Forest, and Believing Me.

The former was performed by nine dancers at the festival and was choreographed by Billbob Brown, an artist in residence here at UMass.

The latter is a duet performed by Tony Silva and Elizabeth Della Ratta. Silva, a senior BFA candidate choreographed and composed the music for this piece.

The two pieces were both well received by the judges and the audience. Although Forest was not selected, Believing Me was chosen from over 50 dances for a performance at the Festival's Gala concert February 27, and was invited to perform at the Sixth National College Dance Festival at the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts in Washington D.C. on April 28–30.

Monday in the Campus Center, the UMass Dance Department hosted an open seminar in which they discussed the craft of choreography and the art of performance.

The two pieces, Forest and Believing Me were shown on videotape and the group discussed what they learned at the festival.

The students were then arranged on a panel moderated by Brown in which were given a chance to share their experiences at the festival with those unable to attend.

There was a question and answer session at the end which discussed the vital issues of choreography and assessed the pieces' criticisms.

■ STARS

Alumni Relations Office started STARS last semester in an effort to bring the UMass alumni and the UMass students closer together. She said the group plans, publicizes and runs campus events such as Family Day, Homecoming, Senior Celebration and reunions.

STARS Ex–Officio President Derick Cheeseboro–Weaver, a freshman Hotel, Restaurant and Travel Administration major, said the events such as the pep rally build school spirit which provide students with fond memories of the University after they graduate.

"The main objective of the program is to get involved with students so that when they graduate they look back at all of the good times they had here," Cheeseboro–Weaver said.

Senior psychology major Lisa Jenike, the co–chair of STARS said they are also working with the Mather Career Center to set up a "mentor program" with UMass alumni. She said several UMass alumni have expressed interest in sharing their experiences with students by giving lectures and by providing them with career advice.

PRINCIPLES of SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING

UNFORTUNATELY, THIS IS WHERE PEOPLE ARE PUTTING TOO MANY RETIREMENT DOLLARS.

Every year, a lot of people make a huge mistake on their taxes. They don't take advantage of tax deferral and wind up sending Uncle Sam money they could be saving for retirement.

Fortunately, that's a mistake you can easily avoid with TIAA-CREF SRAs. SRAs not only ease your current tax-bite, they offer a remarkably easy way to build retirement income—especially for the "extras" that your regular pension and Social Security benefits may not cover. Because your contributions are made in before-tax dollars, you pay less taxes now. And since all earnings on your SRA are tax-deferred as well, the money you don't send to Washington works even harder for you. Down the road, that can make a dramatic difference in your quality of life.

What else makes SRAs so special. A range of allocation choices—from the guaranteed security of TIAA to the diversified investment accounts of CREF's variable annuity—all backed by the nation's number one retirement system.

Benefit now from tax deferral. Call our SRA hotline 1 800-842-2733, ext. 8016.

System maintains stability

Some observers disillusioned with American government today would have you believe that two–party politics is the cause of all of our political malaise. This view fails to recognize two fundamental points: that the current problems in this country are a result of an underinformed and apathetic public, and those democracies which have multiparty representation are often plagued by a new set of problems that bipartisanship avoids.

We must first understand the nature of parties. in Democracy in America, Frenchman Alexis de Tocqueville says that "great political parties are those more attached to principles than to consequences, to generalities rather than to particular cases, to ideas rather than to personalities." So the role of parties, then, is to provide a forum where legislators can weather the changes in the political climate, swim through the waves of public opinion, and hold steadfastly to their political convictions.

Andrew Davidson

Unfortunately, the election process can often undermine this ideological bond which holds people together. British political economist Christopher Pierson argues that "in the political 'market' both voters and governments are able to avoid or at least deflect the consequences of spending decisions and thus to seek benefits without taking due account of costs."

In effect, what elected officials do is compete, on the open market, for your vote; their brand name is the party line they toe. Each party promises you more from your government at a lower cost on your 1040. Now, if there were, say, six parties instead of two, how could the informed voter distinguish between what they could really expect from their government?

But there are some countries which have worked a multiparty system directly into their constitutions. The Netherlands, for example, assigns seats in its lower house proportional to the number of votes a certain party gets nationwide. France has a similar system; the stability of their government is evidenced by the fact that they're on their fifth republic. These systems to preserve the multiparty nature of the government.

But most other governments are, like the United States, a representative democracy, where members of Congress represent only the district from where they live. Now, let us look at history and see what multiparty democracy has done to the stability of and prosperity of governments.

After Germany lost the first World War, a new democratic government was established affectionately known as the Weimar Republic. While the new democracy was well meaning, it fell upon some hard times. The early 1920s saw a decline in the value of the German mark that valued it at less than one four–trillionth of the dollar and eroded nearly every German's family savings. The economic slowdown which destroyed the United States in the early '30s hit Germany even harder.

Now enter multiparty government. With Germany in such disarray, the Nazi party took 107 seats in the Reichstag (Germany's parliament) and seized control of German hysteria over their economic crisis. Less than three years later, Adolf Hitler was elected Chancellor of Germany, and it took him less than two years to become the sole ruler by August of 1934.

While this may be one isolated incident, it does show how the multiparty democracy is unable to weather political and economic turbulence. To the dismay of many local liberals and radicals, two–party politics does exclude socialists and communists. But, conversely, it also excludes fascism.

What our two–party system does remarkably well is to keep the ideological focus in this country centralized, to prevent shifts in political winds from creating too much unnecessary instability.

The two–party system inherent in our government helps preserve the institutions that were erected when our grandparents were voters. Imagine, if you will, if Ronald Reagan assumed the presidency under a multi–party democracy. He did enough to dismantle the social programs that today's homeless came to rely on; only the Democratic party was strong enough to prevent him from completely eliminating the Department of Energy. Were he facing a less unified coalition of parties, the overly conservative tide that swept the country in the early '80s would have had a far greater impact the we would have liked.

While it may produce other problems, our two–party system fosters an hisorical stabilty that few democracies have experienced. The fundamental problem in our democracy is not that the government is beyond our reach; rather, voters do not take the necessary steps to make their elected officials accountable to the public.

The two–party system has been in effect ever since the days of Jefferson and Hamilton; only the names of the parties have changed. The difference today is not the erosion of the system but the apathy and ambivelance of the undereducated voter.

The NCAA road to nowhere

Living on the road. When you cover the Massachusetts men's basketball team, the only way you can do a half–way decent job is by following the Minutemen. All year long I've been waiting for spring break and the trip to the NCAA Tournament. I knew I'd be going somewhere and I'd find out on Selection Sunday. What a wait — I was on the road to nowhere.

When the brackets started appearing, I was praying for St. Petersburg, Florida. i promised to never again write a discouraging word about the Mullins Center. I said I'd never again criticize people who drink Diet Coke and overindulge at dinner and, the big one, I vowed not to drink illegally another day in my life.

Well, as the Southeast was revealed, Duke popped up as No. 2. Gimme a break. I suddenly put down the suntan lotion and thought for a minute. Where, oh, where can I be going now?

Gone were the visions of palm trees, the ocean, beautiful bodies, the idea of laying back with a Pina Colada in one hand and an NCAA media guide in the other.

But wait! Sacramento, California, wouldn't be a bad place to spend the next two weeks. I've never been to the West Coast, let alone west of Notre Dame. I once again clutched the lotion and felt the heat on the back of my neck.

"The second seed in Sacramento: the Arizona Wildcats."

I immediately dropped the damn bottle of baby oil and was upset to say the least. There was only one place I could go that wasn't revealed. Visions of tornadoes started to creep into my mind as CBS' James Brown revealed Michigan as No. 3. Sure they'd match us up with the Fab Four. Make it as tough as possible.

Wichita, Kansas. They put us in Wichita? Where is Wichita, anyway? Isn't that where Dorothy and Toto got swept away and ended up on a trip to see the Wizard? I was going to be sleeping in a hotel surrounded by tumbleweed and cornfields.

Arthur Stapleton Jr.

If we did get taken away by a tornado, I guess the Minutemen could give the TIn Man, the Cowardly Lion and the Scarecrow some qualities: heart, reckless abandon and intelligence suddenly come to mind. After hearing John Calipari 37,000 times, you start to believe it.

Maybe it's destiny, anyway. I'd rather hang out in a tee– shirt and shorts on a basketball court instead of a Speedo at poolside. The last weather report from Wichita was 65 degrees and sunny — a hell of a lot better than Amherst. I hope when I step off the plane in Kansas I'll be able to touch ground without falling in three inches of slush.

The media guide says Wichita is a city of fascinating contradictions. Sounds a lot like UMass. Visitors are bewitched by the mixture of the old and the new. I don't know if bewitched is the word I would have used to entice people to come to Wichita. Then again, I don't have a choice. The NCAA selection committee decided where I was going for Spring Break.

Now it's the Minutemen who make my travel plans. Win two and I'm off to Big D, falter and I'm home to Jersey. I guess I'll enjoy this road to nowhere.

At least we're not going to Delaware. Or Buffalo.

Rivals congratulate Lizana & Raphaely

To the editor:

We would like to formally congratulate Trustee Al Lizana and President–elect Mirran Raphaely on their respective re– election and election to the highest posts of student leadership here at UMass. Although we ran against them and lost, we consider the election a success because It brought many important issues to the forefront of student consciousness.

We hope that student awareness of the issues is maintained and organized to assist in making the changes that will help us all. We fully support the Trustee and President–elect and hope to assist them in the fight for student empowerment. The election was a long and sometimes bumpy road for all the candidates, but it is our hope that we can all now consolidate and use our respective constituencies to further student interests.

We would also like to thank all those who stood in the cold, wind, snow and rain to help us with our campaign and also thank the voters for participating in the election.

Again, congrats, Al and Mirran, on a hard–fought victory, and good luck as you prepare to lead UMass' fight for student empowerment!

Senator takes issue with tone of article

To the editor:

I would like to take this opportunity to express my disappointment with the way in which the Collegian addressed the recent Student Government elections ["Illegal votes scar election," Collegian, March 11]. I distinctly remember the conversations I had with the reporter, Justin Doyle, on the evening before the article was printed, and was amazed to discover what actually was printed the following morning.

The article unjustly holds Joseph Vozza, President of the Intrafraternity Council and Diego Figueroa, Chair of the SGA Finance Committee, responsible for a problem within the SGA elections. All candidates who ran for office during this election did so with integrity, perseverance, and an extraordinary amount of hard work. As I read the Collegian, the only thing mentioned was a "scandal." I also remember discussing with Mr. Doyle the fact that the incident of ballot–stuffing during the campaign was one that hurt everyone in all campaigns.

During the past month, it has been made clear to me that neither Joe, Diego, nor any of their campaign staff would have been involved with anything against election rules. However, there was nothing printed about the fact that whoever stuffed the ballots did so independently and ended up hurting Diego and Joe more than anyone else.

Unfortunately, the damage has already been done to both Joe and Diego, two people who were hurt and shocked over the entire incident, two people who ran an excellent campaign and will continue to lead our campus into the future. I do not believe that the Collegian realized that the tone of the article was one that assumed Joe and Diego's guilt before any official statement had been released by the SGA.

It seems like the desire for a scandal has surpassed the desire to do students of the campus community the justice they deserve through fair reporting. I can only hope that the next article confirming the election results is one that focuses on the increased voter turnout, the success of all campaigns, and the future of what will prove to be an excellent year for Student Government.

Says pot reformists just want to get high

To the editor:

As an objectivist, I support the legalization of all drugs — a person should be allowed to inject any substance into his or her body as long as he/she takes personal responsibility for his/her actions. I do not use drugs, nor support their use, but I will not impose my will upon another's personal freedom.

I must, however, condemn the actions of the UMass Cannabis Reform Coalition. I do not believe the members are acting out of some altruistic cause designed to better society. I believe the members simply want to get stoned legally. If this is true, so be it — I could not care less what they do to their bodies. The Coalition, however, should not hide behind the false pretense of acting for "the common good." If cannabis were legalized for every use except recreation, would they quit their cause pleased with the results or cry injustice? Hypocrites!

Coach teaches team to make UM proud

To the editor:

In response to the recent letter to the editor in the Collegian, I want to apologize for the behavior of the UMass basketball team members in Public Health 233, "Sex, Drugs and AIDS." There is no room for the type of behavior referred to in the letter by any member of the UMass commununity. As highly visible members of this community, my student athletes must learn to carry themselves in a manner that makes the University proud, both on and off the basketball court. I try to instill this feeling of University pride in them at all times. However, like many young people, lessons must be learned in order to grow.

I have discussed this matter with the appropriate individuals who are in the class, and I feel they better understand the severity of their actions and words as a result. Thank you for bringing this to my attention. I hope through this incident my players learn the importance of maturity and open expression of ideas in a culturally diverse community such as UMass, as well as carrying that ideal into life beyond graduation.

Groups thanked for bringing speaker

To the editor:

I would like to send my thanks to all of the students and organizations that brought Minister Louis Farrakhan to this campus. If Farrakhan had been stopped from coming, it not only would have been a great tragedy for African–American students but also for the entire UMass community.

The Farrakhan I witnessed last Wednesday night and the Farrakhan presented through the media were two totally different people. In the media, Farrakhan is displayed as a hate–monger that despises Whites, Jews, Asians, and any other group of people that are not Black. The Farrakhan I listened to was a man concerned not only about the future of African–Americans but also about humanity in general.

He did not spew hate upon his audience but, rather, showed us a history of a people's suffering, which he was not willing to forget. Farrakhan rightfully criticized many of my White ancestors for their mistreatment of Black people, but he was also quick to point out that there were Whites in history that did rise above the mentality of racism to help Black people.

We as a society fear Farrakhan because he will not let us forget a past that many would like to banish from their minds. Farrakhan forcefully thrusts his hands upon the foundations of our complacency and is determined not to let go. When the complacency of our society is shaken this violently it frightens us, and the first thing we want to do is silence or murder the person who is challenging us.

So instead of riding the bandwagon of protest against a man that most of us know little or nothing about, we should be trying to educate ourselves to find out what this controversial figure really stands for. Do not just read the headlines about him, instead study and think critically about his speeches in the context that they were written. You may find, as I have, that you do not agree with many of his ideas about certain issues. But, if you listen to Farrakhan with an open mind you will not only gain knowledge about the pain and struggles of another people, you may also learn something about yourself. I know that I did.

Struggle of the Palestinians continues...

When Major Baruch Goldstein opened fire on the worshipers at the mosque in Hebron, he not only gunned dozens of Palestinian worshipers, but also killed many popula: illusions about Israel and the "peace process."

Baruch Goldstein was, as all Palestinians, Israelis and other Middle Easteners are well aware, far from an isolated madman. He was a direct and unavoidable product of consistent Israeli state policy and the political ideology of Zionism. As his political party, Kach, pointed out, the massacre in Hebron was "not the work of a madman, but made perfect sense within the context of his political experience."

> Israel is not prepared to withdraw from the Occupied Territories and give Palestinians their basic human rights.
> -UMass Coalition for the Defense of Palestine

The onion–sniffing Israeli rulers who condemn Goldstein's action are the same people who put him there, armed him, gave him a socio–political environment of racist apartheid as his guide, and taught him how to kill Arabs at will. Those who argue that the ruling Labor party bares less burden than its rival Likud would have us forget that the Kiryat Arba settlement was established by Golda Mier's Labor government shortly after it had seized the West Bank by force in 1967.

The history of Israeli colonialism, violence and racism against Palestinians is the history of the Labor party. It is they as much as the Likud and the rest of Israeli society which established the "context of political experience" that drove Baruch Goldstein to kill. Just a few months ago, this very Labor government set off in a fit of ethnic cleansing in Lebanon, leaving hundreds dead and hundreds of thousands homeless. Prime Minister Rabin openly said that displacing civilians (i.e. ethnic cleansing) was his aim.

So, why should Baruch not kill? As the members of Kach pointed out, everything he had been taught in New York and Israel encouraged him to open fire. Indeed, the "Commision of Inquiry" investigating the massacre was told by Israeli officials that, as Palestinians are shot down daily like dogs, the policy in the West Bank was NEVER to open fire on an Israeli settler, and that while Goldstein was mowing down the worshipers the soldiers would have been under orders to wait for him to empty his clip and then try to subdue him by non–lethal means. Thus Rabbi Perin's observation at Goldstein's funeral that "One million Arabs are not worth a sigle jewish fingernail" was amply reflected in Israeli government policy.

Further indication of this deep harmony behind tissue–thin condemnations is the fact that more Palestinians than Goldstein shot have been killed by the Israeli Army in the days following the massacre as well over forty Arabs have been shot trying to express their grief. The Israeli reaction to Goldstein acts has been not only to kill more Palestinians, but to imprison over one million in their homes, and other brutal collective measures. As for the settlers, while false promises have been made, they continue by all accounts to roam free, armed to the teeth. As for the "Commission of Inquiry," as Israeli journalist Haim Baram has noted, "Zionists will probe other Zionists on behalf of Zionism and in order to achieve Zionist aims."

The fundamental fact is simple and easy to understand: informed by the ideology of Zionism, Israel is not prepared to withdraw from the Occupied Territories and give Palestinians their basic human rights. This is, was and will continue to be the source of conflict in Palestine and between Arabs and Israelis. Baruch Goldstein and the Israeli army both kill for this aim, in the same uniforms and with the same guns, as well as the same ideology.

While the Rabin government may have engaged Yasser Arafat in the Oslo accords, it has done its best to ensure that the entire process is an exercise in humiliation for Arafat and his cronies. Israel itself has systematically undermined the very "peace process" it entered into. In the wake of the massacre, Israel well knows that it can sign whatever it likes with Arafat, since he no longer enjoys the support of large numbers of Palestinians living under occupation. The youths who fight the Israelis in the street, the "shabab," and organized resistance groups like Hamas will never accept this kind of defeat.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Two Israeli soldiers stand guard at a playground as a young resident looks on at the Jewish settlement of Kfar Tapuah. Extremist leaders have moved underground as Israeli police continue to arrest fugitives associated with two recently banned radical organizations.

Conflict is inevitable, as the Israelis have ensured. The age–old Zionist dream of tranfer, partially completed in 1948 and 1967, returns to haunt Palestine. This, after all, was the dream common to Baruch Goldstein and the founders of the Israeli state. Outside the Middle East, many blithely dismiss the concept as "unworkable in the 1990s." But, the Rabin government experimented with the regional and international reaction to ethnic cleansing in Lebanon last summer, and events in Yugoslavia indicate that outside powers will, in fact, sit by and watch.

But the massacre and its aftermath demonstrate that Israeli action at the very least leads swiftly in that direction. The "peace process" is a fraud and a sham, and can only serve as a build up to the final days of Palestine.

Palestinians know this. They will never accept it. The struggle is just beginning.

Demasking the enemies of the Chiapas Revolution
Mexican analyst looks at the reasons for uprising

By JOEL ORTEGA
Special to the Collegian

There are many teachings to be derived from the Jan. 1 uprising. One of them is demasking the economic policies applied during the last twelve years. While in 1981 wages represented 37 percent of the Gross Domestic Product (GDP), by 1991 they had fallen to 25 percent. This is to say that the wage laborers had drastically reduced their participation in the distribution of wealth. In exchange, in a shameful fashion they "fought the poverty" that the model itself created, with less than one percent of all the goods and services created in the country.

The "model," praised by strong national and International financial capital, only empoverished the country, augmenting the social porblems and risking the political "stability" that the "revolutionary" governments held as the accomplishments of the Mexican Revolution.

In such a picture, the armed revolt of the EZLN and the indigenous people is not strange. But is not only poverty and misery which explains the Chiapas uprising. The government and its supporters have spread this thesis, along with a strong dose of cynicism, to demonstrate that if poverty was the fundamental factor for this uprising, other revolts would have occured in other parts of Mexico as miserable as Chiapas. It's true, not only in that region, that there is misery. The Salinismo policies have the "virtue" of having generalized poverty at a national level, including of course, the urban centers.

The ingredients of marginalization, of opression, of racial discrimination, of crime, of expulsion of entire communities, arbitriety, deposition, "caciquismo," "guardias blancas," illiteracy, corruption and other "precious" characters of capitalistic modernity (that to tranquilize the post–moderns and the intellectual hunting liberals, have spared us the implantation of doctrines buried under the debris of the Berlin Wall), have combined with the political, ideological and military work of the EZLN, making possible the January 1 uprsing.

The police–like behavior has always explained all social movements like the product of conspiracies and subversive actions orchestrated by "agitators, professionals of violence, agents of foreign powers." That's why they assert "you have to kill the dog to kill the rabies."

Fortunately, this can perhaps be one of the best teachings of the Chiapas uprising. Like the "Sup" Marcos likes to say, the military and repressive avenue had been stopped, maybe momentarily, not because of the "political goodwill of the government, or our alleged political and military strength (a mystery for the majority out there), but thanks to the firm actions of the Mexican Civil Society (Marcos, 24–01–94)." At this point we have to slow down a little. The masks of "modernization" and of "first world Salinismo" collapsed, but also the mask of the "ultras," who cheered the EZLN with no congruence, without risking their middle–class privileges.

The first cold water bucket for the ones that got emotional over the armed actions of others; precisely of some others that happen to be Indians, and for that reason concluded that the pacific struggle of the masses was reformists territory, was given by the "cold" Subcomandante Marcos when he wrote: "We think that the revolutionary change in Mexico will not be the product of one way action. This is to say in a strict sense, an armed or pacific revolution. It will principally be a revolution which resulted from a struggle in various social fronts, with different degrees of compromise and participation.

"The result will not be work of a political party, an organization or an alliance of triumphant organizaton with their specific social proposals, but a kind of space of democratic resolution of the confrontation of diverse political proposals. This space of democratic resolution will have three characteristic principles that are historically inseparable: the democracy to decide the dominant social proposal, the liberty to subscribe another proposal, and the justice to which all proposals would adhere to."

Say in blunt words, the "Sup" is asking each one of us to our own job but do it well.

I think that a losing spirit will not help the fight for a new democratic Republic. We cannot despise our achievements, even if they are minimal or unstable. The unilateral cease– fire by the army given to the EZLN, the amnesty, the crisis in the Carlos Salinas government, the appointment of the Commissioner of Peace, the demonstrations and international protests against the military solution and in defense of human rights, the agreement between eight parties and their candidates in favor of clean and credible elections; all constitute concrete manifestations of the power of society and of the density of democracy.

In these memorable days, we have seen flourish everywhere the participation of thousands in favor of democracy, liberty, peace and justice. The young people who collected food, clothing and medicine; the mobilizations for peace against the massacre; intellectuals analysing and explaining the historic, cultural, ethnic, agrarian, social and political nature behind the Chiapas uprising. Strong and objective jounalism that helped to know the situation in the jungle and the highlands of Chiapas. Solidarity with the indigenous that exhibited the hypocrite racism of the "coletos" from all over the country, capable of diminishing the racial discrimination in the United States, but that colloquially uses terms as "Naco" and "Indian" like they would use expressions of phobia similar to the obsession of Michael Jackson to change his skin pigment; efforts of leaders and genuine parties to overcome the dicredit of Mexican politics and who assumed their responsibility by condemning the massacre, defending the indigenous, and understanding the profound causes for the EZLN rebellion. They didn't, hypocritically and opportunistically align with the theory of the foreigners and profesionals of violence conspiracy as the explanation of the uprising, but without using the inexplicable cult for the armed solution as the means to achieve democratic change.

Nobody is the owner of the truth. The roads to achieve change are inedited, but it's time to be congruent and to compromise and believe what is being proposed. Some of us, I hope are hundreds of thousands or millions, think that the democratic change possible to begin the journey of liberty and equality is in our hands if we aggregate our strengths and our capabilities, forcing the government to respect the popular will in the August 21 elections. It will only be another stop in the long and difficult trip to attain the libertarian dream for equality and justice. It's time to move and act because, like the prisoners in 1968 said, "el que no se mueve se empioja (if you don't move you get lice!").

The Developing Nations page needs people from all the communities to be part of this effort. The Hebron Massacre, the Zapatista uprising in Chiapas, the events in South Africa, the U.S. Induced crisis with Korea; they all affect us in one way or another. Our aim in this desk is to provide the readers with views and opinions different from the ones you will usually hear in the mainstream media. In this page you have the opportunity to voice your own opinion, in fact we need you! Without your participation this page is just a formality, just words filling space.

In the past we have done a reasonable job in covering issues from Latin America. However, we have problems covering issues from Asia and Africa. There are some large communities in campus like the Cambodians, Cape Verleans, Chinese, whose voices must be heard. We try hard to make sure you feel welcomed but you have to take this last step. Please come down and empower yourselves. Make the world a little bigger for everyone on campus; talk to us about your culture, your problems, your aspirations. If you have newspapers, journals, pictures or anything from your country, bring them down here; we will make good use of this scarce material. Finally, understand that only your participation can have some effect on the quality of this paper.

The Ref: bitter comedy

COURTESY KERRY HAYES

Shirley MacLaine and Nicholas Cage of Guarding Tess.

By ED HUMPHRIES
Collegian Staff

The Ref is a much needed breath of fresh comic air in a season besieged by strained dark comedies. (Look at, or better yet don't, last week's Greedy.)

Simply put, this is a nasty, conniving piece of comedy that knows exactly where to mine its gallows humor, striking deep into the "heart of darkness" rooted in the American suburbs.

Who better to pull off the job than acid-tongued shock comic Denis Leary. Leary's monologues for MTV and Nike were laced with a knowing self-awareness of hatred for "all things petty," and he has committed himself to spewing his rapid fire verbal assaults on everything from trumped up patriotism to the Boston Red Sox.

In The Ref his targets find him, as a couple (Kevin Spacey, Judy Davis) locked in the throes of marital discord and taken hostage by Leary's wary thief unwittingly turn the tables on Leary, holding him hostage to their vicious verbal spats. Also thrown into the mix is an armada of household guests, determined to visit and berate each other through the holiday season. Leary stands alone in the middle as a police dragnet draws closer.

The Ref succeeds where Greedy didn't in its casting (Judy Davis and Kevin Spacey are a heli of a lot better than Ed Begley Jr. and Jere Burns) and its direction. Director Ted Demme (Jonathon's nephew) keeps his comedy bitter and dark, never allowing the script's sentimentality to upstage the verbal sniping amongst family members.

It is the sardonic dialogue that truly fuels the movie. Coupled with Spacey and Davis' performances, the strain of their marriage seems real, thereby forgiving the soul searching that comes later.

And Denis Leary is well adept at the role of referee in these domestic bouts. Not only does he add a layer of compassion to his acerbic wit, he never lets the viewer forget that he is all too knowledgeable of that tender side and is always ready with a stab at himself and the pop-culture that birthed him.

Fiercely funny, this is a film that heads unflinchingly down its dark detours of comedy, but never loses sight of the buoyant (albeit sentimental) waters ahead. Finally a Ref that doesn't need glasses. B+ (Hampshire Six)

'English Only' a touching play

By MEGAN KORTRIGHT
Collegian Correspondent

"I Don't Speak English Only"
Bowker Auditorium
March 12, 1994

Colorado is an "English Only" state; English is its official language. Every public program, notice, speech and debate is in English. Every social service worker, telephone operator and clerk is permitted to speak only on English to the public. If you are new to the country and don't speak English very well, and call 911 in Colorado shouting "Help!", "Fire!" or "Danger!" in any language other than English, you very well may be left alone and helpless.

El Centro Su Teatro, a Latino theater group from Denver, Colo. performed an impressive version of Anthony Garcia's "I Don't Speak English Only" last Saturday night in Bowker Auditorium as part of of the Fine Arts Center Series, in cooperation with New World Theater. The play illustrated the discrimination and opression suffered by many Latin Americans and Latinos in the United States.

The year is 2020 and it is against the law to speak English in public. If people are caught, the "language police" arrest them and carry them off to jail. Alberto, a Mexican-American student of architecture is parted from his class, which is observing the architecture of the city.

Alberto finds himself in a dark alley with Don Guillermo, a homeless Chicano man who had once been arrested for speaking Spanish. Alberto, a law-abiding citizen, refuses to speak Spanish with Don Guillermo. Don Guillermo and four other Latin Americans take Alberto back to his heritage through an awakening journey in which they dance and sing traditional songs, humorize certain acts of sexism, racism and classism, and display many of the frustrations that Alberto's people have been faced with.

Eventually the cultural journey ends and they are all back in the "English only" alley. Alberto realizes how silly he had been by refusing to speak Spanish, depriving himself of a rich and beautiful culture.

"I Don't Speak English Only" was a touching presentation that introduced many people to a truly admirable culture; one alive with song and dance, festivity, love, warmth and precious tradition.

Brown pleases at Iron Horse

By MONICA MALDARI
Collegian Correspondent

Greg Brown
The Iron Horse
March 13, 1994

The ambiance and character of the Iron Horse's cabaret style created the perfect atmosphere in which to hear folk musician Greg Brown play last Sunday night.

Armed with just his acoustic guitar and his deep, melodic, sometimes gruff voice, Brown entertained the audience with his powerful music and witty anecdotes. One endearing quality of his music is its ability to offer a new perspective on the simple pleasures of life, from that first cup of coffee in the morning to trout fishing. Brown's songs also range from the traditional romantic ballads such as "Tell Me It's Gonna Be Alright" to the more realistic love songs like "You Drive Me Crazy."

Brown is a true performer in the sense that he can genuine·y connect with his audience. As in past performances, he is conscious of the audience's mood and plays off of their reactions so that each show is unique and entertaining. During his songs, he creates an atmosphere of joviality by improvising and adding comments. Yet Brown is also capable of silencing the audience when he croons such love songs as "In the Dark With You."

During the show, Brown took some time to describe how the ideas for his songs come to him. Although he initially claimed that he doesn't know anything about writing songs (I beg to differ), Brown explained that the tunes just show up at his house "battered, disheveled and asking to use the phone." So he takes them in, gives them a cup of tea, and voila, he's on the road again.

Brown's music and love of travel has taken him throughout Europe to countries such as Italy, England, Germany and Czechoslovakia. Brown admitted that he must change his style of performance when travelling by focusing more on the music itself instead of using common buzzwords in English during his improvisation. This talent makes him a truly versatile performer.

Simply listening to Brown's CDs just don't do him justice. For true folk music appreciator, Greg Brown must be seen live in order to experience the true essence of his talent. Sunday night's show was the last in Brown's tour of New England. He will now return to his home in Iowa, do some fishing, rescue a few songs that ask to use his phone, and will hopefully be returning to the area very soon.

AC production 'tis far from pity

By HEATHER REDFERN

'Tis Pity She's A Whore
Kirby Theatre, Amherst College
March 10–12, 1994

Imagine, if you will, a time when murder was a mere act of aggression, challenged not by the courts but instead left to the vengeful spite of one's foe. Faithful servants beckoned to the whimsical calls of their bourgeoisie masters, and men followed motives ruled solely by innate impulses of greed, lust and deception.

Within this fictitious world of the 17th century is where playwright John Ford's controversial and erotic 'Tis Pity She's a Whore takes place.

The production performed this past weekend by the Amherst College Department of Theatre and Dance aimed to shed light on the nature of homosexuality and convey the restrictive forces of societal norms and religious faith that prevent man from obtaining willful desires.

Director Michael Birtwistle made use of clever transgender roles to tell the play's story of a hidden, incestuous relationship shared between the young Annabella and her brother, Giovanni.

Infiltrated throughout the story line were romantic affairs, daring sword fights and tragic murders that enabled one to effortlessly follow the surprising ironic twists and climatic moments of the play.

Frequent humorous soliloquies helped to ease audience members' tension after learning of a pact made between the two young lovers which entailed each

Nine Inch Nails
The Downward Spiral
Interscope Records

"I am the needle in your vein, I am the high you can't sustain..." — Mr. Self-Destruct.

Trent Reznor truly has something pulsing through his veins, something deep, dark and angry that has made him produce some of the most anguished, self-loathing and vicious dance-industrial-albums ever.

With The Downward Spiral, Reznor manages to combine the thrash-trash disco of 1990's Pretty Hate Machine with the muscular, speed-guitar workouts of 1992's Broken into a new direction of sound where white noise serves as a backdrop for a whole new pool of tunes that build and fall like slow and severely disturbed waves drowning in their own hate.

The album opens with "Mr. Self-Destruct," a throbbing workout that fluctuates from quiet to violent without a pause. A funky, almost swing-like beat anchors "Piggy," a song whose lighthearted bounce turns dark as the sampled crash of drums bludgeons the melody into submission. "Closer" utilizes a new-wave style wash of synths to back classic Reznor lyrics like, "I want to f— you like an animal/ My whole existence is flawed/ You get me closer to God."

The instrumental "A Warm Place" is the one oasis in the bombardment of anger, a quiet keyboard song that pulses slowly along like a spring breeze. Reznor saves the best for last in the form of "Hurt." Reznor's quietly sings the verses over a whistle of white noise and carefully plucked acoustic guitar, until the chorus builds with tribal drums and airy piano chords. The song ends with the most hopeful lines Reznor has ever written, "If I could start again/ A million miles away/ I would keep myself/ I would find a way."

Reznor has made a record which shares all of the bile and anger shooting through his veins in entrancing and exciting music. We could all do well to listen to this CD and get our own fix. A (B.Babineau)

Th' Faith Healers UK
Imaginary Friend
Elektra Records

Something strange is going on in England. Maybe it is something in the water, or it is just that the kids over there are getting a tad sick of being force fed acts such as Suede and Morrissey. Whatever the reason may be there is definitly some blissful noise pouring off the shores of our friendly neighbors to the east.

Th' Faith Healers UK are partly responsible for this uprising (along with labelmates Stereolab), and their latest release Imaginary Friend only adds another dimension to the whole phenomonon. The album, which is their second in the band's four year career, is a trance inducing noise–fest, owing as much to alternative pioneers The Velvet Underground as to the spaced–out sounds of vintage Spaceman 3.

Tracks such as "Heart Fog" and "The People" contain soft delicate grooves that hauntingly creep along until guitarist Tom Cullinan steps on his distortion pedal and pounds the whole thing into submission.

Th' Faith Healers do not seem interested in so much as writting songs as in writting "moods". This is demonstrated by the final track appropriately titled "Everything, All At Once, Forever". The song is a sprawling forty–minute epic that slowly twists and churns its way into the subconscience, threatening to collapse at any given moment.

While some of the song lengths may be a little excessive, and sometimes the noise factor becomes somewhat irritating, Th' Faith Healers have still managed to create a stunning album, as beutiful as it is menacing. Maybe those Brits aren't as dull as we thought? B+ (M.Audette)

Your Horoscope
By Joane Dixon

ARIES (March 21–April 19): A new source of financial backing appears. Hurray! Drinking apart from old and trusted friends is difficult, but you will land new companions. A family development brings delight.

TAURUS (April 20–May 20): If you have set yourself a quota, seek absolute privacy in order to meet a deadline. Intruders can only set you back. Keep an open mind about a new acquaintance.

GEMINI (May 21–June 20): New methods are not necessarily better than the tried-and-true. Make an effort to develop new contacts. Future employment offers depend on how well you handle difficult situations. Keep your cool.

CANCER (June 21–July 22): Mediating a bitter family feud could be an onerous task. Money could be the cause of this disagreement. A new relationship adds excitement to your life.

LEO (July 23–Aug. 22): An employment position suddenly has great potential. Go ahead and offer constructive suggestions; they will be well received. Be flexible when looking for solutions to a teen-ager's problems.

VIRGO (Aug. 23–Sept. 22): Return money lent to you by friends; otherwise it will hurt your relationship. Believe in yourself and others will, too. A close pal asks you to referee a disagreement. Think twice then abstain.

LIBRA (Sept. 23–Oct. 22): An opportunity to travel is on the horizon, but domestic affairs will require your attention. Romance on the rebound could boomerang. Put your financial game plan under the magnifying glass.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23–Nov. 21): Your work load could increase now. Seek fair compensation. Listen to an elder's questions; they may help you find a solution to a family problem.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22–Dec. 21): You may be asked to join a special social group. Your ideas gives you a deep sense of pleasure. Accept your domestic obligations with good grace. You have a lot to be thankful for.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22–Jan. 19): Work proves highly therapeutic. By digging into the past you could hit pay dirt, uncovering a idea that will work wonders in the present.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20–Feb. 18): No matter how you look at a problem, the possibility of a quick solution remains remote. Leave it up to your subconscious. Balance intellect with imagination. Excesses in any form make you uncomfortable.

PISCES (Feb. 19–March 20): By asking discreet questions in the right places, you may obtain some valuable leads for research. Romance can result in bad purchases. Put your nose to the grind stone; concentrate on the work at hand.

Tess Carlisle (Shirley McClaine) in the outskirts of Ohio, he yearns for a piece of the action. Bullets, bloodshed — anything to take him away from the jaws of his recent charge.

Thus is the setup for Tess, an amiable character study that would rather travel a leisurely path paved with nice intimate moments and gentle humor rather than wind-blown dramatics. And actors Cage and McClaine are more than up for the journey.

The true delight in Tess is watching these two excellent actors interact. Their characters could have easily filled caricatures, he the grumpy Fed and she the feisty old lady, but Cage and McClaine refuse such cruel fate and allow their characters to blossom into people you'd like to meet.

It's apparent from the get–go that these characters hold fond feelings for each other behind their guarded facades, the fun is in getting to that realization (which happens a lot earlier than you'd think).

Director Hugh Wilson once conceived this premise for the small screen. Wisely, he's taken his characters to higher ground, pariaying the inevitable prime time death and allowing them to burn their impressions with greater depth sans cloying sitcom brats, leaving the viewer with a cheerful smile. vowing to their own deaths rather than love one another.

Despite abrupt lighting transitions and poor musical editing, the professional execution of lead roles and eloquent costuming made 'Tis Pity She's a Whore a thought– provoking and highly entertaining performance.

Ford left his audience to question whether any form of love should be denied, even if it is not accepted by the morals of others.

Women's gymnastics squad defeats Rutgers on the road

By ANTHONY GUIDO
Collegian Staff

With the Atlantic 10 Championships coming up on March 26, the University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics team prepared by rolling over A-10 rival Rutgers 184.55– 180.25 last Saturday night.

The marks represent a significant decrease in scoring for the Minutewomen, which was somewhat expected from the judging at Rutgers. UMass entered the meet consistently scoring in at least a 187, but couldn't approach that at Rutgers.

"I don't think Georgia, who scores 196, could score 190 there. I don't even think the Olympic team could score well there," Coach David Kuzara said.

The meet was a homecoming of sorts for three Minutewomen, as seniors Angela Jent and Margaret Furtado, and sophomore Shaheda Keels are from New Jersey. All three competed well against their state University.

"It was special for the gymnasts from New Jersey. They performed well, but again it's frustrating that our scores were so low," Kuzara said.

Stephanie Martino, celebrating her 21st birthday, set the tone for the meet with a 9.35, taking second on the balance beam. Tara Swartz, who led the Minutewomen in the all– around (37.50), took the beam with a 9.60.

"We were wishing Stephanie a happy birthday before each event, we were so happy for her," Assistant Coach Rene Lyst said.

Keels finished the all–around with 36.95, including the top score in the floor exercise at 9.50. UMass scored its highest in the meet, a 46.5, in the floor exercise as Furtado and Jent each finished with a 9.45.

The Minutewoman did well on the bars, which is not a strong event for them. Swartz and Furtado led the good UMass showing with scores of 9.65 and 9.45. Jent, who personally had the best three–event outing of the season, topped all gymnasts with a 9.45 on the vault.

Next up for UMass is a road game against A–10 rival Temple on Thursday night down in Philadelphia. The Minutewomen are currently ranked second in the A–10, as they gear up for the conference championships at George Washington.

"I believe some of this UMass–Temple rivalry will spill over into our meet. I expect a raucous crowd, things will be heated because of everything that happened in basketball," Kuzara said.

After Temple, the squad goes down to Maryland for a Saturday meet that also includes North Carolina, Vermont, Pennsylvania and Northeastern. At this time of the season, most of the Minutewomen have their little injuries; however, Kuzara expects to use the same line–up for the next two meets.

"We still haven't had our perfect meet. I want us to peak at the A–10s. Every meet I feel we are doing better, the kids understand more, the sky is still the limit," Kuzara said.

Wildcats to win it all

A No. 2 in the Midwest, huh. As you, my faithful readership (Hi, Ma), peruse this monumental effort, I am preparing to embark on the Road To The Final Four. Anybody know the best way to Wichita?

Maybe it's me, but I still feel a little slighted by the selection committee. The way they're making us travel — and we are the only No. 2 not playing in the backyard — makes it seem like they think we're just happy to be here. Did we win a raffle to get in or did we beat Temple three times and Carolina once?

Enough of that, on to bigger and better things.

Holding Court — Scott P. Hayden on NCAA Basketball

• For those of you who are keeping score at home, the Minutemen have already defeated four teams in this year's tournament — Temple, George Washington, Maryland and North Carolina. That's only one more than the Minutewomen, who beat three entries (Brown, Vermont and St. Joseph's) in this year's expanded women's field.

• Why did the Big Least get six teams? Seton Hall over Georgia Tech or Xavier. Tom Butters, we need to talk.

• Did Penn get the shaft or what? A No. 11 seed? Danny Nee, you better talk to Cal about the Quakers, who almost upset the Minutemen in the first round last year, otherwise it's one and done for you.

You can bet Coach Fran Dunphy will have Jerome Allen, Matt Maloney and Co. well–tuned for Thursday's showdown. Prediction: Penn will beat the red–hot Huskers and then advance to the Sweet Sixteen with a win over James Madison, who upsets Florida.

• If Massachusetts and Arkansas hook up in the Final Eight, it will be a preview of next year's Starter Tip–Off Classic, so the loser will have an awful bad taste in his stomach come early November.

• How the hell am I supposed to celebrate my holy day in Wichita? If there are any Wichita readers out there, which way to the Guiness?

• Another upset special: The Hawaii Rainbows, those funky dudes from the island who cut off only one sleeve of the tee–shirts they wear underneath their jerseys will advance to the Sweet Sixteen with wins over Syracuse (these guys are awesome in the first round — ask Dick Tarrant from Richmond) and Cal.

Like my friend says, "These guys are the party team of the tournament, just like Santa Clara last year."

• Did you notice that the finals for the East Regional are being held in Miami, which is further south and east than the regional finals for the Southeast Region, which are in Knoxville, Tenn.?

• Coach K, you and your Blue Devils stole our seed and my free trip to St. Petersburg. No matter, I heard it's 70 degrees in Wichita this week. If there are any Wichita readers out there, which way to the beach?

• How about the College of Charleston receiving an at– large bid in only its third year at the Division I level?

This bodes well for Massachusetts because by the time the NCAA gets around to instituting a national championship football playoff, the boys from McGuirk might be in their third year of D–I football.

• Purdue will be the first No. 1 to fall. The Friars will handle the Boilermakers pretty handily with my rationale being: if URI can beat Purdue — which they did in last year's tourney — then so can the senior–rich Friars.

By the way, I told you about Michael Smith a couple of months ago, remember?

• I am going to loove watching the Tar Heels putting the hurt on BC.

• Official Holding Court Sleepers: I'm not expecting much from these teams, but any success they have would shock me. In the East, I like UAB with Robert Shannon to perhaps make some noise. Wake Forest is dangerous in the Southeast, but not nearly as dangerous as Tommy Penders' Texas squad could be in the Midwest.

• How Sweet It Is for these 16 teams: Missouri, Hawaii, Louisville, Arizona, Arkansas, UCLA, Michigan, Massachusetts, UNC, Indiana, Penn, Connecticut, Providence, Wake Forest, Kentucky and Duke.

• Meeting for the right to go to the Final Four, you've got Missouri and Arizona out West with Cinderella Hawaii heading home from the ball, Arkansas–Massachusetts in the Midwest, Indiana and Connecticut in the East and Rick Pitino going against his old club Providence in Knoxville.

• Charlotte–bound: Coming out of the West, you've got the sensational backcourt of Khalid Reeves and Damon Stoudamire leading off–underachieving Arizona to the promised land where they will meet (Sorry, Massachusetts) the Razorbacks.

I like Kentucky beating UC in the Final Eight to advance and play Indiana. As soon as I took a gander at the pairings and saw the Temple–Indiana second round matchup, I knew the winner of that will be going to Carolina.

Robert Montgomery Knight will make an even bigger public spectacle of himself than in years past in the hopes of putting all the pressure on him so his Hoosiers can concentrate on basketball. He's very dangerous when he's cornered by the rest of America, and my undying respect for him and his coaching ability leads me to believe he will be able to handle Temple's zone.

I foresee an Arizona–Kentucky final and the Wildcats will be wearing the nets around their necks come midnight April 4.

Steitz is acting A–10 Commissioner

CRANBURY, N.J. — Bob Steitz, currently assistant commissioner of the Atlantic 10 Conference, has been named acting commissioner, etfective immediately. The announcement was made following a meeting of the Atlantic 10 athletic directors during the conference's basketball tournaments and comes following the resignation of commissioner Ron Bertovich, who has accepted the position of vice president/general manager of Empire Sports Network in Western New York. Bertovich will remain with the conference until mid–April and will assist in the orderly transition of the position.

"The Board of Directors is confident that Bob will lead us through the transition period and conduct conference matters in a manner in which we are accustomed," says Ed Pastilong, director of athletics at West Virginia University and president of the Atlantic 10 Executive Committee.

A search for a commissioner is currently underway.

Steitz joined the Atlantic 10 four years ago, overseeing the production of all games on the Atlantic 10 Television Network, coordinating all promotional activities within the conference, and serving as tournament director of the Atlantic 10 Men's Basketball Championship. A 1980 graduate of Springfield College, Steitz earned his undergraduate degree in health, physical education and recreation and earned his master's degree a year later from his alma mater in athletic administration.

In 1982, Steitz was named athletic operations coordinator at Fordham University and was promoted to assistant athletic director the next year. In 1984 he became the assistant director of athletics at Florida International University, responsible for compliance, marketing and finance. In 1988 he was named associate commissioner of the Northeast Conference, where he coordinated the league's championships and compliance efforts. He then joined the Atlantic 10 staff in 1990.

Does Air Jordan belong in baseball?

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Michael Jordan

He should do whatever he wants because he can

Candice Flemming

When I first heard that Michael Jordan wanted to play major league baseball, I was not surprised. I knew that his childhood dream was to be a major league baseball player, and I knew that he had took batting practice before a couple of White Sox games. But still, I was a bit skeptical about him being able to play.

Now, after watching him improve every day, I know he can play. After all, he is Michael Jordan.

He can run, throw, catch and, with a little time, hit. Being away from the game for 15 years would make anybody rusty, but if there is anyone in the world who can do it, Jordan can. He is the greatest basketball player of all time and arguably the best athlete in the world.

All he needs is one year of seasoning in the minors. On the AAA level that is, not A or AA as some people seem to think.

When he took batting practice at Comiskey Park a few years ago, he hit one out; and that was with no practice. During a celebrity hitting contest last year, he was the only person to hit it out. What does that tell you? If he can hit a ball out with no practice, just think what he could do while practicing everyday. He could be awesome. No, he will be awesome.

He can already compete on the major league level defensively in right field. He is as good as anybody in both leagues. If he played 162 games, there would be no doubt in my mind that he could win a gold glove. His quickness is his best asset. He could get a late jump on any ball hit and still catch it, he's that good. With his speed, he could steal 40 to 50 bases.

Now some people may think I am crazy, but I truly believe that he can do all of these things. He has the drive, the love and tremendous athletic talent. He could do whatever he wants and do it well because he is Michael Jordan.

I can't wait until Jordan proves all of his critics wrong. He'll be laughing in everybody's face just like I will be laughing in all of the Collegian sports guys' faces. Everyone who doubted him will wish they had listened to me, including my former favorite sports magazine, Sports Illustrated, who put out its absolute worst cover ever. Disrespecting Michael Jordan is, in my book, the worst thing that anyone could ever do, except saying Disney World is corny. How can you tell Jordan of all people to "bag it?" It just shouldn't happen.

When Jordan retired from basketball, he said he wanted to spend more time with his family. Now, some people are asking why did he start playing baseball, won't that take time away from his family? No, it won't. He can spend a lot of time with his family, more than he could during the basketball season. He can take his family on road trips since in baseball, you play the same team three or four times in a row.

There are more home games in baseball, too, which allows him to spend that time with his family. So don't knock him for wanting to fulfill his boyhood dream.

What will eventually happen: he will get bored with baseball (because he was tired of being head and shoulders above the rest, playing baseball wasn't challenging for him anymore) and return to basketball, leading the Chicago Bulls to yet another NBA Championship. Remember, you heard it here first.

Drexel, Temple ready for clash

By TED ANTHONY
Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — It's the Cheesesteak Championship — the Pretzel Playoffs, if you will. And it has Drexel coach Bill Herrion wondering why.

"It's amazing that two schools that are about two miles apart have to go to Landover, Md., to face each other," Herrion said after his team, the North Atlantic Conference champion, was named to play Temple, runnerup in the much stronger Atlantic 10. The game could probably be played in a Philadelphia schoolyard. Instead, it will be Friday at the USAir arena in Landover. Temple is seeded fourth and Drexel 13th in the Eastern Regional bracket. Another Philadelphia school, ivy League champion Penn, is seeded 11th and plays Nebraska.

Temple coach John Chaney doesn't believe in seedings. He sees the tournament as a season unto itself.

"There's a somewhat of a level playing ground when you get into the unknowns," Chaney said. "Every team that you meet now you expect to be huffing and puffing and ready for you. As far as I'm concerned, you can't pick out a short straw or a long straw when it comes to seedings."

Temple last played Drexel on Dec. 4, 1986, and won 78-58. The Owls (22-7), are heading to their fifth consecutive tournament and have been ranked in the top 10 for much of the season. They lost the Atlantic 10 championship Friday to No. 9 Massachusetts, 70-59. Chaney said he's seen Drexel play only once this season - a videotape of the St. Joseph's game, which the Dragons lost. He said he was impressed with what he saw.

But in the NCAA tournament, Chaney said, "there's so much that you don't know about the other teams, Familiarity breeds contempt, and out there in the tournament you don't have time for any contempt."

Play baseball for the love of the game, Michael

Michael Reiss

The night before, I would set my alarm clock for 7:25 a.m. When the music sounded that next morning, I would scurry downstairs to the living room. I was six at the time, and it was 1981.

Never, ever did I miss a show of the Baseball Bunch.

Later that day, my father would open the closet near the front door and take out his wooden bat. When he stepped outside the front door, I was already waiting for him with my small Wilson brown leather glove.

He would hit grounders. It was his Cincinnati Reds versus my Milwaukee Brewers. In the end, it would always be Pete Rose and Paul Molitor that decided the final outcome. He loved Rose, I loved Molitor.

I was young, surrounded by a game that was full of players that played hungry, with endless amounts of determination and desire. Just like Rose and Molitor. Baseball was pure, played for "the love of the game."

Oh, how things have changed. Where has this game gone?

Today, it's the age of high contracts. It's a business. Large market teams simply dip into their wallets and buy talent. Small market teams get the shaft. Trades are few and far between. Free agency is the route to go.

Back then, players played for the World Series. Now, they play for a lucrative off–season contract.

This spring training, there is this one fellow that just irks me. This one fellow walks into a major league spring training camp and is given a shot to make the team's major league roster. Yes, as you all know, I'm speaking of Michael Jordan.

Jordan received a chance over hundreds of minor league players that have been striving toward a dream their whole life. He didn't get the chance because he was better; he got the chance because his name is Michael Jordan. MJ. Air Jordan. What a slap in the face to baseball.

The team is the Chicago White Sox. Just a few years back, this same team changed its logo and uniforms to become more marketable. That's bearable. Now, in an attention– getting, ticket–selling manuever, they give Jordan a shot saying he'll play right field. That's unbearable.

Does anyone honestly think that the Chicago management felt he had a chance?

Of course not. And while the media has been hovering all over the team thus far in spring training, giving the White Sox a national spotlight, the image is a negative to the sport.

Oh, but I will try to stay away from the negatives. You won't hear me rattling off Michael Jordan's statistics this spring (we know they're not good). It doesn't matter. You won't hear me criticizing any part of his game (like his swing, or his defense), It doesn't matter.

What matters is that baseball is passion, played by the best with true grit. Let's rewind to 1988 World Series when an injured Kirk Gibson stepped to the plate in a pinch–hitting appearance in the final inning. One–legged, he popped one out of the yard. Hobbling around the bases, he clutched his fist in sheer emotional joy. That is baseball.

We need more Kirk Gibsons, people that play the game hard, never leaving the field with a clean uniform.

Wasn't everyone pulling for young Jim Abbott, the left–handed pitcher who was born without a right hand? Here's a guy that's dedicated his life to baseball and now he's one of the most feared pitchers in the major leagues. That is baseball.

We need more Jim Abbotts, players that overcome the odds in a classy, hard–working manner.

Players like George Brett, Robin Yount and Nolan Ryan have recently retired. These players epitomized the way the game should be played. They shed aside their image to get the job done. No dangling earrings hanging from those ears.

We need more Bretts, Younts and Ryans. To baseball, those types of players are becoming dinosaurs - extinct.

Now there's Michael Jordan. Is he playing the game for the passion? Is he stepping between the white lines because he loves the game?

It doesn't seem that way to me. And baseball and its fans are paying the price.

Global conference yields few results

DETROIT — A first-ever global jobs conference wrapped up today with no major new initiatives, but a final declaration proclaimed that America and its top allies had made an "important firs, step" in addressing worldwide joblessness.

Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen brought the two days of discussions to an end by reading a final declaration as Cabinet ministers from the world's seven largest industrial countries stood behind him.

"The ministers agreed that we must offer the choice of hope over fear. We need to extract the most from change that we can," Bentsen said. "That's what it is critical that we prepare our economies, and most importantly, our people, for the challenges that await us in the next century."

Bentsen said that the issues raised in Detroit among Cabinet ministers will be addressed by world leaders when they convene for the annual economic summit of the so-called Group of Seven countries - the United States, Japan, Germany, Canada, Italy, France and Britain - this summer in Naples.

"The G-7 ministers have made an important first step, very frankly trading ideas, learning from one another," Bentsen said in the statement, the wording of

Inflation still rising

WASHINGTON — Led by surging fuel costs, inflation at the wholesale level jumped sharply in February. But analysts insisted the basic cost of living for Americans is only inching upward. Wholesale prices shot up 0.5 percent, the biggest jump in 10 months, the Commerce Department said Tuesday. But it attributed the rise almost entirely to higher energy costs led by soaring heating oil prices as thermostats were turned up to ward off winter's chill.

"There's hardly any inflation there," said Michael Evans, head of Evans Economics inc. of Boca Raton, Fla. "The numbers were better than we expected. It's no secret, we had a cold winter. But the normal weather is back."

He said the report should ease pressure on the Federal Reserve Board to push interest rates up at a meeting next Tuesday. The Fed nudged short-term rates up a quarter percentage point to 3.25 percent in February, the first increase in five years.

In other news, the broadest measure of the U.S. trade deficit jumped by $42.84 billion in 1993 to the highest level in five years, including a $31.54 billion imbalance in the final three months, the Commerce Department said.

State/Regional

Parade cancelled

WASHINGTON — Organizers of a St. Patrick's Day parade in Boston asked a Supreme Court justice Tuesday for an emergency order allowing them to ban gays and lesbians from the parade.

The parade scheduled for Sunday will be canceled if justice David H. Souter does not grant the order blocking a lower court's ruling, said the veterans' group that sponsors the parade. The South Boston Allied War Veterans Council said last Saturday it would cancel the parade to protest a court order that said parades are public events covered by a Massachusetts law barring discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation.

The veterans' lawyers told Souter in court papers that the Massachusetts court "trivialized and ridiculed the veterans' claim of a constitutional right of free speech."

The state court order "improperly restricted the right of the veterans to control the content of their own parade, thereby effectively destroying the veterans' ability to conduct a parade which reflects their own traditional religious and social values," the group's lawyers said.

Scott backs renaming of library

By JUSTIN DOYLE
Collegian Staff

The Tower Library at the University of Massachusetts seems to be one step closer to being named after author and scholar, W.E.B. DuBois.

On Tuesday afternoon, Chancellor David K. Scott promised to announce his proposal to formally name the library in honor of W.E.B. DuBois at the April 6 meeting of the Board of Trustees.

In a letter sent to Shyamala Ivatury, president of the Graduate Student Senate, Scott said he proposes to announce the results of the coalition's petition at the meeting.

"I believe there is a compelling rationale for this action, given [DuBois'] strong conviction that public education was essential to democracy and to a just society, vital elements in the mission of this major land grant university, and given that our library houses the major collection of his works," Scott said in the letter.

> "I am not in the position to make a recomendation to the Trustees at the April 6 meeting."
> -David K. Scott

Last week the Petition Coalition formally presented Scott with more than 1,000 signatures, including the names of nationally renowned scholars and a large number of campus organizations, in support of naming the library after DuBois. They asked Scott to present their request to the Board of Trustees at their next meeting.

Scott, however, said in a phone call late last night, "I am not in the position to make a recommendation to the Trustees at the April 6 meeting."

Scott said he will assemble a group on campus to develop the case for naming the library after DuBois.

He discussed the proposal with Michael K. Hooker, president of the five UMass campuses and with Daniel Taylor, chairman of the Board of Trustees. Both Hooker and Taylor have indicated their general support for this approach according to Scott.

Scott also announced that he will try to create an endowed Professorship in Afro–American Studies for the proposed new Ph.D Program in that field.

"It is prudent on my part to try and raise funds for worthy projects in conjunction with naming the library after W.E.B. DuBois," Scott said. "Such a professorship would also be a fitting tribute to the pioneering work and vision of Dr. DuBois."

Dr. Randolph W. Bromery, a former chancellor of UMass and primary mover of the 130,000 papers of DuBois to the library will serve as the chairman of a group which will work on getting funding for projects such as an endowed professorship.

"We hope that the University, President Michael J. Hooker, and the Board of Trustees will seize this rare opportunity and, at long last, take one towering step to move beyond the color line," said the Petition Coalition in a released statement.

Hadley proposes Mullins tix tax

By GERI SAHN
Collegian Staff

A decisio has still not been made on whether a one dollar tax will be added to the price of tickets for special events held at the William D. Mullins Center.

Hadley officials said they need the money in order to help pay for more road maintenances and requested to take it by putting a dollar tax on the tickets. The tax money could raise up to an extra $300,000 a year for the town.

Roberta Crosbie, town administrator for Hadley, said they would use the money to help pay for more police officers in order to alleviate the traffic to the Mullins Center.

Crosbie said many of the roads in Hadley are used in order for people to get to the arena. Cemetery Road and Rocky Road are two residential streets in Hadley that have become a, "residential highway."

"Hadley is a small community. There are only six officers who maintain streets and roads that people use to get to the Mullins Center," Crosbie said.

"We have had complaints from the community because of the traffic. We need to hire more police to help maintain that traffic," she said.

Crosbie said only the special events tickets will be taxed. Some special events were The Boston Pops and Sesame Street On Ice. The extra charge does not include educational or collegiate programs such as the basketball games.

"We understand the role of the University. But many of the events held at the Mullins Center are not related to the purpose of the University," she said.

Richard Conner, director of state relations at the UMass, said the, "surcharge," would hinder the arena's budget because it would be harder to compete with other arenas in the area.

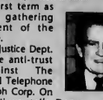
Watergate scandal leaves lasting wounds

Watergate
A chronology



•1968. On Nov. 5, Nixon is elected to his first term as president, gathering 43.4 percent of the national vote.

•1969. The Justice Dept. brings three anti-trust suits against The International Telephone and Telegraph Corp. On April 19, Nixon tells Deputy Attorney General Richard Kleindienst to drop the suit. He also orders Assistant Attorney General Richard W. McLaren to resign if it is not carried through.

•1971. On June 13, The New York Times begins publishing the Pentagon Papers, which stated that the main reason for continued U.S. involvement in Viet Nam was to save face. Daniel Ellsberg, the State Dept. employee who released them, is later indicted.

•On Sept. 3-4, Bernard Baker, Eugenio Martinez and Felipe Diego are hired by Nixon aides to break into Ellsberg's psychiatrist's office, stealing Ellsberg's profile.

•A memo written by an ITT lobbyist discloses that the anti-trust settlement filed was done in exchange for Republican Committee campaign pledge of $400,000. Some of this money later went to pay off the men who broke into Watergate.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

•A settlement is reached on July 31, clearing ITT of all anti-trust charges.

•1972. On June 17, Barker, Martinez, Frank Sturgis and Virgilio Gonzalez are arrested for attempting to break in to the Democratic National Committee headquarters at the Watergate complex in Washington. The men were hired by Nixon aides.

•An 18-1/2 minute portion of a conversation between Nixon and Chief of Staff H. R. Haldemann recorded on June 20 is mysteriously erased. Both men deny that Watergate was dicussed.

•Starting on June 29 and continuing for over a year, more than $450,000 in hush money is paid to the men who broke in to Watergate.

Editor's note: This is the second in a three–part series comparing Whitewater to the Watergate scandal.

With the approach of the 20th anniversary of Richard Nixon's resignation, interest in the Watergate scandal is starting to grab headlines and spark panel discussions. But the events leading up to the resignation can't be broken down to a single event or even marked by a single day.

Moreover, an analysis of the impact Watergate has had on our political system and the American character reveals that it was more than simply the break–in to the Watergate complex which has had such lasting consequences on this country. As time passed and evidence unfolded, the inquiry spilled into 13 areas of presidential activity.

What probably set the pace for the Nixon presidency was the White House practice of wiretapping political enemies and people that Nixon considered to be threats to "national security." On May 12, 1969, less than four months into his presidency, Nixon had the National Security Council forwarded a list of suspects to the FBI slated for wiretapping. Starting that day, and continuing until February 1971 when the Supreme Court issued an injunction forcing them to stop, the White House wiretapped more than four newsmen and 13 government officials.

Whitewater and Watergate
NEWS ANALYSIS

But Nixon's paranoia did not stop there. White House Counsel John W. Dean prepared a memo on Aug. 16 entitled "Dealing with our Political Enemies," in which he details ways "we can use the available federal machinery to screw our political enemies."

Beginning June 24, 1971, and continuing for almost a year, continuously updated lists of political opponents compiled by Special Counsel Charles Colson's staff were circulated throughout the White House. Colson, who was later convicted, claimed that the lists were used "primarily for social invitations or exclusions."

Nixon was as vehement about plugging security leaks as he was about surveillance. On May 9, 1969, The New York Times published a dispatch by Pentagon correspondent William Beecher disclosing the secret bombing of Cambodia which began in March and continued.

Nixon was determined to prevent further leaks from loosening his grip on foreign policy. On June 13, 1971, The New York Times began running a series called the Pentagon Papers, which disclosed a state department cable that described U.S. involvement In Vietnam as "50 percent to save face, 40 percent for U.S. business interests, and 10 percent to contain Communism."

On June 28, Daniel Ellsberg, a state department

Jewish gov't cracks down on anti–Arab extremists

By KARIN LAUB
Associated Press

JERUSALEM — The army went on high alert to foil suicide attacks threatened Tuesday by Muslim fundamentalists on Jewish settlers, setting up roadblocks and clashing with Palestinians in Jerusalem and the Gaza Strip. One Arab gunman was killed and a second wounded after ambushing a jeep.

The government also broadened its crackdown against anti-Arab Jewish extremists, hauling the founding father of the settlement movement, Rabbi Moshe Levinger, into court on a relatively minor two-year-old charge.

Thousands of right-wing supporters gathered in Tel Aviv to protest the government actions. They waved posters claiming Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin lacks the mandate to make concessions to the Palestinians.

The crowd booed opposition leader Benjamin Netanyahu when he called the Hebron massacre a crime but cheered when he said: "If we don't have the right to live in Hebron, we don't have the right to live anywhere in this country."

Demonstrators burned Palestinian flags and Israel television reported four people carrying anti-Arab Kach group posters were arrested.

The government officially closed the offices of the extremist Kach and Kahane Lives groups after banning the two and detaining or disarming several of their leaders this week. Jewish settler Baruch Goldstein, a Kach member, killed 30 Muslims Feb. 25 in a Hebron mosque.

The PLO has demanded better protection for Palestinians, rejecting U.S. attempts Monday to restart peace negotiations. It seeks the removal of settlements in Arab towns like Hebron and international protection.

But four Gaza members of PLO leader Yasser Arafat's Fatah faction attended an unprecedented meeting with Israeli Labor Party members at the Parliament to discuss ways of getting the peace talks restarted.

The Islamic Resistance Movement, or Hamas, threatened suicide attacks if Jewish settlers in five settlement areas didn't evacuate by Tuesday.

In response, the army went on high alert, Israeli news reports said. Troops set up surprise roadblocks and searched Arab-owned cars.

In northern Gaza, two Palestinians hid in a gas station, opened fire on a passing jeep and fled on foot. Soldiers opened fire, killing one gunman and seriously wounding the other.

On east Jerusalem's main Arab shopping artery, troops fired tear gas at youths throwing rocks at them.

In Hebron, the army briefly lifted a 19-day curfew to allow the town's 80,000 Palestinians to buy supplies.

Election questioned

By BRIAN GORMLEY
Collegian Staff

Last week's University of Massachusetts Student Government Association president and trustee elections were poorly run, Interfraternity Council President Joseph Vozza said.

Vozza, who was a candidate for president in last week's election, said it was unethical that people from SGA President elect Mirran Raphaely and Trustee Al Lizana's campaign were running the ballot boxes.

"All I wanted from day one was a fair election," Vozza said. "How can there be people from Mirran's campaign working the ballot box? I saw one senator working the ballot box in the D.C., and the moment she was done she began handing out a stack of flyers for Al and Mirran."

Vozza also said SGA President David Nunez should not have been working the ballot boxes because he ran for president last year on the same ballot with Al Lizana who ran again.

"I think Dave is honest and he didn't do anything, but its the principle of the matter," he said.

Vozza also denied he had any part in the ballot–stuffing scandal that occurred in the Worcester Dining Commons.

"The ballots that were stuffed were put there to discredit me and Diego [Figueroa], and it obviously worked. I don't think it was any of the candidates, I think it was the act of an individual," he said. "We had a good chance of winning Worcester, why would we do something to shoot ourselves in the foot?"

Vozza said another problem with the election was that the lists of residents for each area were not updated. He said he has been living in the Greek Area for two years and he had to vote via absentee ballot because his name did not appear on the list of Greek Area residents.

Students educated at sea

By CATHERINE B. PULLEY
Collegian Staff

There will be no swabbing of decks or lowering the boom for students who embark on the U.S.S. Universe for the Semester at Sea field program.

The Semester at Sea is administered by the Institute for Shipboard Education and is academically sponsored by the University of Pittsburgh. The program takes approximately 450 college students of all majors from around the world on an 18,000 ton ship that has been equipped as "a floating university."

The program began 30 years ago at Chapman College in Orange, California. The Institute for Shipboard Education offers classes by 68 faculty and staff from around the world that teach courses from an international perspective.

"It is definitely a departure from the traditional study abroad," said Paul Watson, the Director of Admissions for Semester at Sea. "Only 2 percent of college students go abroad during their college career and that is disappointing. All students should have the experience of going abroad."

Students can choose from 50 lower and upper division courses and all classes are fully transferrable to the home institution. Classes are held daily on the ship, and professors integrate course content with countries on the itinerary.

The program costs $12,000 for a 100 day semester and includes tuition, room, board, and passage fare. According to Watson, financial aid is available to students who do not typically qualify for aid on their home campus.

The converted cargo ship provides an authentic university atmosphere that includes a student union, classrooms with closed circuit television capabilities, a library, theater and a cafeteria. Also on hand are a swimming pool, basketball and volleyball courts, and a weight room.

The lifting of the trade embargo entitles students on the Semester at Sea program to include Vietnam on their itinerary.

Stays in port range from three to six days and independent travel is also encouraged. The program arranges university visits, home stays and is designed to encourage interaction between students and the people of the countries visited.

"Students have completed the program saying that it was the best experience of their college career," said Watson

He said: guys let loose

By CUTTER GARCIA
Collegian Staff

It's that time of year again. The week where all the stops are taken out so that college students everywhere can find themselves immersed in all the great forms of debauchery. Stress filled co-eds will be living through 216 fun filled hours packed with laughter, love, adventure and of course — projectile vomiting.

In a day and age where men have been stripped of virtually every wildman instinct within them, we are left with only one week in which we can get back to our natural roots. The call of the wild has a mighty cry, and we answer its taunts with a primordial roar which grows more deafening as the day of reckoning approaches. God, Spring Break is wonderful!

For guys, spring break is a blast. But it requires some careful planning. Finding a location is simple, preferably someplace warm and sunny where the sun will be merciless and the women bereft of virtue.

Packing is also a breeze, as we don't need to trouble ourselves worrying about inconsequentials such as, "How am I ever going to fit 12 evening dresses, 5 pairs of shoes, a crate and a half of Tampax, 4 quarts of conditioner, a nail file, 27 different shades of lipstick and a bowling ball bag filled with accessories into this duffel bag?"

We grab some shorts, clean underwear and a few of our coolest looking outfits (for when we meet that certain special lover of Those Who Brave to Dare) and load up the cooler with deli meat, cheese doodles and Carling Black Label 15 packs — and we're off.

The trip to Eden is usually filled with fond recollections of war parties long passed, staring at women in other vehicles while lying to ourselves about how much they'd love to be with us, blazingly loud stereos, late night scary stories while driving through the boonies of the stinky state of Georgia and the time honored favorite — fart contests.

And our prep time is far easier to deal with because we don't have to worry about emotional obstacles like crying together in groups (while watching Designing Women while we stuff our faces with Twinkies) due to the fact that we don't think we're going to look good in our bathing suits.

Then when we finally arrive to the holy ground we accordingly celebrate by just relaxing and enjoying each other's company. Sure, there's the occasional outbreak of violence, but it's a small price to pay in order to recapture our souls before the week ends and we are once again forced to pack our natural urges back into the ice bin so that we can again become a part of the P.C. society we live in.

And while I'm sure that she will see things far more differently than I do — I can offer only one piece of advice. Emily, try and be a little dangerous this year. Start a conversation with a strange guy on the beach. Feel the sand between your toes and imbibe in way too much tequila. You'll be glad you took the chance.

She said: avoid poor plans

By EMILY MARINO
Collegian Staff

As we all know, spring break is only a few days away, and men and women alike are gearing up for fun, rest and relaxation. Break is a time for everybody to enjoy themselves, whether it be by partying with friends on a sunny beach somewhere or holding a movie rental marathon with hometown buddies.

I cannot help but think, however, that there is an intrinsic difference between the way in which men and women constitute making the most of spring break.

If he had his druthers, spring break would resemble something from (Garcia's favorite television entertainment, no doubt) MTV's spring break block party thing. The entire week would be one big blur of bikinis and margaritas, hotel room adventures and of course, beer. Now that is how I want to spend my break — hungover, trying to recall even the slightest memory of a series of nameless hook-ups. When do we leave?

This is not to say that every beach-bound male tackles spring break with getting laid and maintaining a buzz for as long as possible in mind. Though, if there are guys out there who defy these stereotypes, somebody should let advertisers in on this little secret and tell them to replace the barely-clad women in vacation package advertisements with tour guides who espouse the academic enrichment that travelling provides.

Then there is the actual travelling. I don't know how many of my male friends, over the years, have boasted about packing as many guys into a van as will fit without somebody suffocating, and heading south.

Between the accompanying keg in the back of the van (although, this part of the plan varies), the food and the guys, clothes are usually limited to a bathing suit and maybe a change of clothes decent enough to wear to a club, in hopes of finding Ms. Right (Now).

While a toothbrush is key, soap is sometimes overlooked, and somehow some of these guys truly believe that if worse comes to worse they can sleep on the beach or, better yet, stay in the luxurious hotel del van. I can only imagine the smell after a week.

The folks over at the Health Education Division have come up with a "Safe Break Kit," containing lots of helpful information on how to avoid all kinds of nasty vacation predicaments that may result from half-baked planning.

The kit contains pointers from how to practice safe sex to how to avoid dangerous overexposure to the sun. They'll even give you a free condom.For you guys who are planning a quiet week of R&R, enjoy. Otherwise, take some advice from the Health Education Division and try to have a safe break. Oh, and Garcia, those kits are available on the Campus Center Concourse — you may want to pick one up before next week.

Doubleheader set for UPC

By BRIAN BABINEAU
Collegian Staff

In the late eighties, two rap groups appeared who changed the face of what we knew as rap. They took a completely new angle on hip-hop, and proved that you didn't have to sport a gangsta limp or dress in gold sequined pants in order to make an important hip-hop album. These two groups made music that stood alone, without promoting their own images. They are, of course, De La Soul and A Tribe Called Quest.

Since the historic debuts, De La's Three Feet High and Rising, and ATCQ's People Instinctive Travels in the Paths of Rhythm, the groups have continued to push their musical sound in new directions. This is evident on their latest efforts, Buhloone Mindstate and Midnight Marauders, respectively.

De La Soul's debut effort was a light and airy affair that combined sneaky and unexpected samples, such as a keyboard riff from Steely Dan's "Peg," with smooth and loose lyricism. The group introduced the so-called "D.A.I.S.Y. Age," based on an idea that fused rap and psychedelia to create a new hippie/hip-hop sound.

On their second album, De La Soul is Dead, the songs continued to be smooth with trademark humor underpinning the raps themselves. They moved a little bit from the hippie vibes that pervaded Three Feet... towards a more solid sound. Their latest effort is another superb combination of unusual samples and mellifluous lyricism.

A Tribe Called Quest has also developed as a group, shifting from the Afrocentrism of their first album to a deep jazz base on their second album, The Low End Theory. On Midnight Marauders, they give their jazz foundation a more ambient, atmospheric quality with continuing to utilize a free and poetic lyrical style.

COURTESY ZOMBA RECORDING CORP.

A Tribe Called Quest will join De La Soul in concert.

The two groups have jammed together in the past, and are linked by guest spots that each has done on the other's albums, so a tour together is almost a given. Now, their tour pulls into UMass, and rest assured it will be one long and jazzy hip-hop jam well worth your indulgence.

A Tribe Called Quest and De La Soul are playing in the Student Union Ballroom on Wednesday, March 16. Tickets are available at Tix Unlimited.

Jawbox brings fresh approach

In these days of alternative madness guitar bands are a dime a dozen. It seems as though every time you open a magazine or turn on MTV, another sullen face with his amp cranked up to 11 is staring back at you. That is why it takes a little extra kick to keep from going from today's flavor of the month to tomorrow's distant memory.

Tomorrow night the Valley has the chance to experience one of the finest bands to emerge on the alternative scene since Nirvana became a household name. Jawbox, who hails from Washington D.C., will bring its furious punk/pop hybrid to Pearl Street Nightclub in Northampton.

The band, which is on tour supporting it's latest (and greatest) release For Your Own Special Sweetheart, has been stirring up quite some noise in the music world, and the buzz shows no sign of stopping. The album has been lodged in the top 10 on the alternative charts for weeks, and the first single "Savory" has become a staple on college radio stations across the country.

Formed in 1989 by vocalist/guitarist J. Robbins (formerly of punk legend's Government Issue), bassist Kim Coletta, and drummer Adam Wade, the band released it's debut album Grippe. While comparisons to America's favorite PC punks was inevitable, the band definitely had a sound all it's own.

By 1992 the band had released it's second full-length album Novelty, and added guitarist/vocalist Bill Barbot to help solidify the line-up. With Barbot's help the band finally shook the "Fugazi Jr." moniker, and developed a tight, raucous sound which added more melodic overtones to the scraping guitar mayhem.

"We always want to write songs with hooks," Robbins notes, "but the problem we pose for ourselves is to come up with different definitions of what a hook is. It isn't always hooky vocal lines; it might be some guitar noise, or a weird rhythmic thing."

Whatever it was, the world began to notice, and before long the band had signed to Atlantic Records, making the the first act to jump ship from the Dischord label and sign to a major.

Scrod is overtaking UMass

There is an odd, recurring event on this campus. Have you ever noticed the strange, fog-like substance that exudes from certain vents around campus? These vents are strategically located just to the right of well-trodden paths and in the middle of (soon to be) lush grasslands. Similar to the dense substance that appeared in the movie The Fog, this phenomenon smells — actually, it's rancid.

What in the world could be the cause? Again, the investigative journalist has hit the streets. There is only one possible answer to account for such a unique UMass "thing."

Scrod.

Yes, its the age-old evil that has come to pay another dreaded visit to the dining commons. Not only does the fish continue to rear its ugly head, but it takes pleasure in making itself known. Case in coin, the dining commons have served scrod six times in the past eight weeks and plan on serving it again this Friday.

The key to understanding this dilemma is the smell. Consider this: if the D.C. scrod can leave a pungent odor in your clothes for weeks after it's cooked, what can it do before it's cooked?

Diana D'Avanzo

However, this isn't any old scrod. No, it's New England Style Scrod, Cajun Style Scrod, Tasty Baked Scrod, Scrod– Scrod-Scrod and, the all time favorite, Fresh off the Grill Scrod. Is it just a lack of perception, or does this all taste like scrod?

Who's the person that makes up the name for this stuff? Just picture it: "Well, a little pepper and we can call it 'Pepper Scrod', a little seasoning and we can call it 'Seasoned Scrod'..." How about this one, "A little absence of the putrid fish and we can call it 'Heaven'."

So, you're probably wondering, what does this have to do with the fog rising up from the UMass pits? Funny, but scrod just pops up in the strangest places. Even getting off the meal–plan does not save you from the horror.

The key to understanding this dilemma is the smell. Consider this: if the D.C. scrod can leave a pungent odor in your clothes for weeks after it's cooked, what can it do before it's cooked? Those sleuths, the Food Services gang, know that killing, err... cooking, all that fish at the same time would leave a noticeable hole in the ozone layer directly above each D.C. chimney.

Thus, not wanting any large scale media attention, they have created special underground routes that divert the steam across campus. This leaves the University free of any major lawsuits and keeps scrod sympathizers from revolting.

The solution? A simple one that was mentioned over two years ago. We must organize a "Save the Scrod" sit–in. The D.C.s cannot operate if groups of 100 or more block building entrances on scrod nights. They would be put out of business at least once a week and the staff would probably need to moonlight at local restaurants.

Unfortunately, it probably would not be as thrilling for these white-clad gems if they were not able to slide students' I.D.s through "the machine" and risked losing a tip if they forgot to do something as simple as smile — especially since they get paid regardless for so long.

Of course, we could always sneak into the D.C.s the night before, grab all the scrod in sight and throw the little buggers back in the water. Unfortunately, this would require direct scrod–on–person contact. Yuck!

Then again, we could always utilize those wonderful comment cards. You know, the ones that always come back "Will forward to Menu Services." There is probably a sick law somewhere in the Food Services' records department saying students must be force–fed fish at least once a week.

Why not ask for a viable substitute to scrod. For example, lobster. Think about it. The 14–meal plan breaks down to roughly seven dollars for each dinner. You can usually get a twin lobster special for eight dollars in most parts of the state. It's do-able. So, next time you visit your local D.C., bring a pen and tell them I sent you.

Diana D'Avanzo is a Collegian columnist who hates scrod.

Stop ignoring harassment

Sexual harassment is being overlooked. It's overlooked since UMass doesn't have the money. There is no central agency for tabulating and reporting sexual harassment complaints at UMass. And there is no campus–wide educational program for students and faculty about sexual harassment.

In fact for undergraduates, there never has been.

Mike Einhorn

The crime statistics from the Division of Public Safety can't include sexual harassment, since these codes are workplace oriented. There are four main departments at UMass that deal with resolving complaints: Affirmative Action, the Ombud's office, Legal Services, and the largest, the Dean of Students (which covers all of Housing).

Every department head and supervisor also keeps files on sexual harassment cases within their area. There are over 100 record systems, so it is impossible for these departments to share records. This might not be an intentional cover–up of sexual harassment statistics at UMass, but it definitely serves that purpose.

It isn't my inability to obtain these records that angers me, since few large organizations would be much better. What does anger me is during the Reagan-Bush years, one-third of this university's funding was cut, during the same period when our high schools were suffering and cutting teachers. It was when infrastructure quickly went to Spam. And with that one-third went a very positive movement toward educating this campus on sexual harassment.

These budget cuts leave the individuals who are deciding cases today, this very minute, without up–to–date information. Why? Because in addition to the four agencies stated above, each and every boss or department head has the responsibility to be aware of each and every case that occurs in their department. And by law, they have to attempt to mediate a solution before the situation gets out of control, otherwise refer it to someone who can. Think about this for a minute — how can they do this if they don't know the codes?

They can't.

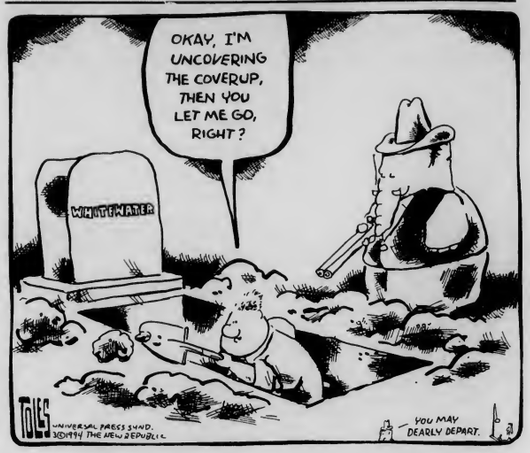
They can't since the last campus–wide educational program on sexual harassment was held in the mid-eighties. Sexual harassment is a very degrading and humiliating experience. So cutting sexual harassment education was probably one of the most painful budget cuts of all, as it forces good well-trained people to leave. You might know one of them.

The danger lies in the fact that the perpetrators and victims do not know what constitutes sexual harassment. People can lose their jobs simply because they didn't know that what they were doing was wrong. Simply because their behavior was fun for them, but painfully humiliating for someone else. Simply because in a book, it says their behavior is sexual harassment. Simply because the person they were harassing had the courage to stand up and report them.

So there is much more at stake here than just the entering students and faculty, who don't know how this University compares with others on sexual harassment statistics. What is also at stake is that men and women who are here don't know what is acceptable and what is not. They do not know what will get them fired and what won't. And they don't know what behaviors they can contest legally or with their supervisors. This holds true with undergraduates as well.

The undergraduate students have the highest rate, on campus, of sexual harassment. This is harassment between each other. A frightening statistic that also increases each year. And since we never had this type of education in the dorms, getting a program together now would be like starting an old rusty diesel engine, in the dead of winter. But not ever having something, means it is that much easier to rebuild from the ground up. You decide. We need it, we would need volunteers for it, and the University can easily offer credit for it.

Peer education on sexual harassment? For credit? Come on, I thought all these columnists did was whine without solutions. In fact, they used to do peer education for credit on a multitude of issues. It was in the seventies and early eighties, and in the very dorms you live in. In fact, these programs were also mercilessly cut. In this retroactive way you could almost call me a reactionary. I'd like to go back to the past — I would like to have these types of classes offered again at UMass.



Then no one could say sexual harassment is being overlooked. And they wouldn't have to.

Farrakhan a victim of double standard

To the editor:

All right. He came, he spoke, he left, and the campus is still standing. Is it okay if we continue some dialogue on Louis Farrakhan, or should we just forget about him like we did with most of the news from last week? The way I see it, if folks can still talk about Nancy and Tonya, then Farrakhan is still a topic worthy of discussion.

Several students objected to the fact that their money was used to sponsor a speaker that they did not support. While their feelings are understandable, it is important to remember that every student (and their money) at the University is part of a collective, and as such, student money is constantly spent on projects that not every student benefits from.

I paid for The Minuteman, a paper containing views that I am adamantly opposed to. My money paid for parking lots and attendants, and I don't have a car. Another student paid a transit fee and didn't ride the PVTA. (And we ain't even gonna talk about the Mullins Center!) There should not be a double standard regarding Black Registered Student Organizations. And speaking of double standards...

Webster's Dictionary defines "anti–Semitism" as "hostility toward or discrimination against Jews..." Under that definition, I think that Minister Farrakhan is an anti–Semite. So do a lot of Black folks (quiet as it is kept). If only my exposure to Minister Farrakhan had been that one speech on March 19, I wouldn't think so, but anyone who has ever dated can tell you that you cannot learn everything about a person in one night, no matter how long the evening lasts.

So why do so many Blacks who think that Farrakhan is an anti–Semite support his right to speak? Maybe because a lot of people are tired of the double standard.

Guns 'N' Roses made racist statements in the song "One in a Million," and the band has also made anti–gay statements. But when the band was scheduled to perform at the Mullins Center, there were no mass protests, and most people were not complaining about student's funds being used to bring the band to campus. Why? Because Guns 'N' Roses fans enjoy the majority of the band's work, and they don't want to be denied an entertaining and memorable evening because the band has said and done some dumb things.

This rationale for excusing white bigots is constantly used. If Pat Buchanan was scheduled for the Arsenio Hall Show, advertisers would not threaten to boycott, but different rules seem to apply where Farrakhan, or any other controversial Black figure, is concerned. No matter what they think of the man and his politics, most people who have heard Minister Farrakhan speak will agree that he is a powerful, captivating, thought–provoking, and amusing speaker. All of those adjectives add up to an entertaining and memorable evening that many did not want to be denied, and Farrakhan's audience should not be condemned simply for going to see him.

Where were all the fans Monday night?

To the editor:

I was at the pep rally on Monday night at the Cage — can you say the same? Where was everybody? Have you no school spirit? As a huge fan, I was shocked by the lack of support from all constituencies for our phenomenal basketball team and the other accomplished athletic programs here at UMass.

Curry Hicks Cage holds approximately 4,000 people, but only about 1,000 attended. Something is severely wrong with this picture. On this campus there are 11,000 students — were you all busy from 8–9 p.m.? This was a free event to exhibit our school spirit and to celebrate a team that has scratched and clawed its way to a top ten ranking. And faculty and staff, what is your excuse? There aren't many meetings going on at that hour.

As a graduate student and alumnus of this great University, I am embarrassed by the lack of bonding and enthusiasm that takes place at this school. It is odd that 9,000 will attend a game, but only 1,000 will come out to say "thanks for making this a fun place to be." A lot of you are probably thinking there is more to a University than sports — and you're right. But it has to start somewhere. Collegiate sports foster traditions like pep rallies. And tradition and spirit are what you'll remember after you graduate.

Next time, don't just claim to be a fan — prove it!

Hot, Sexy and Safer tour returns to Happy Valley

By KARA MATSON
Collegian Correspondent

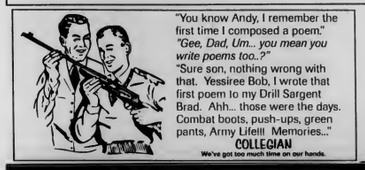
"People talk about sex, but say nothing," said Suzi Landolphi, who travels around the country lecturing on safe sex.

"Hot, Sexy, and Safer," the topic of Landolphi's lecture last night at Mount Holyoke College, has been heard at 500 college campuses over the past five years, and she has discussed sexuality on such talk shows as Geraldo and Maury Povich.

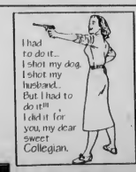
"We need to talk about sex openly and honestly," said Landolphi, who does just that in her comical and candid style. "Lack of communication is everywhere. This country cannot talk about sex because we don't want to empower people."

AIDS has opened the topic of sex for discussion, but there have been numerous other sexually transmitted diseases around for years. One of Landolphi's messages was that AIDS cannot be transmitted through casual contact which includes kissing, touching, sharing food, or working with someone who is infected.

"Most bad sexual experiences happen when one or both people have been drinking," said Landolphi, warning the audience to be careful on the upcoming Spring Break. "Alcohol causes you to risk your dignity, your lives because of drinking and driving, and can cause you to go someplace isolated with someone you don't know."



According to Landolphi, men are socialized to love their bodies, whereas women are taught that their bodies are for someone else.



"All we deal with is behavior," said Landolphi. "People won't change their behavior because they're educated. We need to change our attitudes. We need to unlearn what we have been taught."

Landolphi not only promotes safe sex through her lectures, she also opened the first condom store in the country.

"Most people say they're going to use a condom, but you need communication, honesty, and trust first," said Landolphi. To illustrate this point, she and a volunteer role– played how a couple might open up communication before sexual activity occurs. She also humorously discredited the male excuse that they cannot find condoms large enough to fit by stretching a condom over the volunteer's head.

In her last remarks, Landolphi added a new dimension to her speech, encouraging the predominantly female audience to work to rid our culture of racism, heterosexism, child abuse and sexual abuse.

"You know Andy, I remember the first time I composed a poem."
"Gee, Dad, Um... you mean you write poems too...?"
"Sure son, nothing wrong with that. Yessiree Bob, I wrote that first poem to my Drill Sargent Brad. Ahh... those were the days. Combat boots, push-ups, green pants, Army Life!! Memories..."

employee, was indicted on two counts relating to the release of the Pentagon Papers. F.B.I. officials visited Ellsberg's psychiatrist twice, on July 20 and July 26; both times, Dr. Lewis Fielding refused to discuss his patient. In a July 28 memo to Colson on the "Neutralization of Ellsberg," later– convicted conspirator and former C.I.A. agent Howard Hunt suggested that a file be prepared to collect derogatory information on Ellsberg. He also proposed a break–in of Ellsberg's psychiatrist's office.

On Sept 3–4, Bernard Baker, Eugenio Martinez and Felipe DeDeigo were paid by the White House to do just that. Although "The Plumbers," as the conspirators were known, denied taking Ellsberg's file, Dr. Fielding later testified that the psychiatric analysis was missing from his files. The White House, in effect, illegally used C.I.A. facilities for domestic purposes — – a serious infraction of the law.

International Telephone and Telegraph Corporation's inside position in the Nixon White House did even more to undermine the credibility of the administration. In 1969, the Justice Department brought three anti–trust suits against ITT. On April 19, Nixon told Deputy Attorney General Richard Kleindienst to drop the appeal in one of the suits; "The order is to leave the goddamned thing alone," were his words. That same day he ordered that Richard W. McLaren, then assistant attorney general, Anti–trust Division, to resign if Kleindienst failed to drop the case.

But the Nixon administration didn't protect its pet corporations for free; on July 21, 1971, a subsidiary of ITT pledged $400,000 to the Republican campaign. Ten days later, they were cleared of all anti–trust charges.

All of these events were precursors to the big show — the actual break–in. On June 17, 1972, Barker, Martinez, Frank Sturgis and Virgilio Gonzalez were convicted of second– degree burglary for breaking in to presidential candidate George McGovern's office at the Democratic National Committee headquarters in the release of the Pentagon Papers. F.B.I. officials visited Washington's Watergate complex.

What baffled many observers was that they had already established a successful surveillance of many of the offices on May 28. But the administration's zeal for infiltrating the Democrats, their ultimate quest for total manipulation of their enemies in the end caused their downfall.

What is ironic is that it was not the break–in which destroyed the Nixon presidency, but the subsequent cover– ups and manipulation of facts perpetuated by the entire administration.

It was almost by chance that the cover–up began to unravel. In what columnist James Reston calls an "almost accidental discovery, in a throw–away question by a minor attorney," Nixon appointment Secretary Alexander Butterfield revealed that Nixon had kept taped records of conversations in the Oval Office.

From there, it was all downhill. On June 20, 1972, three days after the break–in, an 18–1/2 minute portion of a recorded conversation between Nixon and later–convicted Chief Domestic Affairs Advisor John Ehrlichmann was mysteriously erased. Both men deny that Watergate was discussed, but inconsistencies such as these are everywhere. As former Nixon Solicitor General Robert H. Bork observed, "If Mr. Nixon had burned [all] the tapes, he might conceivably avoided removal from office, but his presidency would have been paralyzed."

As it was, Nixon was unable to erase all of the traces his administration had left throughout the entire web of scandal. In his farewell address of August 8, 1974, he said that "If some of my judgements were wrong — and some were wrong — they were made in what I believed at the time to be the best interests of the nation." Unfortunately, Nixon's best interests did not necessarily coincide with those of the American public, and we still have yet to recover from the deep wounds that Watergate has inflicted upon us.

"We're realists," Barbot recently told Spin magazine. "In the best possible world, good bands would be able to put out their own records and survive. A band like Fugazi can do that, but not us."

Even though the band is now under the wing of a major label, they are still sticking close to their punk ethics. They have accepted no money for tour support from Atlantic, and continue to run their own independent label DeSoto Records.

With their latest release containing the best songs the band has ever recorded and a reputation for intense live shows that most bands would trade their flannel shirts in for, Jawbox threatens to put on one of the finest shows the Valley has seen in quite awhile. Earplugs not included.

Three times during each semester the Textbook Annex brings in a wholesaler to buy textbooks from students. Wholesalers are in the business of selling used books to colleges and universities across the country. Therefore, in determining how much they will pay a student for a book they must consider the demand for that book as well as the shipping and handling costs involved in processing and reselling the book. This is why prices vary and indeed change frequently. Generally only current editions have value.

The best time to sell books is at the end of the semester. At that time the Annex will pay 50% of the new price for a book if we have an order for that book for the following semester and we need to purchase copies. If we do not, the wholesaler may make you an offer.

If you have questions please ask the people doing the buyback or the Annex staff. They will be more than happy to answer your questions and give you any tips that may be applicable to your situation.

*A Picture ID is Required for all Buyback Transactions.

When is the next Textbook Buyback?

Mid-semester Textbook Buyback is:
Wednesday, MARCH 16
Thursday, MARCH 17
9:00 AM- 4:00 PM
Friday, MARCH 18

Rabin offers no ground to the PLO

By BARRY SCHWEID
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin offered Tuesday to speed up Palestinian self-rule but ruled out compromises on Jerusalem and security as he appealed to the Arabs to reopen Mideast peace talks.

In a speech to a pro-Israel lobby group, Rabin gave no ground to PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat, who is holding out for a U.N. Security Council resolution to challenge Israel's control of Jerusalem and to deploy an international force on the West Bank.

Rabin then met with Secretary of State Warren Christopher on the stalemate that threatens to permanently derail peace talks between Israel and four Arab parties — the Palestinians, Syria, Jordan and Lebanon.

"We are going through difficult times," Christopher acknowledged as he posed for pictures with Rabin at Blair House, the presidential guest house across Pennsylvania Avenue from the White House.

The talks with Syria were already moving slowly when Dr. Baruch Goldstein, a Jewish resident of the West Bank, opened fire at a mosque in Hebron on Feb. 25, killing at least 29 people. But Israel and the PLO were close to agreement on arrangements for Palestinian self-rule in Jericho and Gaza.

The massacre provoked an Arab boycott of the negotiations, and the dispatch of a senior American official, Dennis B. Ross, to Tunis over the weekend to meet Arafat failed to persuade the PLO to return to the negotiations.

"It is time to get back to the negotiating table," Rabin said in a luncheon speech to the American Israel Public Affairs Committee. In fact, he said, "we are ready to accelerate the talks and the contacts and the negotiations."

Only a little more effort, he said, "and we will begin to lay the foundations of peace for our children — ours and the Palestinians'."

But Rabin, while again registering official sorrow over the Hebron incident, declared his government would not change its fundamental positions on the security of Israel and its citizens, including the 130,000 Jewish residents of the West Bank and Gaza. He referred to the territories, with their overwhelmingly Palestinian population, as Judea and Samaria, their Hebrew Biblical names, and said: "We have no intention of compromising on any security matters."

Similarly, he called Jerusalem, which the Arabs foresee as the capital of a Palestinian state, as the eternal capital of Israel, from which "the word of peace will go forth, notwithstanding any United Nations resolution."

Christopher told Congress last month the administration would oppose any reference to Jerusalem in a resolution. Rep. Elliot L. Engel, D-N.Y., told Christopher in a letter Tuesday that he was concerned the Security Council may adopt a resolution in which Jerusalem is described as occupied territory.

In 1990, Engel steered a resolution through the House to have the United States unequivocally support Jerusalem as an integral part of Israel.

Rabin made no claim to the West Bank, Gaza or the Golan Heights. The last is the territory Syria lost in the 1967 Six-Day War and hopes to recover.

Clinton gains support on New England tour

By TERENCE HUNT
Associated Press

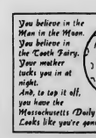
KEENE, N.H. — Struggling for another political comeback in snowy New Hampshire, President Clinton went before friendly crowds Tuesday in hopes of demonstrating Americans care more about jobs and health care than the Whitewater controversy.

"Whitewater is for canoeing and rafting," 68-year-old Betty J. Winberg told Clinton at a town meeting In Nashua. "Shame on those who would detract and distract from the important work you're doing."

"Thank you. Bless you," the president replied. He beamed at her comment, which was echoed by two other participants.

In his hour-long appearance, Clinton moved like a talk show host, pacing the stage at the Elm Street Junior High School with a wireless microphone and answering questions — which were exclusively about education, jobs and health care.

"This is America," Clinton said afterward. "This is what people care about."



Attendance was limited to people who got tickets from local politicians or school officials. The audience of 1,200 people was filled with Clinton supporters.

He said the reason his message had been drowned out by the Whitewater affair was simple: "I haven't been out here with them."

New Hampshire was the state that launched Clinton's comeback in 1992 when he was battered by questions about his draft record and allegations about womanizing. He said he had "a depth of affection and respect" for the people here.

Asked by reporters if his visit was intended to launch his re-election campaign, Clinton said, "This isn't about the 1996 campaign. This is about what we're going to do in Congress for the American people in 1994."

BEAUTIFUL GIRL

Somebody up there likes me! After my last note to you I had no idea at all if I would ever find you again but the day it came out I was sitting in Meher reading the paper when I looked up and noticed you entering the room. I first I thought I was crazy, that it couldn't possibly be you, but it was. When you sat down I watched as you flipped through the paper and wondered if you knew the personal was yours. At one point I saw you suddenly smile as you were reading and while I'd never know if it was my nota or if something else had captured your magical smile, I'd like to believe that it was because somewhere inside it touched you. I think Euripides said it best when he said, "I have found power in the mysteries of thought, exaltation in the chanting of the muses. I have been versed in the reasoning of men, but fate is stronger than anything I have known." I won't let my chance slip away so easily this time but it's going to take a while longer.

Campus 'experts' pick Final Four

By MICHAEL REISS
Collegian Staff

With a folded up newspaper clipping of the NCAA Men's Basketball Tournament pairings to help them, a variety of people talked about college basketball around the University of Massachusetts campus yesterday.

Asked to pick the Final Four and a national champion, almost everyone came to the conclusion that this year's field is one of the toughest ever to predict.

"I love college basketball because it's so unpredictable," said freshman Dana O'Brien, a pre-nursing major. "Anyone can come out of nowhere and win it."

O'Brien picked UConn, Kentucky, California and UMass to reach the Final Four. With all four teams having a legitimate shot to win, she called the final a "toss up."

Many others had strong feelings about who they think will win the National Championship. The majority of people felt that the Midwest region has the most talented teams, while the West region has a lack of quality at the top.

"The Midwest region is the hardest, while the West is the weakest," noted Scott Rankin, a junior finance major.

Nonetheless, Rankin likes UMass to reach the Final Four, along with Temple, Kentucky and Louisville. He foresees a fourth matchup between the Owls and Minutemen in the final, with UMass taking the prize.

Rankin wasn't the only person to predict UMass winning in the final. Josh Rattet, a senior sports management major, has the Minutemen ousting Duke for the title.

"They are gelling at the right time and their chemistry is very strong," said Rattet, who likes UConn and Louisville as his other Final Four teams. "If they all play up to their abilities, they can beat anyone in the nation."

"They [UMass] are gelling at the right time and their chemistry is very strong. If they play up to their abilities, they can beat anyone in the nation."
— Sport management senior Josh Rattet

Freshmen Lianne Laing and Tara Swartz of the women's gymnastics team like UMass over Kansas in the final.

Top seed North Carolina was a team many felt would go all the way. While many were intrigued by a possible Temple–Indiana contest in the second round, few felt that either team could overtake the Tar Heels in the East.

Bill Schultz, a senior communications major, thinks that North Carolina's depth will propel them to the national crown. "They have the senior leadership and three incredible freshmen in [Rasheed] Wallace, [Jerry] Stackhouse and [Jeff] McInnis," Schultz said.

Schultz likes the Tar Heels over Arkansas in the final, with Duke and Arizona rounding out the Final Four.

Danny Souza, a freshman with an undecided major, sees North Carolina steamrolling through the tourney as well.

"They're unstoppable with one of the best coaches [Dean Smith] in the business," he said.

Freshman sports management major Brett Chabot agrees.

"North Carolina is a real deep team. There's no such thing as foul trouble for them," he said.

"They have such great depth, there's really no way to get them in foul trouble."

Ted Priestley, a senior member of the men's soccer team known for his flip throw-in, sees North Carolina winning it as well, citing their experience as a key. Purdue, Missouri and Michigan were Priestley's other Final Four selections.

Mark Bourne, a senior history/political science major, doesn't see why everyone likes North Carolina so much.

"I think UNC shouldn't be a No. 1 seed," he said. "I'm sick and tired of everyone pumping them up all the time."

Bourne projects Temple, Duke, Missouri and Arkansas reaching the Final Four, with Arkansas coming out on top.

The Razorbacks, with their swarming defensive style, are a top seed many felt will win the National Championship.

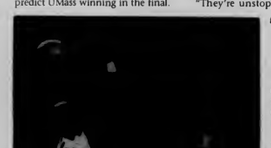
Paula Perlmutter, a senior with a bachelor's degree of individual concentration, sees Arkansas topping Purdue for the Championship. Louisville and North Carolina were her other Final Four teams.

After squeaking by Arizona, Mike McCleau, a senior environmental science major, likes the Razorbacks to roll over North Carolina for it all. Kentucky was his other Final Four participant.

McClean sees some potential fascinating matchups if things fall into place. A possible Purdue–UConn tilt in the Final Four would have Glenn Robinson and Donyell Marshall square off.

Jessi Miller, a sophomore communications major, thinks Arkansas will take care of Duke in the finals. Miller sees UConn and Louisville as the two others to advance out of their respective region.

Many picked some surprising choices to take home the National Championship.



Melissa Gurile, a 6–3 sophomore center on the women's basketball team, likes No. 5 UCLA to beat Kansas in the final, noting the athletic talent of the O'Bannon brothers.

Gurile's frontcourt mate, freshman forward Crystal Carroll, projects Kansas and UCLA playing for the Championship as well, but with Kansas the victor.

Sophomore point guard Trish Hopson of the women's basketball team sees Kentucky over Syracuse in the final. Hopson feels that Pennsylvania, Wake Forest and Loyola (Md.) are teams to watch out for.

Dave Rix, a sophomore history major, also likes Kentucky, pointing out that Coach Rick Pitino is one of the best.

ARAM COHEIAN / COLLEGIAN
Junior point guard Derek Kellogg is looking to drive the Minutemen past the NCAA field and on to Charlotte for the Final Four.

ARAM COHEIAN / COLLEGIAN
An Honorable Mention All–America selection by the Associated Press, Lou Roe has given many fans around the nation reason to fill in "Massachusetts" a long way in their tournament brackets.

The best time of the year is here

Andrew Bryce

It's here. It's time. This is it. I'm ready to go off.

•Ah, the most joyous time of the year.

March Madness, baby. The most exciting time of the calendar year is here, as the NCAA basketball tournament is starting this Thursday. This year is especially exciting considering the parity in the NCAA this year, as six different teams have held the No. 1 spot.

Definitely a tough call as to who's going to Charlotte for the Final Four. It is truly agonizing to pick my teams for the pools (for fun, not money, of course), and I have come out with three different outcomes. Keep reading, and you will get my final inside looks. (Please keep reading).

•I've said it before, and I am going to say it again. Glenn Robinson of Purdue is the best player there is in college basketball. As if Robinson didn't prove it in the 49–point effort against Illinois this weekend. He was unstoppable.

•The women's hoop team ended its season in the record books, as the Minutewomen qualified for their first semlfinal Atlantic 10 tournament game in school history. Senior guard Maleeka Valentine ended her career in fine fashion, averaging 10 points and seven assists in the A–10 tourney. Though her career statistics may not tell the full story, Valentine was a valuable member of the Minutewomen throughout her four years.

•OK, first I'll nit–pick the West region of the NCAA men's tournament. Missouri is going down in the second round at the hands of Wisconsin. California will defeat Wisconsin in the Sweet 16, and Louisville in the Final 8 game to go to the Final Four. What about Arizona? Arizona chokes come tourney time; this year, despite their outstanding backcourt, the Wildcats should gag once again.

•Now, it's onto the East region. If I can see in the future, I envision North Carolina, Temple, Nebraska and Connecticut heading to the Regionals, with UNC defeating UConn to go to the Final Four. However, don't be surprised to see Temple defeating UNC. If that happens, Temple is in.

•The NBA Most Valuable Player debate is heating up. Hakeem Olajuwon was the early favorite when the Rockets were hot. I would become the true Master of the Obvious to say that the winner would come from the better team. So, I won't. But it will be.

•Southeast Region next. If I am actually right once when it comes to the NCAA tournament picks, making the Sweet Sixteen will be Providence (who will upset Purdue), Wake Forest (who will upset Kansas), Kentucky and Duke. It's Kentucky in the Final Four.

•My Knicks are hurting. All–star guard John Starks will probably miss the rest of the regular season after undergoing knee surgery.

Hey John, buddy, just make sure you're ready for the playoffs. I have told too many people that the Knicks will become the NBA Champions. I just wouldn't be able to take the harassment.

•Finally the Midwest Region. I am assuming that Arkansas, UCLA, Western Kentucky (who will upset Michigan), and Massachusetts will make the round of 16. The Minutemen (gulp) over Arkansas (gulp) to go to the Final Four.

I hate North Carolina, so I'll take Kentucky in the finals.

I like Massachusetts, so I'll take UMass over California.

Wait a minute, let me look over my picks again.

Everybody is a genius before the Madness begins

By JIM O'CONNELL

The NCAA tournament bracket is easy to fill in. Just pick a winner of each first-round game and then decide how far it can go. Until Thursday at 12:07 p.m. EST, everyone's predictions are sound, well thought-out and on the money.

So here's one more sound, well thought-out opinion on what's going to happen over the next three weekends.

EAST:

North Carolina has advanced to the regional semifinals every season since 1984 so it's a pretty safe bet the Tar Heels will get by Liberty and Washington State.

Waiting there will be the winner of the indiana-Temple matchup, a battle (there must be a better word) of two of the country's most visible coaches, Bob Knight and John Chaney. Both spent more time in highlights this year than their players. Knight for interacting with his charges on the bench and Chaney for charging at his contemporary. Look for Temple to prevail in a possession-by-possession game.

Connecticut can ride Donyell Marshall's shoulders pretty far — no one has stopped him all season. George Washington should beat Alabama-Birmingham as long as 7-foot-1 Yinka Dare gets to touch the ball, but the Colonials just aren't strong enough to handle the Huskies, who have spent the season feeling they have lacked respect despite being ranked as high as second in the poll.

Nebraska comes in as one of the hottest teams after taking the Big Eight tournament and the Cornhuskers are due to break their one-and-out NCAA run. Then they'll have to deal with Florida, a solid team most of the country still doesn't know much about. Nebraska should keep its ride going to get the Huskers against the Huskies.

That sets up North Carolina-Temple and Nebraska-Connecticut, meaning a matchup of the top seeds with North Carolina beating UConn to return to the Final Four.

SOUTHEAST:

The top half of this bracket is dominated by one player, Purdue's Glenn Robinson. The nation's leading scorer and favorite for national player of the year honors is more than enough to get the Boilermakers by Central Florida and Providence. The Friars' tough defense will scare Robinson and Purdue, but not enough. As long as guard Randolph Childress is healthy Wake Forest will be able to avoid an ambush by the College of Charleston, the darlings of the field, but then Kansas will be there and coach Roy Williams' teams tend to peak in the tournament.

Look for Southwestern Louisiana to pull one of the first shockers when the Ragin' Cajuns use their speed to get by Marquette. The run won't last long - Kentucky will be next. Seton Hall was the team everyone was shocked to see in the draw. People will be more surprised when the Pirates get by Michigan State and then scare Duke before losing.

This should be the only region where the top four seeds advance and the bottom two should move on as Kansas slows down Robinson and Kentucky speeds it up against the Blue Devils. Kentucky gets back to the Final Four with a 3-point blitz of the Jayhawks.

ASSOCIATED PRESS
Many scribes are picking Coach Todd Bozeman's Cal Golden Bears for the Final Four ....

MIDWEST:

Arkansas was No. 1 this season more than any other team and the Razorbacks probably won't be tested in the first two rounds, beating Georgetown to advance to the round of 16. Oklahoma State has improved its perimeter game to help Bryant Reeves inside and that should mean wins over New Mexico State and UCLA.

Texas will become a first-round fan favorite when people finally get to see guard B.J. Tyler in action, but the Longhorns just don't have enough to stop Michigan inside in the second round. Saint Louis' surprise season will come to a close against a young Maryland team and it wouldn't have mattered anyway since Massachusetts is waiting in the next round.

Eddie Sutton will have Oklahoma State all fired up to face Arkansas, his former school, and the Cowboys are too experienced to get rattled by the Razorbacks' pressure. So, facing possible action from the White House, look for Oklahoma State to move on against Massachusetts, which will get by Michigan in a defensive struggle. Massachusetts is one of those teams that just doesn't get impressed by an opponent, but the Minutemen will impress the country with their first Final Four berth.

WEST:

The top two teams in this region have reputations for going down early in the tournament. Things won't change much as Missouri and Arizona will both make second-round exits, the Tigers at the hands of frenetic Cincinnati and the Wildcats to a solid Virginia team which doesn't shoot well but plays tremendous defense.

California has two of the top players in the country in Jason Kidd and Lamond Murray and they will carry the Bears past Syracuse and into the regional semifinal. Minnesota has trouble playing away from home and the Golden Gophers are a long way from Minneapolis so there doesn't appear to be much chance for them to get by Louisville, who should get by Virginia and into the regional finals.

Cal has already beaten Cincinnati once this season and a repeat means a shot at Louisville for the Final Four berth.

FINAL FOUR:

It's pretty nervy even thinking this far, but North Carolina gets by Kentucky and Massachusetts beats California. This will be another year where we use the word repeat a lot as the Tar Heels send the state into a wild celebration with Dean Smith's third national title.

Rabin rejects Palestinian demands

WASHINGTON (AP) — With Mideast peace talks near collapse, Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin on Wednesday rejected Palestinian demands for new security measures on the West Bank. He also signaled to Syria a willingness to make "painful decisions" over the future of the Golan Heights.

With President Clinton at his side, Rabin said Israel would not alter the agreement it signed last September to gradually permit Palestinians "to conduct their own affairs" while maintaining Israeli military control over the West Bank.

Virtually every week Israel buries victims of terrorist attacks, Rabin said, ruling out Palestinian security demands prompted by a Jewish extremist's deadly attack on a mosque.

"We don't think it appropriate to wage new demands after every terrorist attack," Rabin said. "Security is a two-way street." But taking an entirely different tack on Syria, Rabin said "we will stand ready to do what is required of us if the Syrians are ready to do what is required of them."

He then told Israeli reporters that what he meant was a "territorial compromise" on the Golan Heights.

Serbs, Croats agree to talks

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — Serbs and Croats, the main rivals in Yugoslavia's bloody breakup, agreed Wednesday to hold their first talks on formally ending their vicious 1991 war, which later engulfed Bosnia.

Talks between leaders of Croatia's Serbs and the Croatian government will take place next Tuesday at the Russian Embassy in Zagreb, another indication that Moscow as well as Washington are pushing hard for an overall peace.

Balkan blood-letting began when armed Serbs rebelled against Croatian independence during the breakup of the former Yugoslav federation.

The ensuing war killed at least 10,000 people before a U.N.-brokered truce brought an uneasy peace to the one-third of Croatia that Serbs control. More than 200,000 people are dead or missing in the nearly two-year-long Bosnian conflict.

Vitaly Churkin, Russia's special envoy on Yugoslavia, said the talks should yield a formal agreement ceasing military and all other hostilities between Croats and Serbs in Croatia.

Churkin stressed there could be no peace in neighboring Bosnia if hostilities in the Serb-held area of Croatia known as Krajina were ignored.

"We thought that while we keep working very hard on Bosnia-Herzegovina we should not forget the very thorny issue, very explosive issue" of Krajina, Churkin said.

Whitewater hearings inevitable

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Dan Rostenkowski said today that Whitewater hearings are inevitable but House Speaker Thomas S. Foley refused to budge from his opposition despite another Democratic defection.

The subject of hearings didn't come up as President Clinton held a White House news conference, but the president was asked if he stood by a 1992 assertion that he and his wife lost nearly $70,000 on the Whitewater deal. He did not answer directly.

"I don't have anything else to say about that right now," Clinton said. "We are cooperating fully right now with the special counsel. I wish you would let them do their work."

Rostenkowski, one of the most powerful lawmakers, predicted a congressional investigation of Whitewater while saying most Americans are tired of hearing about the case.

Rep. Lee Hamilton, chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, broke party ranks Tuesday to say that hearings may be the quickest way to get the facts out in Whitewater.

SGA votes to ratify troubled elections

By JUSTIN DOYLE
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association voted to ratify the elections for student trustee and president at the Undergraduate Student Senate meeting last night by a unanimous vote.

SGA released the official results of the election. Al Liazana was reelected as student trustee by over 500 votes and Mirran Raphaely was elected president by a margin of approximately 180 votes.

"I think the very fact of the matter that we eliminated the ballots is enough."
– Matthew Pavesi, Undergraduate Student Speaker

The SGA commented on problems which occurred during the elections. Cam Tewksbury, chair of the Governmental Affairs Committee, who co-ran the elections with Christine Lopes, elections coordinator, spoke about the ballot box stuffing incident as well as other problems that were brought to the SGA's attention.

SGA officially commented on the ballot-box stuffing incident, which occurred in the Worcester Dining Common. Approximately 150 ballots were invalidated because election officials determined they were stuffed.

"There have been previous rumors that the invalidated ballots voted for candidates Diego Figueroa and Joe Vozza," Tewksbury said. "SGA is not accusing any one candidate nor campaign of this incident, but because of the secrecy of the ballot we cannot confirm or dispel the rumors."

SGA is not planning to investigate the ballot box stuffing.

"I think the very fact of the matter that we eliminated the ballots is enough," said Matthew Pavesi, Undergraduate Student Speaker.

"Candidates worked their asses off and I don't want something stupid from a person or persons to affect the hard work that the candidates did."

SGA also received complaints about David Nunez, SGA president, who worked on ballot box duty, because he had run on the same ticket last year with Al Lizana, who was running for reelection this year.

SGA also responded to the absence of a ballot box in the Butterfield dormitory, which has had one of the highest voting percentage of any area per capita in recent years.

"Historically, Butterfield residents have the luxury of having a ballot box in their own dorm," Tewksbury said. "That has been at times where the staff is sufficient, that we can afford another person to go outside of their own district."

Trustees agree on tuition hike

By JUSTIN DOYLE
Collegian Staff

Students at the University of Massachusetts have won the battle over tuition increases, but the fight for a zero percent increase in fees may be lost.

The Board of Trustees Committee on Administration and Finance voted for a zero percent increase in tuition at the UMass' five schools at a meeting on Tuesday. Spokesman Bill Wright said the committee's recommendation of a two percent increase in fees for all state universities will be considered at the full board meeting on April 6.

Undergraduate tuition and fees would increase $107, making the bill $5,574 a year, if the Board votes for a two percent increase.

The trustees voted 5-2 against raising tuition, in accordance with the Higher Education Coordinating Council's decision to freeze tuition for all state universities and community colleges.

HECC unanimously voted for a zero percent tuition increase at a meeting on Monday in Boston. HECC also recommended a zero to two percent increase in student fees, which does not include room and board.

Chancellor David K. Scott recommended a zero percent increase in fees to the committee, in support of the students' fight to stop tuition and fee increases.

Several student leaders spoke in favor of the zero percent increase in fees including Al Lizana, Student Trustee, David Nunez, Student Government President and Lynn Robitaille, Student Coordinator of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy.

Daniel Taylor, Chair of the Board of Trustees, also spoke to the Board. Taylor sympathized with the students financial problems.

"Our goal is to lift the burden from the students and maintain the level of education," Taylor said. "We believe we can make

Snow blocks wheelchairs

Disabled students hindered by unplowed campus

By JAMES FINLAW
Collegian Correspondent

Donald Bradway said he has seen it over and over again. For four long years the senior psychology major has sat and watched terrible New England winters annually turn the University of Massachusetts campus into a frozen, slushy mess. He "sat" because he has cerebral palsy and is wheelchair bound.

For everyone, winter poses special problems. There's always the chance of slipping and falling on a patch of ice. There's the wet feet from stepping in too many puddles of icy water.

For Bradway, the snow and ice is more than just a cold, damp nuisance. To him, an unshoveled sidewalk is an obstacle which can completely take away his mobility.

On the morning of March 4, a Friday, Bradway said he arrived in front of Hasbrouck Hall, having made the daily $5 minute journey from his home near Canton Ma., to the University. Upon arrival he was let out of his van by his personal driver, who he pays to drive him to and from school.

Forced to go around to the back entrance of Hasbrouck (the building has no front entrance which is accessible to the handicapped), Bradway said he encountered a problem. The snow, which was a few inches deep, prevented him from being able to get his electric wheelchair to the door.

"When able–bodied people go through a couple of inches of snow, able–bodied people can at least get up the stairs. Wheelchair–bound folks can't get up walkways when there are a couple of inches of snow...it's tough," Bradway said.

He called the maintenance department for help. "I called to ask if I could get into my class. They had no idea, they didn't know if I could get in or not. I talked to three different people and no one knew what to do."

Unable to get to class, Bradway set off for the Whitmore Disability Office to tell them of his problem. On the way, the snow and the ice on the unshoveled sidewalks caked up on his wheelchair, causing the beits (which work in much the same way as a bicycle chain) to come off.

Completely immobile, Bradway had to have a

UHS seeks improvements

By GERI SAHN
Collegian Staff

Many new changes have been taking place at the University Health Services in order to make things run more smoothly and efficiently.

At the beginning of last semester, the Colorado–based consulting firm Stephen L. Beckly and Associates, were hired to make recommendations to the University Health Services for improvements.

Suggestions included organizing a clinic–coordinating scheduling committee, implementing a women's health clinic, and eliminating the optometry services and urgent care clinic.

Another suggestion was to work with Cooley–Dickinson Hospital in Northampton in order to expand laboratory proficiencies and eliminate the 19–bed in–patient unit.

Bernette Melby, the appointed interim director of Health Services, initially responded to the suggestions by saying the reviews would be taken into consideration. Her main concern was to decide what would best serve the needs of the campus community.

Under her direction, four task forces have been put together to work on the suggested changes. Customer service, in–patient care, access for appointments, and internal communications for access improvement are the four broad groups.

"We are doing things to better insure the students. Clearly what I see is that there is a need for better services," Melby said.

One of the major changes UHS has been working on is women's health issues and services. So far, they have surveyed over 2,800 women for their opinions about the services for women on campus.

They have also restructured urgent care to reduce the waiting time to see help. Engineering students helped with surveys to improve the waiting time.

Melby said staff members have changed their shifts around in order to accommodate the students better. Instead of having students come in at 8 a.m., staff will be able to see them at more convenient times of the day.

"We need to have staff ready when the students need us. So far we have had a 43 percent reduction of waiting time and we are hoping to improve it even more," she said.

In April, UHS will hold community meetings to get feedback on their improvements so far.

"We will be gathering opinions and information about what the community wants," Melby said.

Handbook tells how to claim Irish ancestry

By TRACY MONAHAN
Collegian Staff

It's time again for the wearing of the green, as more than 44.3 million Irish–Americans living in the United States join in various Saint Patrick's Day festivities.

According to Frank Faulkner, a visiting professor in the journalism department at the University of Massachusetts, almost one–third of Massachusetts residents can claim an Irish background.

Faulkner recently compiled a handbook explaining how citizens with an Irish–born parent or grandparent can obtain Irish citizenship.

"Irish citizenship is considered a birthright," Faulkner said in a press release, "but since America is such a mobile society, the trick is to be able to track down all the places in the United States where the family's marriage, birth and death certificates are located."

He said a dozen certified documents are needed to apply for citizenship.

Foreign birth registration can be made at the Embassy or Consulate General of the Republic of Ireland.

The handbook, Irish Citizenship Handbook, is a 70–page work that includes more than 100 addresses in the United States that can help in obtaining the necessary documentation.

It also describes the Irish registers and the eight different places in Dublin and Belfast where the certification can be obtained.

"With the handbook an American can document the birth of an Irish grandparent who might have landed in New York, married in New Jersey, had a child born in Chicago, traveiled to California and married, and then had children who came to Massachusetts and now want to claim their Irish birthright," Faulkner said.

He also included in the handbook examples of the documents he used to apply for dual citizenship, and directions for conducting a comprehensive genealogical search for Irish ancestors.

"The public response to the Irish Citizenship Handbook has been tremendous," Faulkner said.

"The book is already selling in Ireland and I've been asked about compiling Canadian and Australian editions," he said.

On Saint Patrick's Day, however, everyone is Irish, so even without dual citizenship feel free to celebrate. Top o' the morning to all.

a case on the merits."

The average undergraduate tuition and fees for students in the UMass system is $4,546. Tuition and fees at UMass Amherst have increased 103% since the 1988–89 academic year.

The proposed hikes would boost student fees at Boston, by $84; at Dartmouth, by $267; at Lowell, by $92; and at the medical school in Worcester, by $40.

stranger chip the ice and snow off the belts and put them back on. Finally, having missed his class and been rendered immobile by the snow-covered sidewalks, he reached the Disability Office.

"They told me that I was about the 25th person that has had this trouble, and that they set up a meeting with the grounds department to help disabled persons," Bradway said. He said he was not told when the meeting would take place.

Bradway said he has told the school of his difficulties in the past, but according to his stepfather, Leo Mongeau, "he never receives calls from the Disability Office telling him what was done about the situation. There is no follow-up whatsoever. The biggest problem is that they do not handle the situation with much speed at all concerning the handicapped."

On March 10, the Disability Office held a meeting with the maintenance department. Susan Regan of the Disability Office said "we had representatives from this office, student representatives, someone from transit, someone from the residence halls, and 2 people from the physical plant."

She said the University had two central problems involving their ability to remove snow, "the conditions from back to back ice storms, and cutbacks to manpower."

Regan said the physical plant has "re-prioritized their schedule of snow removal." The old priority list, which had the Health Center, Dining Commons and roads listed first, has been "altered a little bit, to include the areas around the handicapped dorms, ramps and the campus center."

"They set up a number that handicapped people can call so they can contact the physical plant," Regan said. This number will allow handicapped students to tell the physical plant of a trouble-spot "so they can bump it up on the priority list."

Regan also said parked cars "are a serious problem" to quick snow removal. She said that cars parked around Prince, Crampton and Brett "particularly during the time following a storm, must leave so these areas can be cleaned."

When Bradway was informed of the new snow-removal regulations, he simply replied "it's one thing what they say, and one thing what they do."

AHORA strives for voice

Spanish-speaking organization strives for voice

By BRANDON FERRIS
Collegian Correspondent

AHORA, the UMass Spanish-speaking organization, was a Resident Student Organization only in name two years ago. "It was nothing," said Jalil Mendoza, president of the group. AHORA had a zero budget, a tiny office in the Student Union, and few members.

But things have changed since then. Mendoza took over as president, and AHORA has been flourishing since.

AHORA now has a healthy budget, an expanded office, and an enthusiastic, energetic membership. This energy was evident as Mendoza greeted each female member who entered the office with a friendly kiss. "We always give a kiss to Latino people to say 'hi,'" he said.

The AHORA constitution reads, "AHORA was born out of the desire of the members of the Spanish-speaking community, including students, faculty, and the community in general, to have an organized and united voice in speaking to those issues which affect their lives."

Amayla Budet, a sophomore microbiology major on exchange from the University of Puerto Rico, said AHORA helps Latino students connect with the community, and with each other. "I think it helps them feel part of the University through a cultural organization," she said. "We all unite to feel part of the university. It's just to give us representation of who we are in the University."

Mendoza said members can learn valuable leadership skills and have better connection with the University administration and the ALANA population at large.

According to Mendoza, AHORA does "a little bit of everything," unlike most other RSOs, which specialize. He said the organization sponsors parties, lectures, concerts and other cultural events, as well as display tables on the campus center concourse.

Last year, he said, AHORA sponsored 20 events. He cited the recent Asian/Latino jam as one exampie. Events slated for this semester include a cultural night, a concert, and a trip to Boston.

AHORA became an RSO in 1973. Mendoza said the administration was slow in responding to demands by the Latino community for an RSO. AHORA, Spanish for "right now," became a rallying cry, and was chosen as the group's name.

Mendoza said there are about 75 members of AHORA, and of those, about 25 are very active. However, he said, this has not always been the case. "There are cycles of people that get involved," he said. "There is not a continuation, and we're working on that." He said he hopes future students will not have to work to rebuild the organization as he did two years ago.

Treasurer Sandra Valentin, a senior environmental science major, has also been a force behind the growth of AHORA. "It was very important to me because AHORA was the only active Latino organization at the time, and the voice of the Latino community would have disappeared."

AHORA is located in 406 F Student Union Building, and has office hours Monday through Friday, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Valentin stressed that all students, not just Spanish speakers are welcome. "We welcome anybody who wants to improve their Spanish or just get involved in the activities," she said. "We're here to reach out to other communities."

Mendoza also stressed that AHORA is for all Latino students, not just Puerto Ricans, who he said make up the majority of the university's Latino population.

Norma Rosa, a sophomore economics major from Honduras, echoed this notion. "I came to get involved with other Latinos," she said. "I wanted to demonstrate that all Latinos are welcome."

Didn't I see this in "Ghost?"

Celebrate true Irish spirit

"They expect me to give up, but they are going to be disappointed. I shall resist." –Bobby Sands

Happy St. Patrick's Day, my fellow students in this here concrete jungle. Today is a special day for Irish and non– Irish alike. This is the one day of the year when everyone fashions off the green in their wardrobe, drinks lots of beer, and suddenly remembers a distant relative from Ireland. But that's not what it's all about.

With all the crazy hoopla going on for St. Pat's these days, too many people miss the "true meaning" of the festivities. Today is a celebration of what it means to be Irish. To do this we must look at the past, and to our future.

Have fun celebrating tonight, but don't forget to raise a glass to Bobby Sands, and remember the green runs through an Irishman's veins 365 days a year.

Dave Gleeson

Our Irish ancestors lived, and died, through the darkest time in Irish history: Black '47. This is when the potato famine was at it's worst. Millions of Irish people died from starvation while England withheld stores of grain capable of feeding every man, woman, and little child. The Irish resisted though, and troublesome times prevailed.

Countless numbers of Irish immigrants sailed across the ocean for a chance in the "promised land" only to be faced with discrimination, poverty, and signs like Irish need not apply. The Irish resisted though, and through struggle and hard times the determination of the Irish people persisted. Now, years later, being irish is all the rage.

Throughout all of Ireland's history the struggle goes on, but the determination has never let up.

Bobby Sands was one of the many Irish martyrs that captured the heart and spirit of the Irish people, but too many memories have faded too quickly.

Sands was sentenced to 14 years of imprisonment in an H– block in England for possession of an unloaded gun. While there, Sands and his fellow Irish prisoners were horribly beaten and treated as less than human, but Sands resisted.

On May 5, 1981 Bobby Sands died on the 66th day of his hunger strike in protest of England's inhumane treatment. The world looked on as Parliament and (the ever–smiling) Margaret Thatcher refused to budge. They let Sands and nine other martyrs die in their arms, without a tear. There are no equal rights and justice.

Sands determination won though; his protest had, at least temporarily, won over the admiration of the world. How brave his death was, knowing for weeks that he was going to die, but refusing to give in. Weak in body, but strong in mind, Sands did what he had learned to do, he sacrificed his needs for the needs of his people.

Recently the media's coverage of Ireland's problems in the struggle for independence has increased as it seems some sort of peaceful resolution is closer than ever before.

How sad that almost everything you read about Ireland is so undimensional, though. If it's not about Guinesse, green fields, or terrorists, it's not in print.

After the Reagan/Bush era finally ended there seemed to be a glimmer of hope. Margaret Thatcher and her bosom buddies were finally out. Bill Clinton made some great campaign promises about helping solve the troubles in Ireland, but fell flat on delivering.

Recently Clinton, only after pressure from a number of political figures, relented and allowed Jerry Adams to come to the United States for peace talks. How can we solve our problems if we won't even talk? Then the English politicksters refused to sit down at a table and talk to Adams. Some peace process.

This is why, after years of failure of compromise, militant groups like the IRA evolve. Not surprisingly, the media is ever so quick to deem them as terrorists, while overlooking terrorist Protestant groups.

Last Halloween, two masked gunmen from a Protestant paramilitary group walked into a Roman Catholic pub, yelled "Trick or Treat!" and open fire. Seven people were killed and six were injured.

The killing goes on, and with each new generation of Northern Irelanders, a new generation of hate and prejudice is manufactured.

Until people recognize the problem and deal with it directly, the violence will not stop. How quickly we call others terrorists when it was the United States 200 years ago fighting for independence, also against Jolly Old England. History is a funny thing; were tarring and feathering "evil" Tories, and driving them off their land not "terrorist" acts?

In understanding the problem though, one must realize that the will to be free is the strongest drive in all people. This helps us understand (though not necessarily support) their resistance.

"It's far better to die like a man on your feet, than to live forever like some slave on your knees." — Black '47

So tonight when you're knocking back the Guinnese and Harp, remember there's more to ireland than green fields, shamrocks and pubs. And there is more to being Irish than putting on a "Kiss me, I'm Irish" pin once a year. Being irish is about strong will and determination. Have fun celebrating tonight, but don't forget to raise a glass to Bobby Sands and remember the green runs through an irishman's veins 365 days a year.

A million and one thanks

Spring break has finally arrived. We are pretty much half way through the semester — and after being here during intersession, I really need a break. I think staying here over January was one of the worst things i have ever done. Because now I really have no patience for anything or anyone.

But before I go back home to New Jersey, I would like to give "thanks" to some people that have annoyed me to no end so far this semester.

To all of the slow walkers on campus, 'thanks' for making me late to my class.

Geri Sahn

My first "thanks" go to the people who think they are so funny when they pull the fire alarms at 2 a.m. on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday night. I don't understand what is so funny about seeing hundreds of people piling out of the building in the middle of the night half–asleep. And what's so funny about doing this four times in one night? Grow up.

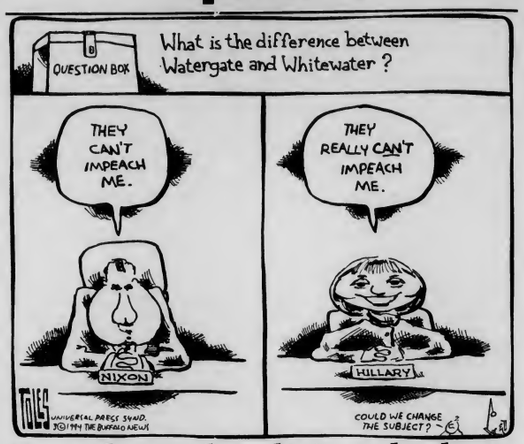
While we're on the topic on fire alarms, my next "thank you" goes to the firemen who came charging in my room to get me out of the building. Let me ask them this — is it legal to rip the covers off of me and push me around? I really wish I slept in the nude. That would have been a nice surprise for them.

To the person who steals my sports section of my Boston Globe almost every morning... you owe me five dollars. Oh, and "thanks," I love being able to accommodate you.

I think the most annoying thing about going to a party is the bathroom lines. And what is even more annoying is when a group of girls go in at the same time who take an hour to fix their hair. I don't want to give my thanks to them, only to one girl, but I have no idea who she is. I was about to enter the bathroom when she shoved her way in with me. So here it is, "thanks" for peeing with me. It was an experience I will always remember. College bonding...

My next thanks goes to all of those people on campus who criticize the Collegian and yet still pick it up everyday to read it. "Thanks."

To all of the slow walkers on campus, "thanks" for making me late to my class. There should be a speed limit on campus to get people's slow asses in gear. Pick up the speed. And "thanks" to those people who stop in major walkways and hold an hour–long conversation while people have to get past them. Move out of the way...please.



"Thanks" to all of the people who called in this semester and gave me tips down at the newsroom. I really appreciated those who tried to give me a story and then denied they ever called in when I tried to follow it up. I love news writing. I love tips.

Another thanks goes to the person who spit in the salad bar in the Dining Commons. I am not trying to gross anyone out — well i guess it is too late — but I don't understand what is so funny about spitting on the food in the salad bar. To the person who did that, "thanks." And may someone rub your food through mud and force it down your throat.

My final thanks goes to those who put down the basketball team and its fans. I constantly hear how the team should not get as much attention as it does. i also hear how the fans are hypocrites because they only like the team because it is good. Well, yeah, I like the team because they are good. The games are exciting. "Thanks," for being such a sour puss, and leaving more tickets for me to go to the games.

Well, those are my thanks for the first half of the semester. Keep your eye out for my special "thanks" at the end of the year. Maybe you will receive one.

Parade and politics clash

The celebration of St. Patrick's Day lies in years of Irish tradition. It is a day to be proud of a long–lasting heritage. Unfortunately, St. Patrick's Day has become Americanized. Businesses are using the day to sell their products. An offspring of this is the St. Patrick's Day Parade.

Justin Doyle

First a quick history lesson. The tradition of celebrating St. Patrick's Day begins in Ireland. St. Patrick was a Christian missionary to Ireland in the fifth century. He was the founder of many churches and schools in ireland and became a saint after his death. St. Patrick's Day is simply the feast of Patrick. It is a national holiday in Ireland, but is celebrated all over the world.

When the Irish came to America they brought their culture and their traditions. St. Patrick's Day is celebrated by the Irish as a holy day, a day to be proud of their heritage. In America it soon became a day to party. The parades exploit the Irish and use them to make money. The Irish are simply upholding tradition.

The battle for gay and bisexual rights has spilled over to the St. Patrick's Day Parade. It has taken the meaning away from the day and been an embarrassment to most of the Irish community. Now, it has caused the cancellation of a major parade.

St. Patrick's Day is not meant to be a forum of specific individuals to voice their opinions or preferences. I agree that homosexuals should be allowed to march in the St. Patrick's Day parades, unless they are going to carry around signs or banners announcing their sexual preferences.

The fight over the right of gays and bisexuals to march in parades on St. Patrick's Day has turned the entire idea of celebration into a travesty. Gay and bisexual relations among the irish community have never been accepted, to say the least. it is thought of as a sin.

But that doesn't mean members of Irish heritage should be discriminated against simply because of the sexual preferences. I just don't understand why they insist on announcing it. If I marched in a St. Patrick's Day Parade I wouldn't wear a sign that said I'm Irish and heterosexual.

The Gay and Lesbian Irish Bisexual group complained to the Supreme Court years ago that their inalienable rights were being infringed upon by parade sponsors who refused to let them march. The Supreme Court upheld an earlier decision made in a lower court that sided with the GLIB. In response, the sponsor of the South Boston St. Patrick's Day Parade, the Allied War Veterans Council pulled out. Now no one gets to march. End of story.

The GLIB continues to complain. Obviously they weren't satisfied with ruining Boston's St. Patrick's Day Parade. The organizers of the parade are canceling the parade to protest the Supreme Court's ruling. They are making a stand on their beliefs. To many Irish Americans it's simply a matter of tradition and culture.

"They are not going to shove something down our face that's not our traditional values," said John "Wacko" Hurley, president of the Allied War Veterans Council. it is a matter of principle and the Irish are not known for backing down.

The GLIB must realize that they are not the only ones marching in the St. Patrick's Day Parade. No one has said that gays and bisexuals couldn't march in the parade, they were simply asked not to make it into a political issue. It is St. Patrick's Day. A day to celebrate heritage, not choice. There are hundreds of homosexual marches all over the country, why do they have to make an issue out of this one?

The purpose of celebrating St. Patrick's Day has been lost in a battle of rights over marching in a parade. Certain individuals have denied Irish Americans of a traditional celebration by trying to use the parade to make public statements about a very sensitive issue. The focus of St. Patrick's Day needs to reexamined. It is a holy celebration of a person's heritage not a protest march.

Letters to the Editor

Fan would rather not sit this one out

To the editor:

This afternoon at about 2:30 p.m., the second–seeded UMass Minuteman basketball team will play their first of many games in this year's NCAA Tournament. Many people nationwide will be tuned in to their television sets to watch as UMass marches its way to the final rounds.

Fortunately, I was a holder of one of the 15 activity cards drawn in the lottery system for tickets. However, due to the incompetence of this institution, I am unable to get to Kansas where the most important game of the season, if not the history of this Minuteman ball club, will be played.

I am a big supporter of our basketball team. They are one of the reasons why I am proud to attend this University. I firmly believe that the fans play a commanding role in pumping up the team. Without the fans, the team might not have been able to stay undefeated in the William D. Mullins Center. Without their spirit and energy, where would UMass be? In the Top 10? Maybe.

Without us the only people yelling and screaming would be Coach Cal and the opposing teams' fans who were shipped up to UMass to give their team some backup. I remember how loud the Manhattan fans were in the Mullins Center earlier this season. In the past, UMass has also given their students the opportunity to travel by bus to the opposing school for games. So why haven't they done so for the most important games of the year?

Are these not the games where our team needs us most? I guess not, since no attempts were made by any office in the school to arrange such transportation for the chosen few. I was told by each secretary I talked to that I was "out of luck" and that I "should have known" that I couldn't have made travel plans. But I only had one hour between the time I was informed that I had been selected and the time the ticket office closed. How could i have planned an out–of– state trip in one hour?

After I bought my tickets I went to the U.S. Travel Agency at the Campus Center to see what my options were. They included the following: airplane for between $500 and $1000 round–trip coach, or a two–day trip by bus. Amtrak was sold–out to Wichita, and I'm too young to rent a car and drive the 1,400 miles to Kansas. I tried clicking my heels together three times, but that didn't work either.

I am a faithful UMass fan, but for the amount I pay to attend this school as an out–of–state fan, I expect a little work done on the part of the administration and athletic departments to make such opportunities become a reality. If I'd known beforehand that there were no travel arrangements and that it would cost so much, I would never have purchased the tickets. However, such information was not revealed and now I am at a $40 loss. I can't even sell the tickets since they were being left for us, the chosen few, in Wichita.

I will, no doubt, remain a loyal fan to the UMass athletic teams, but between the poor organization and tuition hikes, I sometimes wonder if I wouldn't be better off if I'd stayed in my home state and attended UConn.

Angry at prankster for abusing duck

To the editor:

This is a letter to the jerk out there who thought it was a joke to release a duck in the lobby of McNamara early Sunday morning two weekends ago. it was neither funny nor smart.

I came home late that night and entered my building to find a mallard in the entrance hall. It was scared and panting from the many times it had flown into the walls and ceiling to escape the unnatural setting it was placed in.

Did you even think about what you were doing? I hope your friends know that this show of cruelty is a reflection of the kind of person you are.

Every student on this campus and many people in town enjoy the ducks. They are a part of UMass and, though I and many others spend time feeding them, they are untamed creatures. They aren't toys and, if you hadn't noticed, they're living animals, too.

You are either screwed up or very stupid — and probably both — if you found any humor in the situation you placed the duck in, not to mention the people who had to recapture the duck and release it.

EYES ON THE PRIZE

YOUR GUIDE TO HOLLYWOOD'S BIGGEST (& SILLIEST) NIGHT

By Jon Lupo ❖ Collegian Staff

Every year about this time, critics seem to be whining about how stupid the Academy Awards are. And they're right. The Oscars have always been a popularity contest guided by a select few in the industry, most of whom, when it comes down to it, don't even see all the movies.

But to me, however, the Academy Awards, better than anything else, exemplify what Hollywood and popular American moviemaking are all about. They're hardly ever a barometer of any year's "best" (consider these embarrassing omissions: Alfred Hitchcock, Cary Grant, Martin Scorsese, Orson Welles, Greta Garbo, Charlie Chaplin — all of whom never won, just to name a few). Rather, the Academy Awards are a kind of currency, both in the career and financial sense.

The Oscar can mean big bucks, both at the box office and when it comes time to ink the contracts of stars and directors. But most importantly it means power. Respect too, though, it's an odd reward for an industry that delegates respect along with the money and power; and only begrudgingly when it comes to creativity and artistry. That's where all those Lifetime Achievement Awards and sentimental standing ovations come from. And in the end, it's the defining moment of pop culture silliness, an infuriating game of ego–stretching and, yes, politics so skewed it would make Bob Dole blush.

So, why then, do over a billion people watch, why do equal numbers of critics, cinephiles and star–watchers "care?" Because, if the Academy Awards represent all that's "bad" about Hollywood, they also represent what it can do and does best. The Oscars, and the telecast in particular, embody all the glitz and kitsch of movies in one star– studded, sentiment–drenched night, or as former host Johnny Carson once said: "Two hours of sparkling entertainment spread out over a four–hour show." And like most of the Academy voters, you don't even have to see the movies to participate.

The 1994 Academy Awards will be presented on Monday, March 21 at 9 p.m. on ABC.

WILL STEVEN SPIELBERG BE ON OSCAR'S LIST?

By JON LUPO ❖ Collegian Staff

Who's Going to Win: Schindler's List
Who Should Win: The Piano

BEST PICTURE

In the annals of Oscar lore, the Best Picture has always been the biggest point of contention, if the one award that usually invokes little or no suspense on Oscar night. After three hours plus of bad production numbers (Nell Carter belting out "A Friend Like Me" from Aladdin last year must've made Walt Disney roll over in his cryogenic grave) and silly acceptance speeches, the stars want to leave and get drunk at the post–Oscar bashes (if they aren't already), and viewers just want to go to bed.

And besides, everyone knows who's going to win, right?

While most years the award goes to the big, historical epic or other such obvious choice, every once in a while there's a pleasant surprise (1991 winner Silence of the Lambs) or downright shock (1969's Midnight Cowboy triumph).

But this is 1994. The year of Steven Spielberg. The year of Schindler's List.

After coming off directing the highest grossing money– maker of all time (Jurassic Park for those living incognito), Spielberg did what only the director of the highest grossing money–maker of all time could do: he helmed a three–hour plus black and white film about the Holocaust.

The power of Schindler's List is non–negotiable. To the nay–sayers who claim that people are reacting to the horror of the Holocaust and not Spielberg's film technique, take another look. The director re–creates the unblinking nightmare of the Holocaust as a vividly terrifying state of being — not only does Spielberg show you the Holocaust, but he forces you to become a part of it.

Liam Neeson and Ben Kingsley in Schindler's List.

Holly Hunter and Harvey Keitel in The Piano.

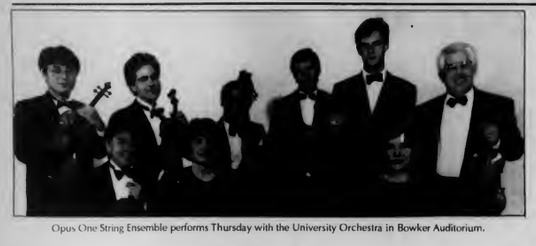
Schindler's List is not perfect, however. Liam Neeson's hokey speech at the end (where an enigmatic Neeson is reduced to crocodile tears) is exactly what Spielberg seems to be resisting: the diluting of Schindler to typical (and fraudulent) Hollywood movie hero.

The Piano, on the other hand, is as near–perfect filmmaking as one could hope for. Written and directed with startling originality by Jane Campion, The Piano merges Holly Hunter's fiercely beautiful performance with a complex love triangle and some of the most arresting imagery the screen has seen in a long time.

Some have labeled the film misogynistic, but that reading its too facile; those people are looking at the movie instead of in it. The Piano's strength is that none of its questions are obvious or simple, none of its answers linear.



There's something exciting, then, in having a nomination roster with two films that are bound to endure, no matter what the awards. But while the power of List is unmistakable (and certainly Oscar–worthy), I'm quietly hoping for a Piano upset. Schindler's List and The Piano may be equal in their jaw–dropping image–making, but The Piano invokes an astounding, intrinsic understanding of its characters. This makes List's sometimes cloudy personas (save Ralph Finnes' stunning work) seem almost soulless in comparison. And for all of List's visceral vividness, there's more going on in The Piano, and Campion's film delves deeper than List even dares.

Let's not forget, though, that there are three other nominees: Merchant–Ivory's affecting ode to repression and regret, The Remains of the Day, Jim Sheridan's cathartic In the Name of the Father and Harrison Ford's success in the breathlessly entertaining The Fugitive.

But it doesn't really matter. To swipe a growing cliche, Spielberg will still be number one on Oscar's list Monday evening.

Tom Hanks may win Oscar nod, yet Hopkins' butler was superior

By ED HUMPHRIES
Collegian Staff

Who's Going to Win: Tom Hanks, Philadelphia
Who Should Win: Anthony Hopkins, The Remains of the Day

In a lesser year this could have been the year of Pacino. Or Ford. Or yes, even Costner.

But in a year saturated with stunning performances in films as diverse as The Remains of the Day and Schindler's List, the choice for nominees becomes just a little bit tougher.

Come Oscar night, Tom Hanks will be a very happy man, having copped the Best Actor Oscar for Philadelphia.

Make no mistake, Hanks is very good in the film. He's probably one of the most successful and under–appreciated character actors working in Hollywood. As Philly attorney Andy Beckett, he conveys the loss and desperation of a man clinging to the faulty ladder of AIDS with a graphic uneasiness.

BEST ACTOR

COURTESY KEN REGAN

Tom Hanks is a lucky bet for his role in Philadelphia.

In one scene, after having his discrimination suit balked by yet another lawyer, Hanks stands among a large crowd though his tears depict him as alone. More importantly he coaxes tears from the most jaded of cynics. Not a bad feat. But it's Anthony Hopkins who deserves the Oscar for his dazzling performance in The Remains of the Day.

In the same year, Hopkins has played two characters that can be perceived as edges of the same sword, but a closer look reveals his C.S. Lewis in Shadowlands and Stevens in Remains to be lodged on a dual–edged sword.

Ultimately it's Stevens that ought to earn Hopkins his prize. The pain his character feels holds thunderous clouds over Hopkins' visage, keeping his brow in constant restraint. Hopkins' pulls the viewer into his internal pain, and his blind sight to beckoning love is unbearably wrenching. His heartbreak carries volumes.

It's too bad that Remains didn't play up some social issue, for Hopkins would have truly had a lock on the trophy.

As for the other nominees, each is very good and there are probably a half dozen other actors who deserve recognition, but as they say, "there can only be one."

Ike Turner in What's Love Got to Do With It is a role that could have easily sunk into caricature in lesser hands. Laurence Fishburne rejects any cartoon aspirations, injecting Turner with a frightening charisma that defines his rampaging monstrosity.

In In The Name of the Father, Daniel Day–Lewis' Gerry Conlon begins the film as a free–spirited hippie Irishman falsely accused of planting IRA bombings. The innocence and fragility of Conlon is convincingly shattered by Day– Lewis when subject to savage police interrogations and finally prison life.

With the mysterious Oskar Schindler he plays in Schindler's List, Liam Neeson is finally getting his well–deserved attention. The great strength in Neeson's performance is that he never allows the viewer to see his true colors, and he gives the sense that his womanizing Schindler, although a kind person, often has just "one thing on his mind." Although the quasi–tearjerker finale is a coda that compromises Neeson's shadowy intrigue, the problem is lodged in the script, not the actor.

So the Oscar will probably go to Hanks and The Academy will give themselves another pat on the back. Still, there is one nagging notion. Shouldn't an award for excellence in film be just that, and not for social awareness? Well, the Academy aims to please — and right now their blind eyes are very happy.

Hunter an Oscar shoo-in

Her fierce 'Piano' portrayl was one of year's finest

By ED HUMPHRIES
Collegian Staff

Who's Going to Win: Holly Hunter, The Piano
Who Should Win: Holly Hunter, The Piano

Alas, a true Year of the Woman. A glance at the list of nominees For Best Actress shows that this is a year of female roles that were actual, human characters and not stereotypes or somebody's wife or girlfriend. Nowhere in this year's bunch are those character relegated to fast– stalking, gun–toting hussies or Big Bad Mommas Part VIII. And somewhere, alone in the dark, the usual Academy consolation prize for actresses grows dusty — for this is a year in which Hollywood allowed female roles to shine, albeit much belatedly.

Arguably the best performance of the year is Holly Hunter for her work in Director Jane Campion's The Piano. Here Hunter drops her trademark feistiness for a very demanding role that requires her to run a gambit of emotions without ever speaking a word. There's an unspoken rule that disabilities win in Hollywood, but that rule need not apply here. Hunter's performance is just the best there is in a field of blossomed portrayals.

Her stark beauty rivals that of Campion's breathtaking visuals; although this is no beauty contest. Hunter wins hands down because she brings to the role the fierce resolve her restrained character holds, blazing within. The love of that solitary piano, first seen adrift in the New Zealand shore–bound mists, carries forth through Hunter's subtle yet biting glances. Her control of sign language shouts feelings which echo convincingly. Most importantly, she crafts a character so multi–faceted, so full of emotions and more importantly, so life–like, it's one you remember for a lifetime.

BEST ACTRESS

Quite an accomplishment when matched against her strong contenders.

In Six Degrees of Separation, Stockard Channing reveals her Ouisa Kitteridge as a woman whose rich surroundings deny her inner feelings, and it isn't until those surrounding are shattered by an illicit poseur (Will Smith) that her inner illusions come tumbling down. Ouisa's faith has been minutely stripped and Channing makes the viewer feel the loss equally, never stepping to pathos.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Emma Thompson will cross her fingers, hoping for Oscar to throw her an approving glance.

Pathos is a feeling Angela Bassett would never succumb to own. As the tormented Tina Turner in What's Love Got to Do With It, she fights the demonic, soul–stripping Ike Turner (Laurence Fishburne) with an intense bravado that shuns any inclination of pity from the audience. The real Turners couldn't have done it better.

Emma Thompson is certifiably the Oscar darling. In The Remains of the Day, Thompson's Miss Kenton is ravished by a secret love that is ill–fated in its fruition, unable to pierce the iron demeanor of Anthony Hopkins' butler, Stevens. The tragic yearnings felt by Thompson are something she does well, her love is that much more poignant.

In Shadowlands, Debra Winger charms with a New Ya–wk sensibility that rises above her faulty accent. Winger paints Yankee poet Joy Gresham as tough–talking but soft–hearted, and the burning desire she feels for Lewis' intellect and personality makes its own impression on the screen.

Ultimately, though, it's The Piano's Ada that won't soon be forgotten.

Neither will Hunter, come Oscar night.

What is a Textbook Buyback?

Three times during each semester the Textbook Annex brings in a wholesaler to buy textbooks from students. Wholesalers are in the business of selling used books to colleges and universities across the country. Therefore, in determining how much they will pay a student for a book they must consider the demand for that book as well as the shipping and handling costs involved in processing and reselling the book. This is why prices vary and indeed change frequently. Generally only current editions have value.

The best time to sell books is at the end of the semester. At that time the Annex will pay 50% of the new price for a book if we have an order for that book for the following semester and we need to purchase copies. If we do not, the wholesaler may make you an offer.

If you have questions please ask the people doing the buyback or the Annex staff. They will be more than happy to answer your questions and give you any tips that may be applicable to your situation.

*A Picture ID is Required for all Buyback Transactions.

Jones good bet for Oscar

But 'List' villain Ralph Finnes is more deserving

By DANIEL PELLEGRINI
Collegian Correspondent

Who's Going to Win: Tommy Lee Jones, The Fugitive
Who Should Win: Ralph Finnes, Schindler's List

BEST SUPPORTING ACTOR

Shining particularly bright in this tour–de–force year for the Academy Awards is the category of Best Supporting Actor. Providing the sparkle for 1993, are primarily new faces to Oscar's cast, with the exception of a couple long– timers whose anti–star personae make it easy to plant all five nominees on ground level and measure them on pure talent.

The bet for first place should be on Tommy Lee Jones, who'll probably grab the statue for The Fugitive. He's got the buzz around him, he's been going for a while without recently being noticed, and he's become one of Hollywood's most loveable movie stars.

Let's not forget Jones in JFK and his subsequent loss to Jack Palance in the same category two years ago, because it's probably still lingering in the voter's minds. Also don't discard his presence in Heaven and Earth — Jones got the claim while Oliver Stone's film got the modest O.K.

However, if the world were without politics, Schindler's List's Ralph Finnes would top the honors as the purse–lipped horrific Nazi officer. He's virtually flawless as an unconditional killer, and he did put on a few pounds for the role (remember the Academy likes unnatural wight, i.e., Robert DeNiro in Raging Bull).

But his portrayal of pure evil might not want to be praised by the Academy — in other words, he may have been too good. Still, don't discard the possibility of a Schindler's sweep.

ASSOCIATED PRESS
John Malkovich of In The Line Of Fire

Other nominees include newcomer Leonardo DiCaprio. With his 1993 role opposite Robert DeNiro in This Boy's Life, DiCaprio has become an up–and–coming powerhouse. He stole What's Eating Gilbert Grape from Johnny Depp, with a gutsy, nothing–to–lose performance as Depp's retarded younger brother.

The Academy is favorable to actors playing mentally challenged characters (RainMan), but the nomination is just to show that this kid's a serious new talent. Could pull off a Marisa Tomei out–of–nowhere win, though.

The nomination for John Malkovich from In the Line of Fire is deserved and no surprise, considering a less–than– great performance from him is rare. In Fire, Malkovich scored as the eerie, soft–spoken sociopath who torments Clint Eastwood's haunted secret service agent. But despite Malkovich's appealingly strange performance, he lacks the likability factor the Academy craves, and will go home empty handed on Oscar night.

In the fifth–wheel, David Paymer/Michael Lerner slot is Pete Postlethwaite, whose genuinely righteous English accent is impressive across Daniel Day–Lewis in In the Name of the Father. He's good, but like Paymer and Lerner, not good enough to win the Oscar.

Winona Ryder & Rosie Perez are a close finish in Oscar race

By DANIEL PELLEGRINI
Collegian Correspondent
and JON LUPO
Collegian Staff

Who's Going to Win: Rosie Perez, Fearless or Winona Ryder, The Age of Innocence
Who Should Win: Winona Ryder, The Age of Innocence

BEST SUPPORTING ACTRESS

An exciting and diverse five. Not only are the five characters of these five nominees completely different from each other, but the women behind them are breaking new ground with their characters. The range for this year's Best Supporting Actress category is wide and strong, and the battle of the ballots comes close to a dead–even tie.

It's neck and neck, but the edge goes to Winona Ryder, who'll probably be making an acceptance speech for coming between Daniel Day–Lewis and Michelle Pfeiffer in The Age of Innocence. Ryder gracefully switches her generation X attitude for some 19th century courtesy (not to mention making everyone forget about her creaky accent and acting in Bram Stoker's Dracula). Her role as the outwardly naive, but intrinsically cunning, May Welland is more than a great performance; it's a revelation and a coming of age for one of America's best ingenues.

Inches behind is Rosie Perez for her hear–wrenching work as a woman who not only loses her baby in a plane crash but her faith as well, in the little–seen Fearless. The Academy loves breakthrough performances, and Perez defines that. Coupled with a distinct buzz behind her, this Do the

Spielberg set for glory

Award long overdue for expansive, successful career

By JON LUPO
Collegian Staff

Who's Going to Win: Steven Spielberg, Schindler's List.
Who Should Win: Steven Spielberg, Schindler's List.

BEST DIRECTOR

It is interesting to note the curious lack of director Martin Scorsese, or his extraordinary film, The Age of Innocence, in this year's nomination roster. Scorsese has never won a Best Director Oscar, even for two of his greatest films (1980's Raging Bull lost out to Robert Redford's Ordinary People; 1990's Goodfellas lost out to Kevin Costner's Dances With Wolves).

It may be hard to believe that one of America's greatest directors has been left out of Oscar. Other stunning directors, like Stanley Kubrick, Charlie Chaplin, Alfred Hitchcock and yes, Steven Spielberg, have never won. With this pedigree, not winning seems like a more esteemed award.

So when Spielberg waltzes up to the stage to accept for Schindler's List; it's doubly sweet. Not only will Spielberg be awarded for his stellar career — the fact that he's the most famous and successful director in film history — but also for his best work, the monumental Schindler's List.

ASSOCIATED PRESS
Director Steven Spielberg is nominated for his spectacular work in Schindler's List.

I was critical of List in the Best Picture category and I still feel that Jane Campion goes deeper in The Piano than Spielberg does in List, but in the end, it's Spielberg who deserves the award. Not only for the film, but for Spielberg, who threw away his proven, wildly successful technique, and started all over. In a way, it's as if Spielberg is directing a movie for the first time.

What's most noticeable in List is what isn't there; no gorgeous crane shots, no stunning dolly shots, no easy moralizing in simple codes — characteristics that have become Spielberg's well–earned trademarks. In List, however, Spielberg captures the Holocaust with the swift immediacy of combat photography. Spielberg utilizes the hand–held camera not as a crutch or a gimmick — but like the black and white cinematography, it's essential to the power, the breadth, and the language of the film.

Spielberg presents the Holocaust not as a distant nightmare but an all–too plausible atrocity of epic proportions. While color captures "real–life," Spielberg was right to do film in the starkness of black and white. The contrasts inherent in the two extremes of color peek through the cracks, exposing a deeper sense of reality; something that color tones can't do.

An upset by Jane Campion's ethereal triumph, The Piano, would be wonderful as well; unlike other woman directors, like Penny Marshall or Barbra Striesand, Campion is a true film artist. Let's hope that her nomination is not a fluke, and that she'll have other opportunities.

James Ivory (The Remains of the Day) has been nominated twice before, and will probably be nominated again. Ivory's smooth professionalism will one day be rewarded, though he's bound to be lost in the Schindler's hoopla.

Jim Sheridan for his IRA drama In the Name of the Father, is the wild card here. The film, while done well, lacks the momentum of the other nominees and will no doubt suffer the same fate as Ivory.

You can forget final nominee Robert Altman. His Short Cuts was brilliant, so you know the Academy will snub him.

And even if, by some bizarre chain of events, Spielberg is denied once again (The Color Purple shut–out is a prime example of this), Spielberg will still be in good company. His name, his work and specifically Schindler's List will outlive any Oscar.

ASSOCIATED PRESS
Jane Campion, shown here at the Cannes Film Festival last year, is the second woman ever nominated for Best Director.

Sardonic comedy, dark pathos rule in erratic, downbeat Naked

THE REEL WORLD
by Jon Lupo

In the opening frames of Mike Leigh's blistering but erratic Naked, our "hero," Johnny (David Thewlis), has forced sex with a woman in a Manchester, England alley. After the woman vows revenge, Johnny grabs his black duffel bag, steals a car, and heads off to London.

It's clear then, that Leigh's film will not travel the same paths as his previous effort, Life Is Sweet. Rather, Naked does its best to paint its central theme in broad strokes: it's the end of the world as we know it (and no one feels fine).

It's Johnny we travel with, as he spends a hellish weekend drifting from woman to woman, and half–heartedly tries to rekindle a romance with his old girlfriend Louise (Lesley Sharp), while evading on Louise's clueless roommate Sophie. Like many of the women in the film, Sophie is taken by Johnny's scraggly, self–conscious charm and offers herself, literally, to the perennial user in him, as if making a deal with the devil.

Interspersed with this pathetic "love" triangle is Johnny's various adventures on the London streets, whether it be a lonely night watchman, a loud Scottish couple who's domestic arguments become unintelligible rage, or a drunk woman who Johnny refuses to sleep with because she looks too much like his mother.

We are also subject to Johnny's ramblings, most, if not all, have to do with his feeling that the end of the world is here. Some of his insights are pointed (On the silence of the human body: "The most complex mechanism in the universe, but it still doesn't make any noise. What's going on in here?"), but most lean toward the ponderous, and after a stream of them, the languidly boorish. Upon entering a shiny new office building, Johnny remarks, "So what goes on in this post–modern gas chamber?" Then there's his reply to a query if he's ever seen a dead body. "Only my own." Uh–huh.

Mike Leigh's apocalyptic, "reality bites" film works better on paper; on film the end–of–civilization discourse grows tiresome quickly. Equally annoying is that all the characters are stripped–down precocious, so aware of their own broad eccentricities that Leigh leaves no room for irony. By dealing in such absolutes, he talks his way into a murky corner.

As mouthpieces for Leigh's rhetoric, the actors get plenty of room to work in roles that allow them to portray grimy desperation. Any actor will tell you these kind of roles are the best, because their performances are a given tour–de– force. David Thewlis is mostly excellent; it's hard to distinguish because his character is so aggravating. He's more true though, when he drops his character's pseudo– intellectual/Casanova aura (and the crutch of Leigh's too– clever one–liners). His scenes with Louise (the terrific Sharp) are especially smart; alternating sadness with sardonic comedy.

The rest of the cast seems lost in Leigh's overpowering landscape, and yet that may be precisely the point. These characters have no families, or at least none to speak of. They're all searching for links in a world of rampant loneliness, a culture where polarization is a way of life.

Naked has been viewed as brilliantly nihilistic, but I see it more as relentlessly downbeat. Leigh may feel that by draining hope, he's not pulling any punches. But it seems like a calculation — the dark pathos feels like a gimmick, unearned. In the end, Leigh may think he strips his characters naked, but to me, they have never seemed more convoluted. B– (Pleasant St. Theater)

Adorable Elmo steals the show as Sesame appears at Mullins

By GERI SAHN
Collegian Staff

Sesame Street is still as popular as it was when I was a child over 15 years ago.

A little over 1,000 kids piled into the William D. Mullins Center to see their favorite puppets come alive in the production "Sesame Street Live" on Wednesday evening.

The show was full of singing and dancing by well–known characters such as Big Bird, Ernie, Bert, the Count, the Cookie Monster, Guy Smiley, Grover, Oscar the Grouch and Elmo.

The crowd went nuts when they saw Elmo.

All of the characters sang hip–hop songs which kept the crowd going and got the kids to boogie down. There were even songs that I remembered. "Who are the people in your neighborhood," "C is for Cookie" and of course, the Alphabet song, which seemed to be the most popular and well known among the crowd.

The characters were also great dancers and extremely enthusiastic. They got everybody to participate in the show and came out into the audience frequently to shake the kids hands. They even brought a person on stage to dance along with them. (I was very upset I didn't get picked.)

The parents seemed to enjoy themselves just as much, if not more, than the children. Even before the show, the parent sitting next to me said, "I am soooo excited!"

The set and scenery of the stage were very colorful and "fun." Everything was bright and exciting. The kids seemed to enjoy the special black–light effects. There were very creative accessories used throughout the play. Elmo and Cookie Monster had great outfits when they did a rap dance. Overall, the best dancer was the Cookie Monster. He really busted some moves. Ernie was the best singer. And of course, the cutest goes to Mr. Elmo. Elmo, by far, was the best actor throughout the entire play. He didn't have a main part, but his presence was needed.

I would definitely say the show was a success. Both the parents and the kids enjoyed themselves. By the end of the show, everyone was singing and clapping, except for the little boy in the second row who was crying so hard his mother had to take him out of the room.

At the end of the show, the characters came out into the audience. It was quite a scene, seeing the hundreds of little kids (and me) running up to Elmo to shake his hand. But unlike many of the children, I was successful.

Once again Sesame Street Productions have put on a show that is both educational and entertaining. People of all ages should go see it, not just children.

Native American Art From New England Collections
Smith College Museum of Art
March 10 – May 29, 1994

Upon walking onto the second level of the Smith College Museum of Art, you come across works such as hand woven baskets and hats. Displayed near them are ceramic jars, a house model made of red clay with white paint, and a Volkswagen Bug.

One might ask why such objects are being displayed in a museum, only to find out that the Smith College Museum of Art is presently featuring works in its latest exhibit, "Native American Art from New England Collections."

The exhibition and an accompanying course named "Native American Art and Architecture" was made possible by loans received by museums, alumni and people of the Smith College Art Department. In addition, a grant from the Mellon Foundation helped fund the exhibition.

Smith College Professor Christopher Couch coordinated and organized the exhibition by choosing the pieces to be featured.

The exhibition is arranged in chronological order, and early pieces are dated as far back as 700 B.C.–700 A.D. The labels were written by students enrolled in the accompanying course.

Several of the pieces of art originally served a useful purpose in their native cultures. Some of these pieces include a hand–beaded saddle blanket, moccasins, shoulder bag and vests. Also featured are a rattle carved out of wood, hand woven blankets and quillwork boxes. The quillwork boxes are made out of porcupine quills, birchbark, spruce root and birch wood.

Other, more traditional works of art are also included, such as paintings, sketches, sculptures and stone–cut prints of Native Americans involved in activities such as hunting and dancing.

This is a unique exhibition in that there are not only paintings, sculptures, sketches, and stone–cut prints on display; but clothing, containers and other every day items as well. They can be considered art because they are not only decorative, but because it is evident that a lot of time was put into creating the detailed pieces.

After viewing the exhibit, one cannot help but appreciate and admire the talent of each artist featured in the museum. If, however, the Native American Art from New England exhibit does not interest you, i suggest going to the Smith College Museum of Art to see their ongoing display of works by such artists as Monet, Degas, Renoir and Picasso.

The Smith College of Art is free of admission and is open Tuesday–Sunday from noon to 4 p.m. and Thursday noon to 8 p.m. For additional information call 585–2760.

Jazz prodigy visits NoHo

By JORMA KANSANEN
Collegian Staff

This Friday night at the Iron Horse in Northampton, Christian McBride will be performing his personalized brand of traditional jazz. With the recent commercial success of rap groups that use jazz as their base, such as Us3 and Digable Planets, the market has opened up where for decades it has been kept in smoky, basement bars. But do not be scared away by the idea that jazz is just for musicians.

"I could consider my style as straight forward jazz, with some stretching of the boundaries," explains McBride, "But within limits. The last thing I want to do is lose my audience. Anybody can enjoy it."

Having received private study in classical jazz, McBride has played in the professional ranks since the tender age of nine. He has also had opportunities to play out with the likes of Wynton Marsalis, Jimmy Heath, and Walter Davis, Jr.. A lot of experience, in a free–form business in which it is needed, has been packed into his 21–year–old body.

"I have played in every style from big bands to small groups," said McBride. "It is a pleasure to get out and have this chance to perform before an audience."

Working on his debut CD for a projected release in October, McBride said that he has really no thought of a more widespread tour until the end of this year. Accompanied by pianist Ed Simon and drummer Louis Nash, you have a chance before spring break to see a possible rising star in the jazz business, right here in our own area. Remember, this is where you heard it first.

There are two performances of the Christian McBride show this Friday night at the Iron Horse, in friendly neighborhood NoHo. Shows will begin at 7 and 10 p.m., respectively, with tickets going for $8.50 in advance, $10.50 the night of the show.

Italian club spices up campus

By CHRISTINA ORWICZ
Collegian Staff

If you have any classes in Herter Hall, you've probably noticed those catchy signs in Italian which you can easily decipher — even without the handy pocket dictionary. Steaming coffee and pictures of various tempting types of pastries hit the eye and go straight to the stomach–response system in the brain. It's the Italian Club, and they want to feed you.

This tightly–knit group of approximately 16 members run a deliciously appealing snack table on the third floor of Herter, each Friday morning from 8 a.m. to 12 p.m., where homemade goodies and coffee are sold for the most reasonable prices on campus.

Benjamin Silver, an Italian and pre–veterinary major, and president of the club since fall of '91, says this is the club's only source of revenue, as they are not yet a registered student organization. Silver, like other members of the club, hopes to receive future funding from UNiCO, an Italian– American organization which aids projects such as the club.

As the Italian department is one of the smallest at the University, and since budget cuts have been the worst in the Arts and Humanities in the past few years, financial resources are very limited. Feeling that the club is a place where students of Italian, native Italians, and Italian– Americans, come together in order to share experiences and socialize, Silver would like to have resources in order to establish a subscription to an Italian newspaper for the use of students.

The revenues of the club go to an end–of–the–semester semi–formal dinner at Carmelina's which is attended by members as well as faculty. There are other small parties thrown during the semester also. With added funding, however, members hope that they will be able to sponsor campus–wide events such as film screenings.

"A lot of people don't know there is an Italian club," said Silver. As a goal for the club, Silver hopes to pick up membership of people with more ideas. He added that a strong foundation of members in the club will give publicity to the department as well as the club itself. This, in turn, will give the members a chance to focus more on activities for the group as a whole.

So, if this is news to you, or just a reminder, go pay the Italian club a visit Friday morning at the third floor lobby in Herter. You can give your Italian a whirl with some of the members, and listen to some of the latest music from the motherland itself.

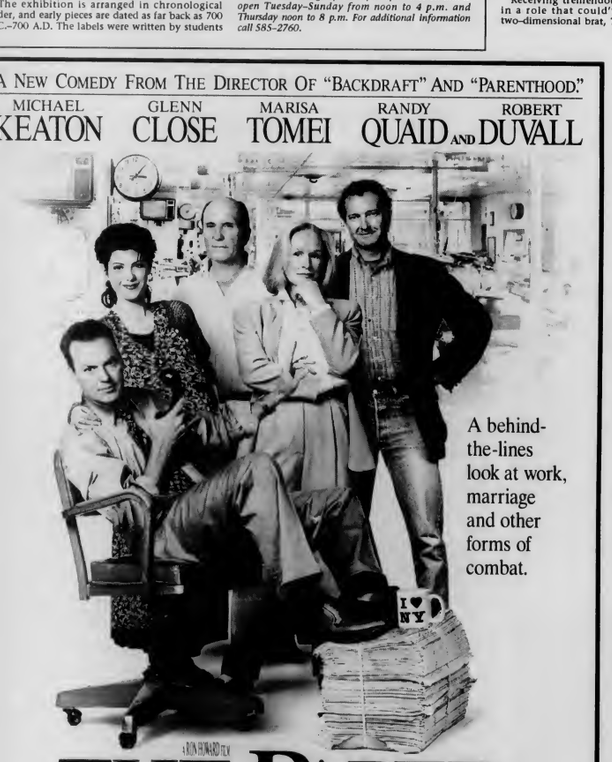
Right Thing yet just may cop the top prize.



Receiving tremendous acclaim in a role that could've been a two–dimensional brat, The Piano's Anna Paquin is a child actress whose maturity stretches beyond her 10 years. Caught in the middle of a decidedly adult love triangle, Paquin never gets lost in the character, and in the end, her performance is the embodiment of a supporting performance.

As one of two actresses who are nominated in both lead and supporting performances, Holly Hunter's role as the sassy secretary in The Firm isn't much of a stretch for an performer who could do this white–trash routine (Raising Arizona, The Positively True Adventures of the Alleged Texas Cheerleader Murdering Mom) in her sleep. And considering her current status in the Best Actress race (she's got it in the bag), Hunter shouldn't get it — but she's not going home empty–handed, either.

The other double nominee, In the Name of the Father's Emma Thompson, is not without any of her stellar talents as an underdog lawyer defending Daniel Day–Lewis. But last year's Best Actress win (for Howards End) and precious little Father screen time, make Thompson an unlikely winner.

Your Horoscope

By Jeane Dixon

ARIES (March 21–April 19): Stand up for your beliefs, even if they are unpopular. You can improve the bottom line by taking a few business trips. Higher–ups will be impressed!

TAURUS (April 20–May 20): A good day to recharge your batteries and regain your momentum. Transform anger into creative or artistic energy. When buying home furnishings, purchase what you like — not what you think will impress others.

GEMINI (May 21–June 20): Be more incisive on the money front. Enhanced verbal skills can vault you to prominence in the communications field. Decisive action will end confusion regarding a romantic relationship.

CANCER (June 21–July 22): Your finances require the help of experts. Be willing to pay for the best. Accept an old friend's advice on some personal matters, but listen to your heart where romance is concerned.

LEO (July 23–Aug. 22): This is another day when it is better to add to your holdings than to subtract from them. Big financial risks mean big losses now. Romance is a different story!

VIRGO (Aug. 23–Sept. 22): Your nurturing touch is the magic that will get a project restarted or completed. Tonight, offer someone a strong shoulder to lean on. A loved one needs support, not lectures.

LIBRA (Sept. 23–Oct. 22): Take the initiative in matters concerning romance, children and vacations plans. Only safe financial investments should be considered. An unwelcome development could have its bright side.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23–Nov. 21): Do not allow envy to cloud your vision. Work can be wonderful therapy, especially if you have personal worries on your mind. Close friends may be the only ones who can cheer you up.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22–Dec. 21): Talk candidly with your partner; honesty is crucial for reaching an understanding. Rely on traditional business methods to preserve recent gains.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22–Jan. 19): Making certain concessions will bring new peace of mind. A romantic interlude may brighten your day. Your fears regarding a member of the opposite sex are unfounded.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20–Feb. 18): Working overtime or taking a second job could be the answer to a cash shortage. Seek family members' cooperation in curtailing excess spending. Children need your full attention at times; give it lovingly.

PISCES (Feb. 19–March 20): Friends share their good news with you. Be happy for them! Recognition is finally yours for something you began years ago. A romantic gesture sends your spirits soaring.

Quote of the Day

"It's real important to remember that we make films for artistic reasons and not to win a little gold statue."

Gay debate ends Boston parade

By DANIEL BEEGAN
Associated Press

BOSTON — Sponsors canceled this year's St. Patrick's Day parade because a U.S. Supreme Court justice cleared the way Wednesday for a gay group to participate.

Without comment, Justice David H. Souter denied an emergency request for intervention from the South Boston Allied War Veterans Council, the parade's sponsor.

"This year's parade, with my client's traditional values, has been utterly destroyed," said Chester Darling, the group's attorney.

Darling said he would appeal Souter's decision to the full U.S. Supreme Court, but the appeal will be too late to save Sunday's parade. The city will sponsor the parade next year and gay groups will be allowed to participate.

"It is gratifying to know bigotry is against the law in this country," said David O'Connor, spokesman for the Gay, Lesbian Irish Bisexual Group. "The sooner the veterans realize that, the sooner we can have a parade we can all enjoy."

O'Connor said Boston's controversy doesn't exist in Ireland, where homosexuals are marching with little complaint or fanfare in Dublin and Cork. Ireland legalized homosexual acts this year, he said.

Darling argued that the veterans group had a First Amendment right to decide who was to march in the 90–year–old parade, but the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court ruled that parades are public events covered by a state law barring discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation.

The veterans argued to Souter that the state court "trivialized and ridiculed the veterans' claim of a constitutional right of free speech." Souter handles emergency matters from Massachusetts for the high court.

standout since Dwight Evans, and he's their first acquisition forced to change his accustomed uniform number, from 1 to 2. (The Red Sox recently retired 1 in honor of Bobby Doerr, their Hall of Fame second baseman from the Ted Williams Era. To whom it may concern, and I'm not sure who that would be, he's inherited my old number, likely a dubious distinction.)

Clemens. The name ought to evoke more adulation than that of any starting pitcher whose career began in the last decade. Prior to 1993, baseball's Rocket (we have ismail in football and Bure in hockey, so I felt I should clarify) was bordering on immortality; Koufax, Seaver, Palmer, and Ford could be mentioned in the same breath.

Clemens hasn't dipped too far; he's still compared to Young. Anthony and Matt, that is. But national pastime pundits are quick to inform us that many aces who peaked in their late 20s sunk on turning 30, and this pseudo–pundit will do the same. This is the same man we're talking about. He hasn't forgotten how to pitch, he's not unhealthy, he will be back. And if he wins 20, the Sox can win 90.

"Nicholls State? Where is Nicholls State?" asked Roe jokingly.

The glaring differences between the two teams is exposure and competition; while Massachusetts has played against the likes of North Carolina, Kansas, Kentucky, and Cincinnati, and has appeared on nation television regularly, the Bobcats are an obscure team from the Southiand Conference, which is just happy to be in the tournament.

Calipari said that Southwest Texas State's obscurity really hasn't bothered the preparation of his team.

"The biggest thing for me is to worry about my team. If i get my team to do what they are capable of doing, and that's not good enough, then we go home, we hug, we cry, and we get on the plane," said Calipari.

"The scouting reports that my players get are from my lips. They get no papers about the other team. I don't want them worrying about the other team, ever. You'll never see us give a player a 30–page scouting report."

Despite the reputation and high rank of Massachusetts, Wooldridge and the players said they are not intimidated.

"We don't want to come in intimidated, we don't want to come in feeling as if we can't compete in this game. We think our style of play fits into playing well in this game," said Wooldridge.

"We don't get intimidated at all," said guard Russell Ponds. "We fear no one; we're a good ball team, they're a good ball team. It's just two teams going out and battling for something that each team wants.

Minutemen face Bobcats in first round NCAA game

By ARTHUR STAPLETON Jr.
Collegian Staff

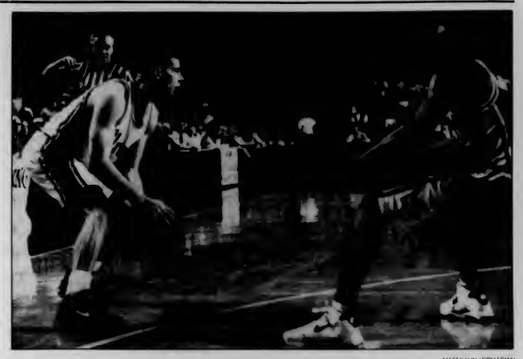
Witchita, KANSAS — The more things change, the more they stay the same for the Massachusetts men's basketball team in the NCAA tournament.

Late Tuesday afternoon, before arriving here to prepare for today's first round game with Southwest Texas State, the Minutemen, toting the second seed in the Midwest region, awaited a connecting flight to Wichita in Chicago's O'Hare Airport. A meaningless 45-minute lay-over turned ironic as Massachusetts crossed paths with the Syracuse Orangemen, the No. 4 seed in the West region, who were on their way to Ogden, Utah.

The last time the two teams met was in the 1992 Tournament, a Massachusetts 77–71 overtime victory which propelled the Minutemen not only into the Sweet Sixteen but the national spotlight as well. It may or may not be a coincidence that just two years later, Massachusetts, primed for its best NCAA tourney run ever, sees Syracuse again; not on the basketball court, though, but near Gate C.

Syracuse stars Adrian Autry and Lawrence Moten lounged around, joking and talking basketball with Massachusetts' Lou Roe and Donta Bright. The coaches, John Calipari and Jim Boeheim, wished each other luck on their separate roads to the Final Four in Charlotte, N.C., the only site the two squads could possibly meet again.

Today's contest (2:50 p.m. Est.) between No. 2 Massachusetts (27–6) and No 15 Southwest Texas St. (25–6) is a match-up of two teams with a similar style of play. According to both coaches, the two squads both live off the offensive glass and play very hard defensively, creating opportunities on the other end.



"Their basketball team is very similar, if you would, to our basketball team. They're bigger, obviously, and their competition, perhaps, is better that what we've faced, but, the styles are the same," said Southwest Texas St. coach Jim Wooldridge.

Southwest Texas State leading scorer Lynwood Wade will be inside the paint against a four-man Massachusetts frontline that towers over him. Wade, who averages 18.6 points per game and 8.5 rebounds per game, is a 6-foot 4 post player; the Minutemen frontcourt sports Roe (6–foot–7) freshman Marcus Camby (6–foot–11), sophomore Donta Bright (6-foot–6), and sophomore Dana Dingle (6–foot–6).

Wade says he is confident in facing the height of Massachusetts.

"I've played in the post all year, and we've had bigger match-ups," Wade said. "We played Nicholls State, and they have 6–foot–10 guys; I matched up against them. Height is not an advantage; it's what's inside that counts."

Snow slows Gorillas' preparation for season

By MATT VAUTOUR
Collegian Sports

In the history of NCAA lacrosse, only two teams (Maryland and Johns Hopkins) have higher winning percentages than the University of Massachusetts. As the team prepares to enter the 1994 season, that winning tradition still surrounds the Gorillas.

"This is a top program. We are well respected," said Garber.

Coach Ted Garber's squad enters the season ranked No. 8 out of 52 Division I teams, something Garber warns against taking too seriously.

"It's all speculation," said Garber. "I'd rather be eighth on May 9 than on March 16th."

Mother Nature has not been kind to the Gorillas this preseason. Snow has made Garber field impossible to practice on, forcing the team to the parking lot and into the gym, making it hard to simulate game situations. The conditions have forced next week's scheduled home opener to become a road game forcing UMass to travel to St. John's. Garber is unsure when the field will be ready.

"We could come back after break to the parking lot and the gym again," said Garber. "You've got to deal with the weather conditions. You've got to do the best with what you've got."

There will be no easy games for UMass, as they will play their traditionally tough schedule with two games a week throughout April, including a road date with defending champion Syracuse University.

"Our strength schedule is going to help us," said Garber.

Depth will be an important factor to UMass' success. Gone is All–American Mark Millon, the Gorillas leading scorer last season, but with 17 returning letterman and some key newcomers, Garber's squad should be strong.

"I'm not sure you can replace Millon that easy," said Garber. "We have more depth to make up for him not being here. The torch will be passed to eight guys."

Goalkeeper: Barring injury, Tom LoPresti will be the iron man in net. Garber has dubbed the junior as the No. 1 guy going into the season.

"We're looking to him to have a great year," said Garber. "He's a big game goalkeeper. He could be an All– American."

Sophomore Kevin Ratkiewicz will back up LoPresti.

Defense: Last season the Gorilla defense was tenth in the nation. The unit featuring Chris Nentwich, Dennis Kelly, Ken Randazzo, and Jim Byrnes should pose problems for opposing attackers.

"Our defense is solid," said Garber. "I think we can be even better than last year."

Midfield: With Greg Kline, Eric Trlolo, Buddy Hoffman and Eric Bailey returning, the midfield appears solid.

Offense: Although Millon will be missed, the offense still figures to be potent. The Gorillas will look to Mike Valente and Wes Depp to provide consistent scoring.

Newcomers: Junior College All–American Jared Lanning is expected to make an immediate impact on defense and Garber expects last year's Massachusetts High School Player of the Year Brendan Glass to be a key contributor to the offense. Chris Grande and Jay Robbins should also see significant playing time at mid–field.

"We had a great recruiting class," said Garber. "Hopefully our new guys won't have stage fright."

UMass will open their season Saturday against the No. 5 University of Virginia Cavaliers.

The game will take place at at a neutral site (Hofstra). The Cavaliers are 1–1 in their first two games, beating Army and falling to a strong Princeton team. UVA Coach Dom Starsia expects this to be a competitive game.

"I have great respect for the University of Massachusetts team. We expect them to be great," said Starsia. "This is a game between two potential playoff teams."

'Sox have pleasant surprises

Nixon, Clemens labeled key players for '94 season

Why must Daytona be so damn far from all Florida spring training sites? I'm making just my second excursion to the Sunshine State, and the first of any duration, yet I still won't enjoy any Grapefruit league tilts.

Thanks to NESN, however, I've witnessed some of the Red Sox' pre–season contests, and there have been some pleasant surprises. Here, I must remind any unwary readers that any players piling up numbers in March can take them and a token and get on the subway. But the way I see it, it's speaks higher of oneself if he does well these first few weeks that if he performs as, say, Michael Jordan has.

All things considered, it would have been next to impossible for Red Sox designated hitter–outfielder Andre Dawson to have fared any better. After an injury–ridden inaugural campaign with the Olde Towne Team in which he hit just 13 home runs, the Hawk appears to have rediscovered the stroke that made him the greatest Montreal Expo. In addition, Mo Vaughn looks prepared to prove that the Big Fast wasn't the only league he could wear out (the Hit Dog was to Seton Hall what Dawson was to Montreal).

Here we remind you once again that a solid spring training often ensures a lousy year. So, I'll reflect a bit on some of Boston's achievements of 1993.

I don't think many understand what a fine season Mike Greenwell produced one year ago. The Gator, whose own amusement park billboard adorns the outfield wall (left field, of course) at the Red Sox' City of Palms Park in Fort Myers, finished seventh in the American League batting race (.315) and his total of 44 doubles and triples (38, 6) was eclipsed by only a handful of junior circuiters.

He continues to be scolded for his diminishing power and shoddy fielding, hence the allure of Ron Gant (whose signing would still leave right field sketchy), but Greenie deserves to be lauded for his stand–out achievements. He remains one of baseball's truly smart hitters, as evident by his walk–to–strikeout ratio, and you wouldn't know from his lackluster stolen base totals that he's one of the faster Red Sox. He's no shame to Boston's left field pedigree.

Two keys in '94: Otis Nixon and Roger Clemens. One wonders if the Red Sox brass regrets having added two new members to the All–Ex Red Sox team last season (Ellis Burks, Phil Plantier), but one can be certain they'll delight in naming Nixon the captain of a new club, essentially the reverse of the aforementioned bunch. The graceful tablesetter who resembles the mascot of his former employer, the Braves, immediately holds three distinctions in the Red Sox camp: he'll never lose a

Xavier accepts offer from A–10

By MICHAEL REISS
Collegian Staff

Preparing for the loss of Rutgers and West Virginia in 1995 to the Big East, the Atlantic 10 Conference rolled out the red carpet for Xavier University.

Yesterday at a press conference in Cranbury, New Jersey, Xavier announced that it officially accepted the offer. The Musketeers will begin competing in the A–10 at the start of the 1995–96 season.

Xavier, located in Cincinnati, currently competes in the Midwestern Collegiate Conference.

The school has an enrollment of 3,996 undergraduate students and 2,377 graduate students. It will compete in 13 of the 18 championship sports sponsored by the Atlantic 10.

Xavier brings some impressive credentials to the A–10, a Conference that despite the impending loss of Rutgers and West Virginia, is on the rise.

The Xavier men's basketball team has made 10 postseason appearances over the last 12 years. The Musketeers have participated in the NCAA Tournament eight times, and the NIT twice over that time span.

"We are moving up from a very good league to an excellent league," said men's basketball Coach Pete Gillen. "It's a league that's getting better and better. Temple and UMass are obviously solid Top 10 programs, but there are several other excellent programs in the Atlantic 10."

Last night, the team hosted Miami (Ohio) in the opening round of the NIT.

"We are extremely pleased that Xavier has accepted our invitation to become a member of the Atlantic 10 Conference," said acting commissioner Bob Seltz. "Xavier's tradition of academic and athletic excellence, and commitment to a broad–based athletic program fits perfectly with the existing members of the Atlantic 10.

"We look forward to Xavier becoming a vital part of the Atlantic 10 beginning July 1, 1995."

The Musketeers women's basketball team has logged back–to–back 20 win seasons, making an appearance in the 1993 NCAA Tournament.

"Any time you lose teams the quality of Rutgers and West Virginia, it's tough," said UMass women's basketball coach Joanie O'Brien. "But Xavier's basketball programs are two of their most successful. Personally, I'm looking forward to it. I think it's going to help us recruiting wise."

The women's team has two players on its roster from Ohio, Maleeka Valentine and Melissa Gurile.

Xavier will also compete in baseball, men's and women's cross country, men's golf, men's and women's soccer, men's and women's swimming and diving, men's and women's tennis, and women's volleyball.

The A–10 is currently composed of nine teams: Duquesne, George Washington, UMass, URI, Rutgers, St. Bonaventure, St. Joseph's, Temple and West Virginia.

"We are absolutely convinced that the Atlantic 10 Conference is where Xavier University should be affiliated," said Athletic Director Jeff Fogelson. "This alliance of institutions will assist Xavier in continuing the positive growth of its athletic programs."

The Collegian wishes you a wonderful Spring Break.

Rebels threaten war

LACANDON JUNGLE, Mexico — Mexico's indian rebels will go back to war unless all their demands the government has agreed to are carried out, the guerrillas' chief spokesman said from his jungle stronghold.

The fundamental demand is the complete overhaul of the country's authoritarian political system leading to true democracy, the man known only as Subcomandante Marcos said in an interview on Wednesday.

"If a peaceful transition (to democracy) is not guaranteed, then we will again see war as the only option," Marcos said as guerrillas from the Zapatista National Liberation Army strummed guitars and sang revolutionary songs at their mountaintop hideout.

The best the government can hope for is an "armed peace" until all promises of land reform and economic aid, roads, schools and hospitals for Mexico's impoverished indian and peasant communities are met, he said.

Airline price-fixing to end

WASHINGTON — Six major airlines agreed to new rules Thursday, designed to prevent what the Justice Department said was price-fixing that cost air travelers up to $1.9 billion from 1988 through 1992.

Justice lawyers identified more than 50 separate price-fixing agreements covering hundreds of routes, both to raise fares and to end fare discounts, Assistant Attorney General Anne K. Bingaman said at a news conference.

The airlines negotiated these agreements by sending each other elaborate signals about planned price changes over their jointly owned computerized ticket information system, according to Bingaman, head of the antitrust division.

Although they agreed to new rules, the airlines denied violating any law.

"The price increases in some cases were huge. In some cases, they were $8," Bingaman said. She added that $8 for each ticket, spread over the millions of tickets sold during the 1988-1992 period, would have cost consumers $1.9 billion.

As a result of one agreement, consumers paid $138 more for travel between Chicago and Dalias, the department said. In another, airlines agreed to raise discount one-way fares by $20.

"It's impossible to state the exact amount of damages, but they are huge," Bingaman said. "This case is a critically important victory for American consumers and for American businesses who paid. . . higher fares that they shouldn't have been charged."

Stephanopoulos subpoenaed

WASHINGTON — Senior White House advisor George Stephanopoulos was subpoenaed on Thursday to testify before a Whitewater grand jury led by special prosecutor Robert Fiske.

"I welcome the opportunity to give Mr. Fiske the facts," Stephanopoulos said in statement issued by the White House. The subpoena was the latest in a series issued to senior White House and Treasury Department officials in the investigation.

The grand jury is investigating White House contacts with regulators who were dealing with the failed Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan, the thrift linked to the Whitewater land development and President and Mrs. Clinton.

Earlier, departing White House counsel Bernard Nussbaum testified four hours before the grand jury while Fiske urged Republicans not to hinder him with congressional hearings. GOP lawmakers had hoped for testimony as early as next week — as part of a previously scheduled hearing on the savings and loan cleanup. But Banking Committee Chairman Henry B. Gonzalez, D-Texas, said he would reject Whitewater witnesses as irrelevant to the House panel's business.

UN–brokered peace may reach Bosnians

By ROBERT H. REID
Associated Press

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Serbs and Muslims gave Sarajevo hoped Thursday for an end to the city's crippling 23-month siege, agreeing to open a road to the outside world.

The U.N.-brokered agreement, which also links up divided sectors of the capital to civilian traffic, is the latest and perhaps most important sign that the Bosnian war is winding down. The accord is to take effect Wednesday.

Still, officials on both sides warned the city was far from free or united, and some residents expressed the skepticism borne of nearly two years of bloodletting among neighbors.

"The siege will not be over until all citizens can be transported freely," Hasan Muratovic, the Bosnian government's minister for relations with the United Nations, said after signing the agreement at Sarajevo airport.

But, he acknowledged, it was "the first very small step toward the (full) opening of Sarajevo."

Momcilo Krajisnik, speaker of the self-styled Bosnian Serb parliament, said the agreement would improve conditions in the city. But he refused to say whether and when Sarajevo would be united.

In Washington, meanwhile, U.S. Secretary of State Warren Christopher cautioned Thursday that an overall peace agreement to end 23 months of fighting is "a ways down the road. That agreement does not exist."

But he said that the United States hopes that an agreement to be signed Friday in Washington to create a Croat-Muslim federation in Bosnia will help push the peace process forward.

Washington and Moscow are trying to end the Bosnian war by creating a Muslim-Croat federation that later would embrace Bosnian Serbs, who have seized 70 percent of Bosnia's territory. The diplomats envision Bosnia forming a confederation with Croatia as a strategic balance to Serbia, the strongest state in the region.

The Serb-Muslim agreement signed Thursday does not permit commercial or military traffic on the road leading from Sarajevo to Visoko and on to Zenica in central Bosnia, but envisages free passage of civilians in buses or cars under U.N. escort.

It does not address the issue of aid convoys, partly because the United Nations was not party to the accord and because its aim was to allow civilians to leave.

The accord also does not permit unlimited travel. People wanting to cross military lines have to apply 24 hours in advance, and permission can be refused. Still, if honored, the deal would open a route out of Sarajevo for people who have been trapped since the war began.

The agreement follows the Serb withdrawal of artillery from around Sarajevo, under pressure from NATO, and a tentative agreement between the Muslim-led government and Bosnian Croats to stop fighting, reform their alliance and create a federation. The successes reflect increased outside pressure on the warring parties, including an active U.S. and Russian role in mediating agreements. But it also appears to be recognition by all sides that little more is to be gained by fighting, either politically or territorially.

Protestors rally against Yeltsin

By JULIA RUBIN
Associated Press

MOSCOW — Thousands of Russians gathered at sunset Thursday to dream of a new dawn for their vanished empire.

Many of the 5,000 people who assembled in the square outside the Bolshoi Theater wept as they recalled how exactly three years ago they and their countrymen had voted in a referendum to keep the Soviet Union together.

Less than 10 months later Mikhail Gorbachev signed the USSR out of existence and the tribulations of entering a new ideological world began.

"For these past three years not one step has been taken to ensure the dignity of the people," said Pyotr Kosachyuk, a 69-year-old Red Army veteran of World War II.

The rally, the largest in months by opponents of President Boris Yeltsin's reforms, was the latest sign that hard-liners are regrouping in Moscow.

A day earlier, a group of Communist, nationalist and other opposition leaders — including former Vice President Alexander Rutskoi — announced they were uniting into a political movement to "prevent the final collapse of historic Russia."

The same day, Rutskoi, who recently was released from prison after being pardoned for leading October's armed resistance to Yeltsin, urged people across the former Soviet Union to reunite into a single "great power."

It is an issue of great emotional resonance for many.

"This is my homeland and I'm ready to give my life again for it," said Kosachyuk, who crooked his arm in a stiff salute while the old Soviet anthem was played over loudspeakers.

Speakers at the rally described the former Soviet republics as sloughs of economic turmoil and ethnic strife, and said things would be better if they all joined with Russia again under the Soviet banner.

While red Soviet flags waved in the breeze, the crowd observed a moment of silence "for the victims of the politics

Jesus Week hits campus on March 28

By CATHERINE B. PULLEY
Collegian Staff

Chi Alpha Christian Fellowship, Intervarsity Christian Fellowship and Alliance Christian Fellowship are sponsoring "Jesus Week" during the week of March 28.

The groups will sponsor seminars, performances, and religious gatherings to expose university students to Christian views concerning the Easter holiday.

The groups will have information tables on the Campus Center Concourse throughout the week. An "Easter Celebration" will be held Friday, April 1, at 7 p.m. with Dave McDowell of College Church, and will include a worship service.

"All the groups are working to pull the week together. It is a great way to expose students to what Christianity really means," said Leneita Sherrin, vice–president of Chi Alpha Fellowship.

"It is the point of the week to pull together and to educate students for what Easter is all about."

The Intervarsity Christian Fellowship will bring Broadway actor Bruce Kuhn to perform "The Accounts of Luke." Kuhn appeared in the original cast of "Les Miserables" and "Chess," and tours in the one–man show across the country to colleges and universities. The play recounts the gospel of Luke word for word from the King James version of the Bible.

Kuhn will also give three seminars to acting students on campus, in addition to the three performances.

"[The Accounts of Luke] is very Shakesperian," said Jim Martin, the head staff member of the Intervarsity

New polymer center head chosen

By TRACY MONAHAN
Collegian Staff

Edward Bradley Moynahan is no stranger to polymer sciences. He comes to the University with over 25 years experience in the production of chemical and polymer–based imaging systems.

Moynahan has been tapped to be the new director of the Center of UMass Industry Research on Polymers (CUMIRP), the outreach arm of the department of polymer science and engineering.

A native of Lowell, Mass., Moynahan said he wants to expand the links between the University and industry. He said he hopes to expand the membership of CUMIRP by providing an attractive fee schedule for small to mid–size companies.

CUMIRP encourages liaisons between the companies and the school, according to Moynahan. The companies pay a fee to CUMIRP and in return they are provided with research information on polymer science.

"Industries can connect with faculty members in the department to research common interests," Moynahan said.

The money provided by the industries is used by the department to pay graduate research assistants and buy equipment.

"CUMIRP helps to educate more students, and now we'll have more funds to do that," Moynahan said.

COURTESY UMASS NEWS OFFICE

Brad Moynahan

Soon, CUMIRP will have new research facilities in which to work. The Silvio O. Conte Polymer Research Center will open in September and will house the department.

"It's a wonderful place," Moynahan said. "For the first time, the whole department will be in one building. Right now we're spread out across campus."

He earned his bachelor's and master's degrees in science from the University of Lowell in 1961 and 1965, respectively. He received his doctorate in organic chemistry in 1971 from Clarkson University in New York.

In 1980, Moynahan participated in Stanford University's Graduate School of Business Executive Program for Smaller Companies.

Most recently, he was a vice–president at the former Graphics Technology international (now Rexham Graphics) in South Hadley. He was responsible for manufacturing management, general management and marketing and sales at the company.

Clinton scandal no real intrigue

by ANDREW DAVIDSON
Collegian Staff

Editor's Note: This is the final in a three–part series comparing Whitewater with the Watergate scandal.

It is not the actual events of Clinton's Whitewater which have drawn so much attention, intrigue and scrutiny.

It is not the minor incidents, the alleged illegal campaign fund from the reserves of a shady savings and loan to the Clinton's real–estate development which has people's attention.

Rather, it is the way it is being handled, the pandemonium underway in the White House, the zealousness of White House aides, which has people making comparisons to Watergate.

To follow the story of the Whitewater scandal is almost as simple as following the path of the savings and loan industry.

Whitewater and Watergate
NEWS ANALYSIS

Retired farmer Ralph Myers started the Woodruff County Savings and Loan Association in 1978 near White River country in rural Arkansas.

Unfortunately, the inflationary climate of the late 1970s was not conducive to encouraging people to save their money; in the first two days of operation the Woodruff Co. S&L got only $200,000 in initial deposits, a tenth of what they expected. Four years later, Myers sold the venture and changed the name to Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan.

The invigorated S&L quickly expanded under the regulatory restraint of the early 1980s, and quickly became a high–powered Little Rock bank.

But, like many savings and loan institutions in the '80s, Madison Guaranty made some bad loans, and had federal regulators knocking on its door.

Harding will not compete again

PORTLAND, Ore. — Her competitive skating career is finished, she reportedly is nearly broke and, by her own admission, her life is a mess.

Yet Tonya Harding was back on the ice again Thursday, cheerfully practicing and playing with youngsters, less than 24 hours after pleading guilty to a conspiracy charge for her role in the attack on former figure skating rival Nancy Kerrigan.

"If I want to skate, I'll skate," she said. "It's my life, all right?"

As part of a plea bargain, Harding resigned from the U.S. Figure Skating Association, effectively ending her competitive career. She was grumpy when she showed up at the suburban shopping mall Thursday, telling reporters to "quit bugging me" as she walked to the rink.

But as soon as she put on her skates, her spirits began to improve.

She practiced a few jumps, crashing to the wall once and hurting her right knee slightly, but joking as she was helped up by training partner Angela Meduna.

Asked what she was doing there, Harding said, "Practicing." Why practice when there's nothing to practice for? "It's fun," she said.

When the practice session ended, Harding stayed on the ice, playfully skating with one of her friends from the Special Olympics and holding up a young boy as he tentatively skated around the rink.

Rink manager Bob Sachen said management hadn't yet decided whether to take down the big sign that reads "Home of Tonya Harding."

Both on and off the ice, Harding's future appears to look bleak. Under the plea agreement, she must pay a $100,000 fine, contribute $50,000 to the Special Olympics and pay Multnomah County $10,000 to cover some extra prosecution costs.

Harding signed a deal with the television show "Inside Edition" that reportedly pays her between $300,000 and $500,000. But that money apparently will be gone after she makes her court-ordered payments.

At 23, Harding faces few prospects for making money on the ice. She was to have competed in next week's World Figure Skating Championships in Japan. But her resignation from the figure skating association means she no longer is a part of the U.S. team. Without her USFSA membership, she also can't compete in either of the two lucrative pro-am competitions. She's free to participate in some ice shows, but promoters might shy away from her because of the taint of the Kerrigan affair.

Any ice show participation would have to be limited to the three West Coast states. Her travel is restricted to Oregon, Washington and California as part of her three-year probation.

She could sign a deal for a movie of her life story, but Oregon has a law that requires convicted criminals to turn over proceeds from movies or books about their crimes to a state fund. The victim of the crime can then sue to get some of that money.

More cash for your old books?

Scholarships to benefit from profs' early orders

NATHAN MARTIN / COLLEGIAN

Arizal Masri sweeps between stacks of leftover books. Temporarily in its quiet season, the Textbook Annex is preparing for buyback season with a plan that may help students get more money for their used books.

By BRANDON FERRIS
Collegian Correspondent

It's mid-semester and you've probably long since finished buying your textbooks. Banished from your mind forever (or at least until next fall) are the painful memories of textbook- buying ordeals at the Textbook Annex. Mobs struggling over lockers, lines so long you can't get to the shelves, and seemingly eternal waits to get to a cash register have faded into the past. But the Annex is doing something you may want to think about.

Assistant Manager Scott Cashman said the Annex is undertaking a campaign to make significant procedural improvements which will result in benefits for students, including scholarships.

At the heart of the campaign are efforts to get faculty members to order books for the following semester before buyback begins on May 11. Cashman said if faculty order their books before that date, and a quantity of those titles are being ordered, then the Annex can pay students 50 percent of the publisher's list price at buyback, even on used books.

Otherwise, Cashman said, students generally receive 25 percent or less when the books are sold to wholesale companies. He added that the 50 percent buyback rate encourages more students to sell their books back, making more used, less expensive books available.

Cashman urged students to speak to their instructors about the matter, as it gives them an opportunity to help control their textbook expenses. He admitted it is not always easy for faculty to order books so far in advance, but said he hoped they would consider doing so. "It does impact students," he said.

The Annex is offering an additional incentive for faculty to order their books early. Cashman said the store will contribute $5 to a scholarship fund for every order that comes in before buyback begins. The Annex will mail entry forms to students after spring break, and drawings will be held beginning May 16 to award a number of $100 scholarships.

Cashman said the Textbook Annex paid out just under $500,000 in buybacks last year. "I'd like to see it hit 6 or 700,000," he said.

of Gorbachev and Yeltsin."

But Russia's army newspaper Krasnaya Zvezda, although mourning the Soviet collapse, urged peace in a front-page editorial and said there was no going back to the USSR.

"Out of all the former Soviet people, only local elites — government, financial and show-business officials — are prospering," Krasnaya Zvezda said.

But, it added, "Russia isn't the same, and the entire former Soviet territory has changed greatly. So we ask all revolutionaries not to worry: We can't go back. We must build our common house anew. We must seek ways of unifying which wouldn't harm anyone's interests."

In the March 1991 referendum, Soviet voters endorsed keeping the union. But three months later, Russians elected the independent-minded Yeltsin as president, and that August the failed Soviet coup signaled the end for Soviet power.

Yeltsin and his free-market reforms won another strong vote of confidence in April 1993, long after he had presided over the disintegration of the Soviet Union and the creation of its successor, the looser Commonwealth of Independent States.

Kuhn will perform at Mahar Auditorium at 8 p.m. on March 28, 30 and 31 in the Campus Center. Tickets are $3 for students and $5 for non-students.

Also scheduled in the Mahar auditorium is the "Gospel Celebration." The University of Massachusetts Gospel Choir, Amherst College Choir and Smith College Choir are scheduled to perform along with other groups and vocalists on March 29 at 8:30 p.m.

"All the Christian groups on campus have really clicked," said Martin. "This should have an impact on the whole campus."

Acoustic honesty, heavenly stairway & psyched ear candy

Eugenius strikes back.

Tribe Called Quest, of the old school.

SOUNDS FROM THE VALLEY
Compiled by Brian Bobinski & Matt Audette

This past week, MTV has been playing their so-called "fiest of Unplugged" series, featuring everyone from the Stone Temple Pilots to Sting. The irony is that lately, everyone who has been doing the half-hour acoustic sets have been mostly, well, plugged in. Why call it unplugged when the drums are still loud, the bass amplified, and the guitars turned up?

The original, and best unplugged shows come from groups like R.E.M., De La Soul, LL Cool J and Nirvana. These bands make their loud songs quiet, play unusual covers, rework old favorites, and involve new instruments from honky-tonk piano to mandolin. The majority of other unplugged-types play straightforward versions of their songs (yawn) and avoid any creative noodling whatsoever.

Maybe in the future, bands can return to the original intentions of the unplugged series, before MTV tried to make money off of it, and stage a true acoustic jam, not just "sort of softer versions of our greatest hits."

In the early eighties, a punk-pop band named The Vaselines made some noise from the Scottish highlands, lead by head Vaseline Eugene Kelly. Frustrated by lack of stardom, Kelly broke up the band a few years later. Luckily for us, in 1990 Kelly felt the creative urge again, and formed a new band, Eugenius, whose 1992 debut, Oomalama, received both critical and popular raves as the power-pop band with the power-pop album.

Now they have returned again with their sophomore effort, Mary Queen of Scots, another seamless album of messy, psychedelic ear candy. Ten tunes that I guarantee will bounce around inside your head for days, weeks even. . .

Remember those junior high dances when the last song was always "Stairway to Heaven?" You and your little eighth grade sweetheart would turn in careful circles as Jimmy Page plucked the opening notes. However, a problem always arose when the guitar solo started, and the tempo picked up to an almost undanceable speed. What do you do? Spin faster to the point of nauseousness? Stop altogether? Try and make up your own tempo? Start breakdancing? Ah, the trials and tribulations of our little eighth grade lives.

Rap pioneers De La Soul and A Tribe Called Quest dropped by the Student Union Ballroom last Wednesday night and treated the packed house to an entertaining, high- intensity show that featured songs from all of the groups ground-breaking albums. The only drawback to the night was that both of the groups' sets were way too short. For ticket prices that ranged from $10 to $15, many sweaty hip- hop fans felt slightly gypped.

While on the subject of rap, a strange occurrence took place at last Wednesday's show. During De La Soul's set, the group played the backing tracks to certain rap songs, and encouraged the less-than-thrilled audience to try to sing along. What was astounding about the whole thing was that when recent hip-hop smashes such as Dr. Dre's "Nuthin' But A G' Thang" and Onyx's "Slam" were played, the audience half-heartedly mumbled along. But when old school classics such as Doug E. Fresh's "La Di Da Di" were played, the audience shouted out the lyrics with a previously unseen enthusiasm. is this living proof that Generation X prefers the old school to the new school? Very interesting. . .

Advocate Props: This week's Advocate comes with a special pull-out titled Beat, which is strictly dedicated to the music scene on both the local and national level. Primarily written by Advocate journalists Mark Kendall Anderson and Tom Mudd, this week's issue contains extensive interviews with Atlantic recording artist's Jawbox, folk-rock pioneer Richard Thompson, and "old-school" rapper Grandmaster Flash. The issue also gives much-needed attention to the area's aspiring local music scene by listing 100 area bands ang phone numbers where you can reach them, and giving a complete listing of club dates in the area. This is just the sort of thing that the Valley needs in order to help promote it's abundance of great local talent. Let's hope this becomes a permanent part of the paper's format.

Pianist to salute sister city visitors

COURTESY DEBORAH FRANCIONE

Jazz pianist Deborah Francione will play at the Lord Jeffery Amherst Inn at 8 p.m. this evening.

By EMILY MARINO
Collegian Staff

The Lord Jeffery Amherst Inn will host a special reception tonight in celebration of the Amherst International Exchange Association, who will be saluting eight dignitaries visiting from Kanegasaki, Japan.

Kanegasaki is Amherst's sister city, and her citizens will depart tomorrow after a two-day stay in town and a farewell dinner at the Lord Jeffery. The visitors have made stops in Boston and Sturbridge, and have used the time in Amherst to visit local sights and shops.

Tonight's farewell dinner, a feast offering everything from fried calimari to roast top sirloin, will be followed by a concert by jazz pianist/composer Deborah Francione.

Francione was named New England's outstanding pianist in the February 1994 New England Performer Magazine's Reader Poll. The pianist has played at various New England venues, including at Northampton's Iron Horse.

Having produced two albums, Almost Home and Gypsy Heart, Francione is currently in the studio working on her own release. Expect to see her latest, low-key Journey to Love, in May. Francione has also contributed to Bells, Kings & Favorite Things and the upcoming Flight Of The Blue Dove, two albums by Ron Murray.

Francione and her trio will perform at 8 p.m. at the Lord Jeffery Amherst Inn. Tickets are $10, and are available at the Select Board Office in the Amherst Police Station. Tickets include a pre-concert reception at 6:30 p.m. For more information call 549-0332.

Learn you're a moron by traveling abroad

By MATTHEW LEDOUX
Collegian Correspondent

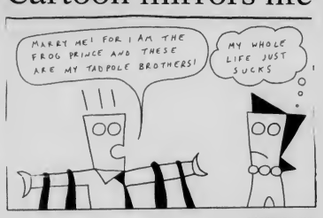
While you read this letter I am six hours ahead, in another country, and in another language I'm being viciously turned down on a date — and not even realizing it.

Welcome to foreign exchange programs. Pay to go to another country far away and look like an ass for five months. Or go for a year and double your moronic experiences. I chose the one year "moron viscovery" program.

It is now my sixth month in Paris and I have slowly started to come around to a culturally aware and diversified life. I am even able to communicate effectively in child-like phrases.

With French women I am real smooth. Their beauty, combined with my skills and nervousness really work together in such a manner, that before I know it I'm saying something like, "Why don't we see each other sometime and I can swear at your pets." I have casually rolled out many such winning lines and realized only afterward what was actually said.

One of the most intimidating things for me in France is the barber shops. I hate getting my hair cut here because of them. These places, I must explain, are not simple "Barber Shops" where one goes to pay $14 and talk to Bill the Barber for an hour about his kids. Non, non, non.



This is hair we are talking about, and the French are very particular about it. This changes a few things immediately. First, the price goes up at least $10. For me and my basically Mr. Rogers head, the fee is $25. More hair, more twists, more zoom, more francs.

Second, the "Barbers" are not given lonely, dusty names like "Bill," "Ricky," or "Buddy;" they are given French kiss-me-on-the-Seine type names. Names that flow down a curvy river arriving at the Love Boat where Captain Stewbing swims them in. For example names like "Christoph," "Pierre-Antoin" and "Phillipe L'amour" are names more in style.

Lastly, barber shops are called coiffures and they do not just cut your hair; they shape it. They talk to and get to know your hair. Working together, your hair and "Christoph" finds new looks, dare to loop into new curls and boink into new found freedom.

After these haircuts, my head molded to look like a jet, I feel relieved. I always leave happy, and give the Bobby Brady/I'm-all-right-you're-all-right goofy wave before walking down the street towards home. On the second turn towards home, out of Christoph's sight, I slip on the old Yankees cap that's been with me for all this time. The idea of pulling the tattered cap down over the new jet would kill the poor hairstylist, and after it's taken off, my once spiffy jet looks more like a sadly grounded chicken. However, I paid for the one year "look like a moron" program and it helps me look my part.

Cartoon mirrors life

COURTESY ADAM GREEN

One example of the humor found in What were you in a previous life?

By AMY S. BURNS
Collegian Staff

What were you in a previous life?
Adam Green
Thunder's Mouth Press

What were you in a previous life? is a collection of cartoons by Adam Green.

Each cartoon is a vignette, a separate comment on modern life without any connection to the other cartoons.

Some of Green's cartoons have appeared individually in the Utne Reader and the Chicago Tribune.

Green has a stark, bold drawing style. He uses black and white, with mostly straight lines and geometric shapes.

His people are generic rather than individuals, and have odd, rectangular heads and pointy hair. I can't really say they have personalities.

The ideas for some of Green's cartoons seem totally random, like the one entitled "How not to order Mongolian Beef." However, a good number of them poke fun at popular culture.

He makes fun of Edward Scissorhands, "Sesame Street" and Absolut vodka. I particularly enjoyed the one about the Etch A Sketch, "Wouldn't it be great if people were like Etch A Sketches? You could turn them upside-down, shake them and erase them. . ."

What makes Green's cartoons good is that his references aren't for the most part obscure or intellectual, they're accessible to the masses. Also his subject matter is up-to-date.

He mentions rapper Marky Mark, Michael Jackson and "Rescue 911." This is refreshing since many newspapers still print cartoons like Family Circus and Dennis the Menace, which have barely changed since the sixties.

Some of Green's cartoons are better than others. I didn't laugh consistently throughout the whole book; however some pages really struck me as hilarious.

Some of his humor is really innovative and off the wall, but some cartoons I just didn't get. All in all it was a decent book, Green does a good job of making everyday life seem a little twisted. B

My post–break resolutions

After seven weeks and three failed midterms, spring break has arrived. I'll be taking a trip to the warm, exotic city of Boston. Perhaps it isn't Cancun or Daytona, but it will do for me.

I have a vacation routine. I'll wake up with orange juice and the newspaper, wear boxers all day, and grow a beard. This break there is an added bonus: The NCAA tournament. With its hours of college basketball, the tournament is a sports junkie's dream. The hardest thing I'm doing over break is keeping track of my brackets. But with all the laziness of spring break, it seems a good time to look back over the first half of this semester and make resolutions for the rest of the year.

From now on, I'm Academic Man. 'I don't skip classes, that was lazy man. I am a G.P.A. machine.'

A.J. Stweart

I'm going to go to my first three classes. I've had enough sleeping in. I'm getting up everyday and dragging my sorry butt to Marcus for an 8 a.m. class I so wisely scheduled. While the rest of the world has been getting up and walking through the slush and sleet, I've been dreaming of Tonya Harding and Louis Farrakhan taking on the American Gladiators. From now on, I'm Academic Man. "I don't skip classes, that was lazy man. I am a G.P.A. machine."

I'm never betting again. I don't know how much beer I have lost so far this semester, and the West Virginia Mountaineers didn't help either. Gambling makes me anxious and poor. I am not a good enough card player to throw cases on the line. The odds of this resolution lasting, however, are not good. I'd say six to one, at best.

I'm not spending all my time playing Sega. Between hockey, football, baseball and basketball, I've played more than enough of this video game. If I exercised half as much as I played NBA Jam and RBI '93, I'd be . . . Michael Jordan. With the intramural softball season fast approaching, I'm trading in my Sega for the great outdoors. Does anyone remember what grass looks like?

I'm going to get in shape. I'm going to run everyday, do Abs of Steel, lift weights, play softball, kayak, and compete in the Tour de France. Then I'm going to Disney World. Also, I'm going to eat right. No more pizza. No more french fries. It's salad (with fat free dressing, of course) and rice cakes from now on. And beer? Yes, I'll stop drinking . . . Oh, I can't even joke about that. I'll just have to work the calories off by swimming the English Channel.

I'll find a job for the summer. If anyone has any ideas on this, please let me know. My resume is ready. I need employment (preferably in Boston) fast. Otherwise I'm going to spend the summer living with mom and listening to Kenny Rogers. I love my mom, don't get me wrong, but she feels the constant need to give me advice. When I was looking for a VCR a few years back, she wondered why I didn't get a Beta. "It's much cheaper," she said. Then again, she warned me against betting on West Virginia. With the money I lost, I could have bought every Beta in the country. I guess we're even. Still, if I have to sit through one more hour of home shopping with her, I'll become the next Menendez brother.

I'm not going to let women deprive me of Temple tickets. Fourth row, behind the UMass bench for the A–10 Championship. I ask you, where was my brain? What kind of drug was I on? I gave up tickets to wait for a friend who was arriving in the middle of the game. She could have hung around outside for a while. It wasn't that cold. Hindsight, my friends, hindsight. I've got almost a year to tell myself how dumb I am.

Unfortunately, I know that I probably won't make any of these changes. I'll still lose my shirt playing cards, sleep all morning, play silly games all day, and drink beer all night. And when I find that I am a dateless, drunken slob on academic probation, I'll be miserable trying to recall how much fun I had. Maybe this summer I'll find the strength to change. Kenny can do that for you.

Jews' role in slave trading

"The Jews played a major role in the African American slave trade." This accusation is the essence of Louis Farrakhan's book, The Secret Relationship Between Blacks and Jews. The anti–Semitic polemic, filled with hatred and deception, concludes "Jewish responsibility" for the "Black Holocaust." These accusations could have easily been ignored, but the results of remaining silent are too destructive.

"Of the ten million African Americans imported into the present day United States, less than one– tenth of one percent were owned by Jews."

Rachel Sontag

Farrakhan's book both distorts the relationship between two oppressed peoples and reveals his own ignorant hate by using inaccurate and non–authoritative misquotes to falsify history. These tired and familiar distortions about the role of Jews in the slave trade may have been convincing to those unfamiliar with the subject. To respected historians, however, these arguments are nothing but anti–Semitic lies and propaganda. Farrakhan's hatred of the Jewish people is no secret. He has referred to Adolf Hitler as a "great man" in his attempt to exterminate the European Jews. He has labeled Judaism a "gutter religion" and has blamed the Jews for all the world's evils — from AIDS to the slave trade.

In addition, Farrakhan's publication was condemned by respected African American scholars, such as professor L. Gates, chairman of Harvard's African American Studies department.

The following are Farrakhan's deceitful techniques used to falsify history: the deliberate misquotation of legitimate scholars; the misleading citation of scholarly works; the cynical exploitation of non–authoritative sources, including outdated studies, general textbooks, amateur histories, and journalistic non–histories; and the shameless reliance on blatant anti–Semitic polemics.

Jewish theologians disapproved of slavery. Maimonides — the brilliant Jewish philosopher, legalist, physician and interpreter of the Bible — condemned slavery regardless of creed or color. The Church allowed Christians to enslave both Christians and non–Christians. The Koran allowed Muslims to enslave Muslims and non–Muslims. In fact, Saudi Arabia and Omar continued their slave trade until the end of the 1960s.

But these facts were conveniently ignored by Farrakhan. Maimonides preached that the slave holder increased sin and iniquity in the world. It is well documented that the Jews played a very minor role in the slave trade. According to the U.S. Census Bureau of Negro Population, 99 percent of the merchants responsible for the American slave trade were not Jews. "Of the ten million African Americans imported into the present day United States, less than one–tenth of one percent were owned by Jews." Ninety–nine point eight percent were non–Jewish slave traders.

Farrakhan made no mention of the role of the Jews in the fight against slavery. Because individual freedom was consistent with Jewish values, prominent Jews joined the various abolitionist movements and gave their energy to end slavery. Eighty percent of the American Jews who fought in the civil war fought for the Union against slavery. More recently, Jews played a large role in the fight for equal rights and the war against racism. According to Phillip Day's book, We Are Not Afraid, two–thirds of the whites participating in the civil rights movement in the 1960s, known as the Mississippi Freedom Summer, were Jews.

He distorts history by making light of the Jewish exile from Spain in the fourteenth century. In reality, the Spanish Inquisition was one of the many mass murders and exiles of the Jewish people. Over 300,000 Jews were brutally tortured, exiled, forced to convert to Christianity, burned at the stake or hanged — solely because they were Jewish.

In reaction to the Spanish Inquisition, Jews who could escape fled to other parts of Europe. A very few fled to the Caribbean. In a feeble attempt to explain the Caribbean slave trade, Farrakhan held the few Jewish immigrants responsible for the slave trafficking of the Europeans. According to Liebman's book, Jews in New Spain, Portugal, Spain and England had the most control over the Caribbean. Furthermore, they excluded Jews from even participating in the slave trade. According to The Atlantic Slave Trade and Arnold Wiznitzer's Jews in Colonial Brazil, more than three million African slaves were imported while Jews were expelled. Thus, the non–Jew — not the Jew — obviously played the most dominant role in the Caribbean slave trade.

Those interested in historical truths about Black–Jewish relations ought to read from the respected African American authorities: W.E.B. DuBois, Carter G. Woodson, John Blassingame, Clayborne Carson, Daviv Levering Lewis and John Hope Franklin. Such scholars do not distort history; they write the truth. African Americans like W.E.B. DuBois, one of the most respected Black historians and sociologists, and a leading Black opponent of racial discrimination, offer hope for better understanding and mutual respect.

Director of Mullins congratulates staff

To the editor:

Congratulations to the University of Massachusetts basketball and hockey teams for their fantastic 1993–94 seasons! And a warm welcome to the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team to what we hope is the beginning of a long and successful association with the Mullins Center.

UMass men's basketball continues to thrill the campus and community by going undefeated in the Mullins Center and winning its third consecutive Atlantic 10 Championship. Congratulations are also due to coach John Calipari for earning the title "Atlantic 10 Coach of the Year" and to coach Joe Mallen for setting a new record for the most victories in one season by a UMass hockey team.

Ultimately, congratulations go out to all the student athletes for their amazing efforts in bringing the UMass fans countless hours of tremendous sports memories during the Mullins Center's first year of operation.

I look back to the beginning of the athletic season when in a short 24–hour period the Mullins Center's student staff changed the building over from a 7 p.m. Mariah Carey rehearsal concert to a nationally televised Midnight Madness basketball setup at full capacity. A few short hours later, they changed the building over once again to usher in the return of UMass hockey to campus as the first hockey game was played in the Mullins Center and the opening puck was dropped by Gov. William Weld.

All the wonderful things that have happened throughout the past year at the Mullins Center certainly culminated last week with the men's basketball team winning the A–10 Tournament for the third time. As I was leaving the building after the game, I was introduced to a gentleman who explained to me that he follows college basketball all over the country and especially the Big East.

He was truly impressed with how well the Mullins Center was operated and he was amazed to find out that it is staffed primarily by UMass students. He expressed that ours is one of the most helpful building staffs he has encountered in his travels. This is just one example of the many compliments that the facility and its employees receive regularly from those attending events and visiting the building.

The Mullins Center student staff is truly remarkable. I would like to thank this group of students who don't often receive the accolades they deserve. They go about their business working long, hard hours behind the scenes of all Mullins Center events bringing support and pride to the UMass campus.

by Garry Trudeau

The Mullins Center, together with Auxiliary Services and Environmental Health and Safety, employs over 400 students on a part–time basis from the UMass campus. They work in many capacities including changeover crews, ushers, ticket takers, door guards, maintenance workers, box office and ice rink personnel, as well as concessions workers and EMTs. All the student employees in the Mullins Center deserve a big round of applause as we know that none of our events would come to fruition without their dedication and hard work.

In addition to receiving a paycheck to help with their educational expenses, Mullins Center student employees are gaining valuable experiences in many different areas that, together with their degree, will put them a step ahead in their efforts to find employment upon graduation.

On behalf of the professional staff of the Mullins Center, I extend a heartfelt thank you to all of the students that work 24 hours a day, seven days a week, to make the Mullins Center the type of facility that supports the winning tradition of the University of Massachusetts.

Murdered abortionist not worthy of tribute

To the editor:

Unfortunately, on Thursday, March 10, I had the displeasure of reading Marni E. Helfner's column, "Remembering Dr. Gunn." To begin, I cannot take Ms. Helfner seriously, because directly under her catchy title is her face blowing a bubble. This is extremely offensive, it is a mockery of the Collegian and, more importantly, and insult to the reader's intelligence. To add insult to injury, she goes on to dole out her opinions.

The death and brutality which Dr. Gunn encountered are undisputable, but what can be argued is Marni's (that's Marni with an "i," dotted with a heart or a smiley face depending on her mood) praise for Dr. Gunn (an ironic name for Dr. Abortion). I emphatically believe that the "good doctor" did not deserve to be killed, but I think it is important to remember him for who and what he was.

He is not nor will he ever be a hero. He did not die a martyr. He was simply a man who made an obnoxiously comfortable living by killing innocent lives. He was a man of few morals and no scruples. He was a doctor who took life rather than giving it. Most importantly, he was not worthy of an article entitled, "Remembering Dr. Gunn."

I cannot reiterate enough my belief that Dr. Gunn did not deserve to be killed. Take into consideration, however, that he understood the consequences of his actions. He knew that his life was constantly in jeopardy when he "challenged" the pro–life supporters who peacefully demonstrated in front of the clinic. Undaunted, he antagonized these devout pro–lifers and thus his horrible demise. A tragic episode, but no great loss. There will be another cold and ruthless money–hungry person who will fill his bloody shoes.

The problem I have is with this ever–prophetic (oh, I'm sorry, I meant pathetic) article is its goal of remembering a person who should be forgotten. The doctor is not worthy of my remembrance, nor yours. He does not deserve the article, nor the time and effort Ms. Helfner consumed by writing it. He was not deserving of death, but he met up with the smoking Gunn.

A day to remember Tara Hartnett

To the editor:

The friends and family of Tara Hartnett, in collaboration with the Dean of Students Office and Everywoman's Center, invite you to "a day to remember" Tara and learn more about the type of violence that caused her death.

Tara Hartnett was a UMass senior psychology major who was murdered on March 20, 1993, allegedly by her boyfriend, a former UMass student. We have planned a day of activities to honor her memory, to educate the University community about the issue of relationship violence, and to help individuals take some concrete steps toward stopping violence against women on our campus.

On March 31, the day will begin with resource tables on the Campus Center concourse. Information about relationship violence and what women and men can do to prevent it will be available, along with representatives from Everywoman's Center, the Men's Resource Center, and the battered women's shelters in the Hampshire and Franklin counties, Necessities/Necesidades and NELCWIT.

At approximately 12:30 p.m., we will gather on the Campus Center Concourse to remember Tara, and dedicate a photograph of Tara and her daughter, who was 11 months old at the time of her mother's death. Speakers will include Chancellor David Scott and Dean of Students Jo–Ann Vanin, as well as close friends and members of Tara's family. The photograph will be hung as a reminder of Tara and the prevalence of violence against women in our society. The ceremony will also be an opportunity to share some memories of Tara and our experiences over the past year.

Following the ceremonial, students, faculty and staff will be able to attend other events focusing on relationship violence, its prevalence and its prevention. Nancy Rothenberg, a local martial arts teacher, will offer two workshops on self– defense at 1:30 p.m. and 3:30 p.m. Educator/Advocates and Counselor/Advocates from the Everywoman's Center Programs Against Violence Against Women will be staffing a resource room.

Finally, everyone is invited to attend the UMass "Clothesline Project," part of a national project in which individuals decorate T–shirts on issues of violence against women. Donations of T–shirts, markers or fabric paints are welcome and can be brought on that day or in advance to the Everywoman's Center. All these events are free and will take place downstairs in the Campus Center. For more information about any part of the day, March 31, please contact Irma Gonzalez at 5–0883.

Together, we can make a difference!

ARIES (March 21–April 19) Your skills are greatly needed. Work hard and do not complain. Higher pay is possible in the months ahead. Strive to get along better with your associates. Test by the Golden Rule.

TAURUS (April 20–May 20) Self-doubts disappear when a career goal is reached. An unexpected message brings good news from a friend one living abroad. A different knowledge paves your way. Be straight and candid.

GEMINI (May 21–June 20) Take the initiative when dealing with a member of the opposite sex. Individuals working in the arts can expect substantial returns on efforts. Celebrate with a friend one tonight! Romance is generally favorable.

CANCER (June 21–July 22) Your keen attention to detail will help you succeed. Whether you take part in competition or just watching, proper conduct will impress influential people. Avoid hungry and shifty characters.

LEO (July 23–Aug. 22) An emotional obstacle can't make anything a challenge seem almost impossible. Rise to the occasion. Your extended support system will motivate to work as a team. Don't turn down invitations to attend a reception. Check out the hype before you get involved. Travel and social activities look favorable. Put romance on the front burner.

VIRGO (Aug. 23–Sept. 22) Friends and social activities look favorable. Put romance on the front burner. Don't pick up a new work assignment. Your skills are in demand. Be sure to check out the hype before you get involved. Travel and social activities look favorable. Put romance on the front burner.

LIBRA (Sept. 23–Oct. 22) You are making an important shift in relationships. Be sure to check out the hype before you get involved. Travel and social activities look favorable. Put romance on the front burner.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23–Nov. 21) Although the morning starts slowly, things could be just the ticket for most. The sooner you get to it, the more encouraging. Run of the mill pace. Be more creative when trying to please loved ones.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22–Dec. 21) A suggestion you make at work gains support from higher ups. Sharpening your skills in your spare time will increase your earning power. A new romance begins to intensify. Follow your heart.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22–Jan. 19) Someone working behind the scenes may step forward on your behalf. You are in a romantic group phase. If you see your love more wisely, settle any differences or with your mate before bedtime. Avoid knee-jerk reactions.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20–Feb. 18) Reaching an agreement may be difficult today. Even if there seems to be little progress, keep at it. Be accommodating. Be trying to have an open mind and try again later. Accept the status quo and count your blessings. Spend some time alone, then get together with friends.

PISCES (Feb. 19–March 20) Nothing will be accomplished by trying to force an issue. Back off and try again later. Accept the status quo and count your blessings. Spend some time alone, then get together with friends.

Science Fair comes to UMass

The annual State Science Fair, western region, will be held March 31 from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom at the University of Massachusetts.

The fair will showcase science projects created by 180 junior and senior high school students. Projects to be displayed include biological, behavioral, environmental and physical sciences and engineering.

Juniors and senior high school students will be judged separately within each category by over 50 judges from the five Colleges and local industries. Those wishing to volunteer as judges may contact David Hautanen at UMass at (413) 545–0222.

Prof receives award

F.J. Francis, professor emeritus of the department of food science at the University of Massachusetts, was recently awarded the Charles A. Black Award by the Council for Agricultural Science and Technology (CAST) in Washington, D.C. The award is given for scientific accomplishments and science communication.

This award adds to his numerous other achievements, which include receiving the Chancellor's Medal at UMass, the Nicholas Appert Medal from the Institute of Food Technologists, and nine other national and international awards.

He has published seven books and 320 technical papers. He also works with three organizations that are primarily concerned with science communication.

Study finds housing discriminates by culture

A study by a University of Massachusetts faculty member concludes that federal occupancy standards for housing assistance discriminate against people based on their culture.

Ellen Pader, an anthropologist and director of the UMass graduate program in regional planning, conducted the study with the Fair Housing Congress of Southern California on people's attempts to find new housing in the wake of the recent earthquake in Los Angeles.

Under federal housing rules, she explains, the maximum number of people that can occupy a dwelling is two people per bedroom.

Since regulations prevent girls and boys over five years of age from sharing a bedroom, she says, a family with three girls and three boys would be required to live in a five bedroom home.

"Current federal occupancy standards," says Pader, "are based on middle–class, Anglo–Saxon concept of family relationships and use of living space."

Pader also adds that people from different countries and cultures, such as Mexico, use their living space in different ways.

Because of the federal rules, Pader says, many quake victims faced the dilemma of turning down government aid or else moving away from familiar neighborhoods, disrupting school–age children, and leaving behind a community that provided a network of support in order to find apartments with more bedrooms.

■ Whitewater

This is where the Clintons come in: James McDougal and the Clintons were equal partners on a $200,000 real–estate development on the White River we have all come far too familiar with. The political and business climate of Little Rock played a large role in how the Whitewater incident unfolded.

Because of his position as co–investor with the owner of Madison Guaranty, Bill Clinton was able to make cash transfers from the S&L through Whitewater.

Were Clinton simply a normal investor, he would not have had the opportunity to make these privileged withdrawals which he used to finance his campaign for governor — that is the central issue of why his critics feel that the abuse of gubernatorial power leads to questions of Clinton's credibility. "It's undermined his credibility," says Rep. Bill Paxon (R–NY). "The democrats have a lot to worry about."

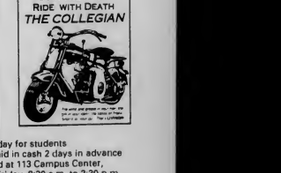
But Clinton's role in the FSLIC investigation of the failing Madison Guaranty is where the loudest outcries of the abuse of power have been directed. In 1985, after Bill Clinton told McDougal that his family needed cash ("Bill was always broke," described Myers), Madison Guaranty hired Hillary on a $2,000–a–month retainer, for which Mrs. Clinton represented McDougal's business interests.

Less than two years later, in a possible case of conflict of interest, Mrs. Clinton helped represent the FSLIC in an inquiry into a failed Illinois thrift. Her position on both sides of the thrift probes raises questions about her objectivity.

When it comes to comparisons to Watergate, however, to make a direct comparison between the two would be presumptuous. "On the scale of impropriety, any outcome would not rise to the level of a deliberate effort to avoid accountability to the people of the U.S.," said Elliot L. Richardson, former attorney general under Nixon.

As judicial investigators poured through the mass of evidence related to the Watergate scandal, over 13 areas of presidential activity were placed under examination. In Whitewater, the information we now have shows what Richardson calls "questionable dealings at a financial level" that occurred before Clinton was even president.

But what his opposition argues is that the Whitewater incident raises questions about his character, and is therefore very relevant to his presidency.



But character analyses are often disregarded for old–fashioned politics. "We have to conduct ourselves in a way that ensures he's a one–term president," said Rep. Robert Dornan (R–CA).

But in comparing the two scandals, it is important to remember that the parallels drawn are done so for historical context; no evidence that has been uncovered in the Whitewater scandal implies that laws were broken and ethics ignored as grossly as by the Nixon administration. To imply that the two scandals are identical is to draw conclusions that are hasty indeed.

Minutemen roll past Bobcats in first round action

By ARTHUR STAPLETON Jr.
Collegian Staff

WICHITA, Kan. — There would be no luck o' the Irish on St. Patrick's Day for Southwest Texas State.

Juniors Lou Roe and Mike Williams scored 21 and 20 points, respectively, as No. 2 seed Massachusetts used a smothering defense which forced 14 first-half turnovers and 39 percent shooting from the No. 15 seed Bobcats, leading the Minutemen to a 78–60 victory yesterday afternoon at the Kansas Coliseum.

It marked the first time since January, in a loss at Cincinnati, that two Massachusetts players scored over 20 points in the same game.

Massachusetts (28–6) advances to the second round game with No. 10 seed Maryland (17–11), which defeated St. Louis, 74–66, for the second time this season. The two teams met back in December at the Abdow's Hall of Fame Classic in Springfield, with the Minutemen winning 94–80 over the Terrapins.

With one minute left before half time and leading by eight (33–25) Massachusetts coach John Calipari urged his team to hurry up the offense so that the Minutemen would have enough time on the clock for another shot after a full possession by Southwest Texas State. Williams obliged and pulled the trigger on a 23-foot jumper, sinking it, and pushing the Massachusetts lead to 36–25.

After the Bobcats' trip down the floor proved fruitless, Williams struck again and tickled the twine once more from long range as the final seconds of the first half ticked off the clock. The 6-foot–2 guard from Hartford, Conn., hit on 4-8 from the three-point range in the first half, tallying 17 points to lead all scorers at the break.

His final two shots turned an eight-point Massachusetts bulge into a commanding 39–25 edge; the Minuteman advantage dropped under double-digits only once more in the contest.

"With one minute to go, we always try to get two quick shots off to their one shot. Basically, that first shot I took, I was trying to get it off so we could get another shot," Williams said.

"Thank goodness we did the 2–for–1 to end the half. Mike is smart enough to get it off quick," Calipari said. "He came down, and for Mike, when you cross half-court, and take one dribble, that's a shot, which he took and made."

Massachusetts out–rebounded Southwest Texas State 43–32 – the 18th time this season that the Minutemen were victorious when they won the battle on the glass.

However, the physical play and muscle of the Bobcats inside the paint impressed not only Calipari, but his players as well.

"I was really impressed with Southwest Texas State's aggressive play. They never backed down," Calipari said. "Every time I thought we were ready to break it wide open, they made another run. I'm not sure if we've played a team short of Kentucky that attacked us inside like they did."

"They did a real good job on the blocks. They were more physical when they were looking at the ball," said Roe. "I had more blocks on me today than I did all season. That was one of the most physical teams we have played all year."

The Bobcats had eight blocked shots, three for forward Lynwood Wade (17 points, eight rebounds) and reserve Eric Moore. Southwest Texas State's team total marked the most blocked shots against Massachusetts all season long; the previous high was six blocks, accomplished four different times.

Southwest Texas State limited Roe to five points in the first half on 1–6 shooting from the floor. Roe admitted that the Bobcat defense frustrated him and took him out of his game, leading to his fourth foul with 12:08 to go in the contest.

"Their job defensively really got me frustrated and I started fouling. I had to slow myself down and think about what to do to get myself going in the second half," said Roe.

The difference in the game was Massachusetts' outside shooting; inside, where the Minutemen usually dominate, the teams were only separated by seven points (UMass held a 44–37 advantage). After firing at 34 percent in the first half, Massachusetts turned it around in the second, shooting 62 percent from the field.

"Right now is all about finding a way to win," said Williams. "If they take away the inside, and Lou doesn't get going, we have to take it from the outside."

Tip–off for the Minutemen–Terrapin tilt will be at 4:40 p.m. EST. The game will be nationally televised live on CBS.

Player of the Game

Mike Williams

Williams led all scorers with 21 points. The 6–foot–2 Hartford, Conn., native hit 4–8 shots from three–point land in the first half alone, and led all scorers at the half with 17 points. While Lou Roe and the rest of the boys had their hands full with the Southwest Texas State frontcourt, Williams stepped his play up a notch, and led the Minutemen to an 18–point NCAA Tournament first round victory. Maryland, St. Louis?

Maryland next for the Minutemen

By SEAN P. HAYDEN
Collegian Staff

WICHITA, Kan. — One question lingers as the University of Massachusetts prepares for its first round game with the Southwest Texas State Bobcats: Who's next — St. Louis or Maryland?

As this reporter also prepares for the Minutemen, he's learning that Massachusetts' road to the Sweet Sixteen isn't going to be as flat and smooth as Interstate 35, the highway leading to Wichita.

Could be Maryland. Would the Minutemen prefer to play the Terps — the No. 10 seed defeated by 14 way back when in the Abdow's Hall of Fame Classic.

Joe Smith hits a pull–up jumper, Maryland up by seven.

Smith is Maryland's calling card. The fabulous freshman post player who came out of nowhere, this season casts a huge shadow over the best crop of centers to come into college since the days of Patrick Ewing and Mel Turpin.

Rasheed? Outplayed him. Cherokee? Double–doubled on him. Montross? Took him to the hole and then ate his lunch. Othella? Only had 26 and nine against him. Officials' time out with 7:03 left in the first half, Maryland 23, St. Louis 13.

"Plain old Joe Smith" has received every award from the Heisman to an Oscar. First team All–Atlantic Coast Conference over Montross, National Freshman of the Year by the U.S. Basketball Writer's Association of America and Dick Vitale. By the way, Smith also garnered ACC and ECAC Rookie of the Year honors.

Think Minutemen forward Donta Bright would like to have another crack at the Terps? Against his cousin's team (freshman guard Keith Booth), Bright played what might have been his worst game of the year in the Abdow's final, hitting one of four shots for four points with four turnovers in 21 minutes of action.

Three and change left in the first, Terps by 13.

Maryland Coach Gary Williams presents an interesting scenario for Massachusetts. He, too, was a hot commodity before settling down in College Park. If Waldman with the hoop and the foul, St. Louis cuts the lead to six.

Williams took Boston College to the Elite Eight in 1985 and could be out to try and stop the bleeding of his former school, which has been under siege and constantly draws the short end of the stick in comparisons with the Minutemen.

Could be St. Louis and its brand of "Spoonball." The Billikens, much like Joe Smith, came out of nowhere this season. Would Massachusetts want to play another team from the Great Midwest — a conference it is winless against this year? Exree Hipp for three, Maryland back up by double digits.

The Billikens have National Coach of the Year Charlie Spoonhour, who in his second season has taken the team from a 5–23 record two years ago to a 23–5 (pending the outcome of this contest) total this year.

Spoonhour led the school to its first NCAA appearance since 1957, but has taken five Southwest Missouri State squads to the Big Dance. Erwin Claggett treys it up, 54–46 Terps.

The Billikens have one of the most successful players in the nation in junior guard Hwaldman. Waldman played two seasons for Jerry Tarkanian at UNLV, where he racked up a 60–3 record before probation set in. Waldman's career winning percentage is .912 and he suffered his longest personal losing streak this year when the Billikens lost back– to–back games against Dayton and Cincinnati.

Booth turns it over, the Billikens cut it to five, and Williams screams at his bench.

SLU has cheerleaders who wear green garters around their thighs in honor of St. Patrick's Day and who cheer very enthusiastically, much to the delight of the large Billiken contingent in attendance.

A match–up with Spoon's boys could be to the advantage of Massachusetts, as the tallest player on St. Louis' frontcourt is 6–foot–8 Evan Pedersen. Scott Highmark goes 6–foot–5 with power forward Donnie Dobbs, a bulldog of a player at 6–feet–3 inches. They do, however, have a sub named David Robinson, but he's only 6–6.

Joe Smith hits two free throws with 36.1 seconds left to give Maryland a 72–66 lead. It's rematch time.

Spring teams back into action over break

By MICHAEL REISS
Collegian Staff

With an abundance of snow still smothering the region, it's hard to believe the spring sports season is under way for some University of Massachusetts teams.

While a few sports have already started their seasons, the others have been working hard, preparing for their opening day. Here's a look at what the squads will be doing over Spring Break (with last year's record in parenthesis):

Baseball (18–21):

Yesterday, the team left school at 6:30 a.m. on its way to Tampa, Fla. The team flew out of Bradley International Airport, and hoped to practice in the afternoon before playing its opening game of the season against South Florida at 7 p.m.

South Florida has already played 20–plus games this year.

The team will also play in Lakeland against Lafayette (March 18), Ohio State (the March 20 and March 23) and Florida Southern (March 21).

On March 19, the team travels to Winter Park to meet Rollins, and then travels to St. Leo's the next day. On March 22, the squad will play a doubleheader against Florida International University.

Overall, Coach Mike Stone's team is scheduled to play nine games on the trip.

Softball (33–20):

Coming off a 33–20 season, Coach Elaine Sortino and the softball team hope to continue its winning ways this season.

The softball squad traveled down to Florida as well, and will participate in the Florida State Tournament starting March 18. After that tournament culminates on March 20, the team will take part in the Pony Invitational.

The Pony Invitational stretches five days — March 23 to March 27.

The Minutewomen are scheduled to play their first home game April 1 against Rutgers, the first contest of a six game homestand.

Women's lacrosse (0–8):

In its first full year back after a three year hiatus, the women's lacrosse team is back.

Last year, the team played an eight–game schedule. This season, the team is scheduled to play 15.

After having the Springfield Invitational (March 6) and Springfield Tournament (March 12) called off due to the weather, the team played its first competitive lacrosse Wednesday scrimmaging Holy Cross in blizzard–like conditions. The squad opens up its regular season Saturday, hosting Boston College.

"This is the first full year [women's lacrosse] has been back," said first year Coach Francesca Den Hartog. "That's why it's exciting, things look so good."

STEVE PEDULLA / COLLEGIAN

The University of Massachusetts softball team is just one of the many teams competing over spring break, as they head south to play in the Florida State Invitational this weekend.

Men's lacrosse (10–5):

The Gorillas open up against No. 5 Virginia Saturday, and play Friday at St. John's. The Friday game was originally scheduled to be played in Amherst, but due to field conditions, the site was switched.

Men's and women's tennis (0–0, 3–3):

The men's team opened up on March 12 at Vermont, going up against Northeastern, Vermont, Harvard and UNH. It was a gutsy team effort, but the squad fell in all four matches. This is the first year back for the men's program in two years.

The women's team opens up April 1, traveling to Vermont. Both teams will head to Nick Bollettieri's Tennis Academy in Bradenton, Fla., to train.

Men's, women's track & field (3–1, 4–0):

Both teams open up their season April 2 in a tri–meet against Vermont and Maine. Throughout the year, both squads have been conditioning and working hard, preparing for the upcoming season.

A potpourri of thoughts on national hockey

As of this writing, Wayne Gretzky is only three goals short of surpassing Gordie Howe's record of goals scored. Howe says the 100–plus goals he scored while playing in the World Hockey Association should count toward the record so "Mr. Hockey" should be well ahead.

I'll buy that as long as the National Football League allows all of the touchdowns Herschel Walker scored with the USFL's New Jersey Generals to count toward his NFL totals.

If the playoffs started today, there would be an excellent chance the Bruins and Pittsburgh would meet in the first round of the playoffs. There is something wrong with a system that guarantees one of hockey's five best teams lose in the first round.

If you're wondering why the N.Y. Rangers are looking in the rearview mirror, it's because the New Jersey Devils are right on their tails. One question: Which goaltender do the Devils ride in the playoffs? Spectacular rookie Martin Brodeur and solid veteran Chris Terreri give Coach Jacques Lemaire a pleasant problem.

The St. Louis Blues got what they wanted when an arbitrator awarded the Vancouver Canucks Craig Janney in return for the Blues' signing of restricted free agent Petr Nedved. Vancouver had wanted Brendan Shanahan, a poor– man's Neely, in return for the disgruntled Nedved.

Stay tuned as Janney, currently injured, plans to block the deal claiming that the NHL had no right to move him because the league and Players Association have no bargaining agreement.

Unsung player of the year? Rangers' Adam Graves, who is quietly closing in on the Ranger record of 50 goals, currently held by Vic Hadfield. The soft–spoken winger does everything from penalty killing to forechecking to powerplay duty.

Remember this name: Greg Louder. The University of Notre Dame goaltender is Edmonton property and may sign after graduation this May.

With Bill Ranford a likely payroll casualty, and no one at the team's farm club in Cape Breton ready to step in, Louder could be the goalie of the future for the Oilers. A four–year starter with the Irish, Louder has seen more rubber than the Indianapolis Motor Speedway.

Here's a vote for Jim Schoenfeld as Coach of the Year. Sure, Mike Keenan has turned the Rangers around, no one expected Roger Neilson's Florida team to be this competitive, or Bob Gainey to have Dallas in contention. But no coach has turned a team around faster than Washington's Schoenfeld. The Caps were sinking and the former shot–blocker–extraordinaire–turned –coach has Washington primed for a playoff run.

AL undecided on Israel

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — For the first time, the Arab League has ended a foreign ministers' meeting without agreeing Israel is the common enemy.

The 22-member organization postponed decisions on resolutions about Arab solidarity, security, the boycott against Israel and changing voting rules.

Almost since the league's founding in 1945 by seven Arab countries, solidarity against Israel has been probably the only common factor.

A league source said Sunday that participants could not agree on a common plan for Arab security because of differences on which countries constitute a threat, leaving each Arab nation with it own definition of the enemy.

Factory worker charged

TIJUANA, Mexico (AP) — The accused killer of Mexico's leading presidential candidate was a quiet factory worker who hoped his crime would win publicity for his pacifist views, those who knew him said.

Mario Aburto Martinez, a 23-year-old who worked in a factory near the U.S. border, was formally charged with first-degree murder on Friday. He faces a maximum of 50 years in prison if convicted. Investigators say he confessed to shooting Luis Donaldo Colosio during a campaign stop here Wednesday. It is not clear if Aburto acted alone.

Officials are still trying to determine a motive, and find out who is the serious young man who made few friends and is now being held in a maximum security prison near Mexico City.

Aburto seemed sane and told investigators he wanted media attention for his pacifist views, according to the state human rights ombudsman who sat in on the police interrogation the night after the killing. He and his family were devout Jehovah's Witnesses, a religion that teaches pacifism.

Gaviria wins OAS election

WASHINGTON (AP) — Colombian President Cesar Gaviria won election Sunday to head the Organization of American States after what his Costa Rican opponent says was an "imperialistic" campaign waged by the United States.

Gaviria defeated Costa Rican Foreign Minister Bernd Niehaus, 20-14, in a bitterly contested vote among OAS General Assembly members on a successor to Joao Baena Soares of Brazil as its secretary-general. Baena's second five-year term in the job expires in June.

Niehaus had arrived here last week claiming firm commitments from 21 of the General Assembly's 34 voting members in what was the first bid by Caribbean and Central American states to wrest the general secretariat away from South America in the OAS's 46-year history.

"One powerful member of the OAS tried to influence the vote," Niehaus told the General Assembly after Sunday's vote, blaming the United States for his loss.

Tanker driver burned

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — A gasoline tanker blew a tire and overturned Sunday, bursting into flames and setting the driver on fire. A man ran past a dozen onlookers to save the driver as he rolled on the ground in flames.

The Getty Petroleum Corp. tanker was carrying 12,000 gallons of gas when it crashed about 7 a.m. at the merger of Interstate 95 and 195, state police said.

The driver, Jack Ordner, 50, received third-degree burns over 50 to 60 percent of his body and was in critical but stable condition at the University of Massachusetts Medical Center, said Rick Piester, a spokesman for Rhode Island Hospital.

John Santos said he felt the impact of the rollover inside a nearby YMCA, where he works as a security guard. He ran out and saw a dozen people watching Ordner, who was on fire near the tanker. "I was screaming for people to drag him away, but no one did anything," Santos said.

Hebron rallying goes against army

By KARIN LAUB
Associated Press

JERUSALEM — Jewish settlers said Sunday they would defy an army ban and rally this week in Hebron, site of last month's massacre of 30 Palestinians. Israel's foreign minister hinted that the settlers will eventually be forced to leave the West Bank town. The settlers' pledge followed a weekend of clashes between settlers and soldiers around Hebron. Six settlers were arrested Saturday when they tried to push through army barriers, and five were detained when they fired in the air in response to being stoned.

The army's new tough stance against the settlers contrasts sharply with its earlier hands-off policy.

Foreign Minister Shimon Peres said Sunday that peaceful co-existence between Hebron's 120,000 Palestinians and 400 Jewish settlers became impossible after the Feb. 25 massacre, in which a settler killed 30 worshipers in a Hebron mosque.

Peres hinted that Israel would eventually force the settlers to leave.

"We cannot maintain absurd situations that are completely unacceptable," he said on Israel TV.

"To put 120,000 Arab residents under curfew to protect about 400 Jews ... We have to reach reasonable conclusions concerning our deployment in Hebron, not only from a military but also a civilian point of view."

Israel lifted a curfew Friday that had been imposed on Palestinians in Hebron since the massacre.

Settler leaders accused the government of cracking down on them to appease the PLO, which has demanded better protection for Palestinians as a condition for returning to talks on implementing autonomy in the occupied Gaza Strip and West Bank region of Jericho.

Environmental racism examined in UM study

By CATHERINE B. PULLEY

Hazardous waste is not more likely to be located in minority neighborhoods, according to a recent University of Massachusetts study.

The study was published in the scientific journal, "Evaluation Review," and swayed from the norm in saying that minorities living in neighborhoods with commercial hazardous waste facilities is no greater than in areas without such facilities.

"We looked at smaller neighborhood areas and found that facilities are more often located in census tracts that are white, working–class industrialized neighborhoods," said Douglas L. Anderton, director of the Social and Demographic Research Institute and a professor of sociology at the University.

The research was held at the Social and Demographic Research Institute and was funded by a grant to the Northeast Regional Public Health Center at the University of Massachusetts by Waste Management Inc., and sponsored by the Institute for Chemical Waste Management.

Anderton and Andy B. Anderson, also a professor of sociology, took a different angle than earlier studies.

The study examined the social and demographic characteristics of census tracts nationwide that have commercial Treatment Storage and Disposal Facilities and compared them to census tracts that do not have them.

The UMass study defies earlier claims that have led to regulations by the Environmental Protection Agency and a Feb. 11 Executive Order mandating federal agencies to take further actions to ensure "environmental justice."

FAC to get summer face-lift and repairs

Buckets lining the hallway in the Fine Arts Center to catch all the leaks have little time left as the FAC is due to receive major repairs following the spring semester.

By JACOB W. MICHAELS
Collegian Staff

The day after graduation, construction crews will be coming to the University of Massachusetts campus to begin renovations on the Fine Arts Center. The construction is expected to be completed in November. The majority of the work is being done in the summer so as to cause minimal disruption to the academic schedules of UMass students.

UMass and the state Division of Capital Planning and Operations are spending $2.85 million on the renovation. The construction firm of A. R. Green and Son, of Holyoke, was the lowest bidder for the job, and were recommended to receive the contract for the work.

The project will repair leaks in the plaza deck over the University Gallery, the Music Library and practice rooms, as well as the roofs of the Concert Hall, and the art department bridge, which contains classrooms. Skylights over the University Gallery and the entrance to the Speech Building are also being replaced.

The untiled sculpture by Mauro Staccioli on the FAC steps will also be removed. The piece was temporarily put there in the fall of 1984, during an exhibition of Staccioli's work. In order to cause visitors to see the space around the FAC in a different light. The sculpture will be dismantled, with the steel parts sold as scrap.

The University Gallery temporarily closed on March 20 because of the repairs. It will reopen in Sept. 1995 with exhibitions celebrating the FAC's 20th anniversary.

While the Gallery is closed, it plans to program its film and video series, guest lectures and performance–based events at other locations on campus.

Also during the closed period, the Gallery plans to inventory and recondition the University's permanent collection of American 20th century works, and redesign storage and technical areas for collections.

The Gallery is also planning to refurbish public sculptures that it maintains by Stephen Antonakos, Richard Fleishner, Robert Murray, Jeffrey Schiff and George Trakas.

Passover celebration starts

Numerous events commemorate the Jewish holiday

By JACOB W. MICHAELS
Collegian Staff

For millions of Jews, the holiday of Passover began at sundown on Saturday, March 27. Passover, or Pesach in Hebrew, celebrates the Jews' freedom from slavery in Egypt.

According to the Torah, the first five books of the Bible, the Jews were slaves to the Pharaoh in approximately 1200 B.C. They prayed to God to deliver them from their bondage to Pharaoh, and God sent 10 plagues to punish Pharaoh for not freeing them.

After the final Plague, when the first son born to each Egyptian household was killed, Pharaoh relented and allowed the Jews to leave. However, shortly after the Jews left, he changed his mind and sent his army to bring them back.

The Jews fled to the edges of the Red Sea, where they seemed to be trapped. However, God split the sea, allowing the Jews to pass, and when the Egyptian army tried to follow, God caused the sea to return to normal, killing them.

Prior to the beginning of Passover, Jews clean their houses of all leavened foods, or Chametz. During the holiday, they eat only unleavened bread, commonly known as Matzoh. This is done because when the Jewish slaves fled Egypt they didn't have time to let their bread rise.

How long Passover is celebrated for depends on what type of Judaism one is a part of. Reform Jews celebrate for seven days and Conservative Jews celebrate for eight.

On the first two nights of the holiday, Jews eat a ritual meal, called a Seder. During the meal they read from a book, called a haggadah, to guide them through the Seder.

The haggadah tells the story of Passover, as well as what is done to remember that time. Passover is a very family– orientated holiday, and everyone at the Seder, including children, take turns reading from the haggadah. The youngest child present is supposed to read the Four Questions that ask why this night is different from all other nights.

Maydad Cohen, a Freshman Political Science major, said, "During the Seder, it's cool. It's fun because everyone gets together. You can get drunk with your parents."

During the week of Passover, all of the dining commons will have Matzoh available, and the Kosher Dining Commons, at Hampden, in Southwest, will be having Kosher–for–Passover meals. There will also be a Multicultural Seder sponsored by Hillel House on Wednesday, March 30.

Contest sends call for yodeling's finest

By CATHERINE B. PULLEY
Collegian Staff

YODEL LAY HEE HOO!!

Yodel: v. to sing by suddenly changing from a natural voice to a falsetto and back; also to shout or call in a singing manner.

Yodelers and wanna–be yodelers, here is your chance at 15 minutes of fame. A national "Yodel Contest" will be held by Care Free Sugarless Gum in which yodelers can dial a toll-free number and try to win a trip to the Alps.

According to senior product manager Hunter Macfarlane, any yodel from standard to outrageous is appropriate.

"They should yodel like they've never yodeled before," said Macfarlane. He also said callers should feel free to add humor to their yodels. "We don't want just serious yodels."

According to Care Free, anyone can yodel. People who are blessed with powerful throats and controlled breathing have a leading edge in becoming a true yodeling virtuoso.

Since yodeling is a form of music, contestants can use any type of music background to their yodels. The contest suggests backgrounds from bluegrass and salsa, to calypso and swing.

Some of the most famous voices in the world have yodeled. Frank Zappa, Gene Autry, Julie Andrews and John Denver have tried their hand at the earliest form of mountain communication. Even Jazz is hip to yodeling with Leon Thomas working yodeling into his style during the '60s and '70s.

Yodeling was originally used to imitate the sounds of nature and is usually associated with Switzerland. The custom is catchy, and can be found in America, Australia, Africa, the South Pacific Islands and China.

"After recently living in Switzerland, I found that yodeling was not a thing of the past," said Sarah Boast, a psychology major at the University of Massachusetts, who spent last semester in Geneva, Switzerland. However, Boast has not tried yodeling herself.

American yodeling emerged from a 19th century tradition of cowboys yodeling to "little dogies" to calm them from strange frontier noises. Yodeling can even be a sound of romance. Nachtbueba (boys of the night) often yodeled in pursuit of Swiss Maidens.

All yodelees can enter the contest until April 1 by dialing 1–800–94ALPINE. Contestants have 60 seconds to give their

Tornado destroys Alabama church

PIEDMONT, Ala. (AP) — A tornado struck a church during a Palm Sunday service, killing 17 people and injuring at least 90. The roof at Goshen Methodist Church collapsed about 11:30 a.m. during the service, state trooper Byron Morris said.

About 140 people were in the church north of Piedmont in eastern Alabama when a string of tornadoes moved through the area. Officials feared that some might be buried.

More than 100 rescuers dug for survivors by hand, then called in cranes to lift the roof and continue the search.

"They won't know until they lift the roof if anyone's left underneath," said Delois Champ, a spokeswoman for the Calhoun County Emergency Management Agency, which was coordinating the rescue.

Tornadoes did heavy damage elsewhere in the area, including damaging other churches.

French journalist to visit UMass

Bernard J. Marguerite, a longtime Warsaw correspondent for French publications, Le Monde and Le Figaro, will be on–hand to discuss the current situation in Poland.

Marguerite worked for Le Monde in Warsaw from 1966 to 1971. He was expelled from Poland and returned for Le Figaro from 1977 to 1987.

Since that time Marguerite has reported from Warsaw for French television and for French and Swiss radio. The author of more than 2,000 newspaper articles, he has collaborated on books on Austria and on planning in Eastern Europe.

The talk, which is free and open to the public will take place on March 30 at 8 p.m. in room 116 of the School of Management building. it is sponsored by the department of Slavic languages and literature and the Program in Soviet and East European studies.

Donation pumps up polymer lab

The instron Corporation of Canton, Mass. is donating $236,000 worth of equipment and software to the University of Massachusetts for undergraduate and graduate teaching laboratories.

Some of the equipment will be installed in the new Silvio O. Conte Polymer Science Research Center, which is slated to open in September. The building is part of a nationwide initiative to maintain the country's competitiveness in the polymer science field.

The Instron equipment includes advanced materials testing equipment and computers, in addition to software. it will update the civil, mechanical and polymer science laboratories. Students will be able to test for fatigue, tensile, compression, fracture mechanics and other engineering properties with computer control and data analysis.

Instron President and CEO James McConnell said, "We are proud to support engineering education through this joint effort, which will enable the University to train students with the latest in technology and better prepare our state and nation to build future growth and innovation in the global marketplace."

Third annual foreign language day coming

The third annual foreign language day returns to the University on Wednesday April 13 from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. It is co–sponsored by the Office of Undergraduate Admissions and the College of Humanities and Fine Arts.

The event will provide sophomores and juniors from high schools across the Commonwealth with an opportunity to "get a taste of the many opportunities for foreign language study — inside and outside the classroom — at the University," according to Lee Edwards, dean of the College of Humanities and Fine Arts.

High school students and teachers can visit the state–of– the–art language facilities at UMass and talk to students in foreign language or international studies programs offered by the University.

More goodies from the Millipore Foundation

In keeping with this trend, the Millipore Foundation of Bedford, Mass., will also bestow gifts upon the departments of food science and polymer science. Both departments will receive high performance liquid chromatographs, with polymer science and engineering also scoring a gel permeation chromatograph.

Both types of chromatograph are used to separate and analyze chemical compounds. The combined value of the gifts is $133, 625. Those designated for polymer science and engineering will be housed in the Silvio O. Conte Polymer Science Research Center.

I checked in to the Rusty Nail Motel and asked the owner if he knew of any swinging sushi bar deli joints where I could hook up with a fix of Toka Maki and Knockwurst on Rye. "The eternal question," he said, "is how to get the mouse out of the bottle." I thanked the wise old man and checked into room six sixty six. I opened up my suit case cum brown paper bag and pulled out the Collegian. "We put the mouse in the bottle."

Specialist concerned with the arrival of African bees

By TRACY MONAHAN
Collegian Staff

African bees are on their way and a University instructor has information on how to keep safe.

"The problems associated with the Africanized bee are serious," said Richard Bonney, a cooperative extension specialist at the University of Massachusetts.

Bonney teaches beekeeping at the University and said the New England area should beware of Africanized honeybees that have already been spotted in the southern regions of the United States.

"They cannot be ignored. Many beekeepers and appropriate authorities have not yet been accepted the potential scope of the problem and their feet are dragging," he said.

According to Bonney, the bees naturally travel about 300 miles per year and will slowly make their way north.

The commercial importation of honey bees to pollinate New England crops such as apples, blueberries and cranberries could speed their impending arrival, Bonney said.

Commercial pollinators, beekeepers who keep thousands of bee colonies for agricultural use, send their colonies down south for the winter. Bonney said it is possible that these hives could become "contaminated" by Africanized bees.

"The Africanized bees may or may not be able to survive the cold winters in the north," Bonney said. "Nonetheless, beekeepers and the public alike need to learn about them so steps can be taken to protect native bees, and to prevent a widespread panic."

Africanized bees are the offspring of bees imported from Africa and brought to Brazil in 1957. The African bees were though to be better pollinators and better honey–producers, so an attempt was made to cross breed them with native bees.

The African bees were characterized by their extreme aggressiveness and were prone to excessive swarming.

"What's different about the Africanized bees is that it takes very little to provoke them," Bonney said. "they defend themselves in force — 50 to 100 bees at a time, that often follow a perceived enemy for a long distance.

"The large number of stings is what can prove fatal to humans and other animals," he said.

Bonney said beekeepers should only use queens of known breeding to replenish their hives. They should also participate in local efforts to control Africanized bees to prevent restrictions on beekeeping.

Bonney recently published his second book, Beekeeping: A Practical Guide. He said this is a how–to manual for beekeepers. He is also the author of Hive Management: A Seasonal Guide for Beekeepers.

ing the industrialized neighborhoods there are higher percentages of minorities. This explains why earlier studies found what they did," said Anderton.

Anderson stated that the national findings do not disprove the existence of environmental racism.

"These results should not discourage the efforts to assure environmental justice," said Anderson.

The study also found differences in regional areas of the country. The southeast, with a higher percentage of African– Americans, is more likely to have hazardous waste facilities in areas with a larger concentration of African–Americans even at the "tract level".

In the southwest, facilities are more likely to be in tracts with larger portions of Hispanics. For other reglons, there are either no significant differences, or the neighborhoods with facilities have lower percentages of minorities.

Charles Pope, supervisor of the Piedmont Health Care Center nursing home, said displaced residents were sent to the Piedmont Civic Center. The National Guard Armory was used as a temporary morgue, Champ said.

The National Weather Service had issued a tornado watch for the area earlier in the morning and a warning, with a twister spotted on the ground, about the time the roof collapsed.

The talks have been suspended since the massacre. Israel radio reported Sunday that a vanguard of several dozen Palestinian police will deploy in Gaza and Jericho on April 5. But Palestinian negotiator Saeb Erakat said he hadn't heard of an April 5 deployment date and said security for Hebron needed to be worked out before autonomy talks could resume.

Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization are to meet Tuesday in Cairo, Egypt, to work out final details of a Hebron security force, which is to include Palestinian police and Norwegian observers.

Chancellor's Awards For Multículturalísm

On behalf of the Chancellor, you are invited to nominate an outstanding individual most worthy of recognition for his or her contributions toward a diverse, multicultural campus. A Certificate of Appreciation and four $1,000 awards will be presented at a special event to honor and celebrate their achievements.

One award each will be presented to an undergraduate student, a graduate student, a staff member, and a faculty member of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst. Faculty members are invited to use their award for research or scholarships.

Criteria will be based upon: (a) original contributions to the University; (b) attainment of high priority objectives; (c) crises of "beyond the call of duty" service; (d) achievement of significant improvements in the area of teaching or curriculum development; and (e) promotion of the awareness of multicultural issues and concerns.

Nominations should be written and include specific reasons or examples based on the above criteria, along with biographical and other pertinent information (including a resume or vitae, if possible) regarding the nominee's current position on campus.

Nominations should be submitted by
FRIDAY, APRIL 1, 1994

The ugly truth about NAFTA

In the time I have been a political columnist, if there is one lesson I've learned more than any other it is that I am not always right.

Last fall, I endorsed the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) on the grounds that the economic growth created in both Mexico and the United States would help the poorer classes of both countries to become better–off. The only problem with that argument is that it was not true. And natives of Mexico proved that to the United States on the day that NAFTA went into effect, Jan. 1, 1994, at a place called Chiapas.

> Well–meaning Americans were tricked into believing that NAFTA would mean more jobs. All it really means is more money for the richest Mexicans and Americans, and further poverty for laborers in both countries.
> Peter J. Orvetti

For every dollar a worker in Chiapas earned in 1981 — and that was not many dollars to begin with — that worker earned only 43 cents in 1992. Imagine making half as much as you did a decade ago while living in one of the richest states in the country.

Chiapas produces 80 percent of Mexico's oil, and half of the country's hydro power. One third of the 3.5 million people are illiterate, and one tenth of newborn infants die before their first birthday.

Chiapenecos rose up in revolt on New Year's Day. One guerilla said, "The free trade agreement is a death certificate for the Indian peoples of Mexico, who are dispensable for the government of Carlos Salinas de Gortari..."

Salinas, who fooled many Americans, including myself, into thinking he was a liberal reformer similar to Bill Clinton, sent in the military and crushed the rebellion. Amnesty International investigators report that there were at least nine summary executions, dozens of rapes, and that more than 400 people were killed. The Salinas regime claims that only 100 were killed.

Salinas' ruling Partido de la Revolucion Institucional (PRI) has dominated Mexico for 65 years. Elections are rigged, and each president chooses his own successor. In Chiapas itself, PRI candidates regularly win 110 percent of the vote in elections — there are more ballots in the voting boxes than there are voters.

The official PRI–appointed head of labor in Mexico has called for exterminating all Chiapenecos who were involved in the rebellion.

Yet the United States still supports the Salinas dictatorship and calls it democratic because it suits the aims of industry. Well–meaning Americans were tricked into believing that NAFTA would mean more jobs. All it really means is more money for the richest Mexicans and Americans, and further poverty for laborers in both countries.

There is some hope in Mexico, though. The Partido de la Revolucion Democratica (PRD), a pro–worker party, has a real chance at some success in the next election. Of course, PRI will just stuff more ballot boxes. And when it is all over, Bill Clinton will say that the election was completely fair. He can afford to — Clinton has sold out the laborers of the United States to help the business interests that bought him the presidency, and there is no pro–worker party here to challenge him.

To the laborers of America, and to the fallen but not defeated Chiapenecos, I offer my apologies. I was fooled by NAFTA. You were not. And you were right.

We cannot believe everything that we read in the newspapers or see on the nightly news. We certainly cannot believe everything that a president — American, Mexican or otherwise — tells us is the truth. We have to make the extra effort to seek out the facts, not the sound bites, through alternative media as well as that of the mainstream.

You can't believe everything you read. And, in my case, I can't believe everything I've written.

Sega is hazardous to studies

This is a cry for help. A few weeks ago, my roommate and I purchased a Sega Genesis. It seemed like a good idea at the time, especially at the low, low price of $69.99 (after manufacturer's rebate, of course). We set up our system, marvelled at the great graphics and wondered why we hadn't thought of getting one earlier. After two weeks of nothing but John Madden's NFL '94, I realized that I am a certifiable Sega addict.

> If it were warm out, I'd go for a run. If I had any money, I'd catch a show. If I had any brains, I'd spend quality time at the library. But, alas, I end up sitting in my room wasting time. I put on a little Miles Davis and play yet another Sega game.
> A.J. Stewart

I've spent so much time playing Madden, I'm beginning to think that there will, in fact, be a six–week exam on it. Perhaps it will be something along the lines of a pass, punt and kick competition.

Whatever the exam's format, I'm much more confident in my Sega prowess than my Stats 140 ability. The only thing I know about statistics is that 16 of 25 is a pretty good passing day, and that three yards per rush just won't cut it.

The worst part of my addiction is not just the fact that I'm falling behind in my classes. To be perfectly honest, I'd get behind if I spent my free time crocheting potholders. I have decided that the reason I always start slowly is similar to runners or race car drivers. It all comes back to wind drag. I save my energy for finals week.

No, the hardest part of my addiction is that there is no end in sight, because all my friends are hooked as well. I am surrounded by Sega madmen, people who slam doors after close losses and who scream at video games. After a recent game, one of those friends exclaimed, "I can't believe I lost to the bleeping Vikings! They're a bunch of scrub masters galore!"

We take our Madden seriously around here. We have an eight–person league that plays a full 16–week schedule — plus playoffs. Consider that it takes 45 minutes to play each game, not to mention the hours of thought that goes into strategy (Maybe I should set him in motion on the end around) and you'll see how easy it is to spend entire days and nights pushing buttons and exhausting one's vocabulary of expletives.

How bad have things gotten, you ask? I've been in fights with my girlfriend because I decided to play while she was visiting me. I actually contemplate starting a game at two in the morning, knowing full well that I have an eight o'clock class. I talk to my players, urging them towards peak performance — "You gotta catch that ball!" or "Run faster, you stupid bleep bleep bleep."

I think about Sega when I'm going to the D.C., while I'm reading the paper or taking a shower. I think up game plans all the time. I think I told my girlfriend (only somewhat jokingly) that I preferred Sega to sex. She whacked me pretty hard. Lately, it seems I think of Sega more than sex, although this approach does keep me out of trouble. No Sega ever wanted a call in the morning.

I swear I am not some sort of video game geek, as pathetic as I might sound. If it were warm out, I'd go for a run. If I had any money, I'd catch a show. If I had any brains, I'd spend quality time at the library. But, alas, I end up sitting in my room wasting time. I put on a little Miles Davis and play yet another Sega game.

Last week, I searched frantically through the course handbook to see if I could minor in Madden '94. I swear I have enough hours in it. It seems safe to say that I won't be making an appearance on the Dean's List anytime soon, and Sega doesn't look as good on a resumé as I thought it would (yes, I tried putting it on mine — under skills).

And as much as I would like to keep writing this column, it's only a matter of time before I start chanting, "It's in the game!" Sadly, I know that there are better ways to spend my time.

I vaguely remember those heady days when I had a life. Sega has changed all that. I need help.

Opinion

Mysteries of the male species

There are many wonders in the world. How was the world created? Is there life in space? Why do men do the things they do?

Question No. 1: Why do men flip the channels at warp speed and why do they need to dominate the remote? Watching TV with a man is frustrating. The minute a commercial comes on, he flips the channel. He holds the remote with a vice–like grip and flips through the channels at such a speed that you don't know what you are flipping through!

I have diagnosed it as "The Clicker Disease," and it affects a large chunk of the male population. I long for the day I can watch one program and one channel. My only comfort in going to the movies is knowing that the screen won't change during previews.

Question No. 2: Why do men say they are going to do something and not do it? This is not applicable to all men, but the ones who say the immortal, "I'll call you tomorrow."

Question No. 3: Why do they leave the toilet seat up? I live in a house with 42 women, but there is one visiting man that always leaves the seat up. Have you had the experience of going to the bathroom in the middle of the night and almost falling in because someone left the seat up? Suffice to say it is not pleasant.

Question No. 4: Why are men sensitive about their hairlines? So, you look like a future client of Sy Sperling? If you meet a woman that doesn't love you because you are losing your hair, she isn't worth it.

Question No. 5: Why are men surprised that we find someone else when we break up? When I broke up with my last boyfriend, I shed my tears, and met someone else. Some men expect their old flames to shrivel up or move to a convent when they break up. If you decide to see other people, why does he get mad when you do?

Question No. 6: Why do they swear they love us natural, but when Cindy Crawford comes on television they drool? I would like to speak for all women in saying no woman looks like Cindy on the cover of Cosmo. Not even Cindy looks like Cindy on the cover of Cosmo. If I had a make–up artist, a fogged lens and photography touch–ups I could look like that.

> What happened to good honest men? I can't find them. Lately I have been thinking about sending myself roses with a card that says, "Thanks for all the wonderful times. You are the best woman that has ever lived. I love you, Lazarus."
> Catherine B. Pulley

Then there is, "You look fine, you don't need to lose weight." We know you are lying. But if you didn't, there would probably be a higher homicide rate.

Question No. 7: When you send them to Dairy Mart why do they take an hour to get three things? The traditional male–bonding ritual is the trek to Dairy Mart at two in the morning.

My last Dairy Mart disappearance happened when my significant other and a friend went to "get a few things." They were gone for 45 minutes! What were they doing? When my friends and I go, it's a five–minute stay at best. I have walked in at night and seen men roaming the aisles in search of something. In search of what?

What happened to good honest men? I can't find them. Lately I have been thinking about sending myself roses with a card that says, "Thanks for all the wonderful times. You are the best woman that has ever lived. I love you, Lazarus."

Lazarus Sexius is my dream man. He is my Greek god lost in a sea of mortals. He looks like the man in the Preferred Stock ad, and keeps an attractive facial scruff. He will sweep me away from men that are ravaged by the Clicker Disease and send me cards that are small scale novels. Oh Lazarus, Lazarus, where are you?

Lazarus will call me when he says he will and he will not leave the toilet seat up. He will let me hold the remote. He will know how to communicate with women. He will cook me breakfast and will not be intimidated by my independence, my career and my goals.

And when I decide to see other people, he won't get mad about it.

St. Patrick's parades should be inclusive

To the editor:

I agree with the assertion of your guest columnist, Justin Doyle ("Parade and politics clash," Collegian, March 17) that Irish Americans should not be subjected to discrimination based upon sexual preference.

This is precisely why GLIB have fought so tenaciously for our right to take part in the Evacuation Day/St. Patrick's Day Parade held annually in South Boston.

We have been accused of trying to turn the parade into a "protest march" when all we want is to celebrate our Irish heritage, something which we hold in common with the South Boston Allied War Veterans' Council, who until this year served as the event's sponsors.

We have chosen not to set aside our identities as gay men, lesbians and bisexuals for the sake of marching in the parade because we are only too well acquainted with the effect socially–imposed invisibility can have on us as individuals. I am referring here to the recent tragic death of a noted South Boston politician who, forced into a closeted life, sought comfort in the arms of strangers. One of those strangers robbed and murdered him.

Massachusetts' Supreme Judicial Court, in ordering the Veterans' Council to comply with a law forbidding them to exclude us on the basis of our sexual preferences, did nothing more nor less than uphold our rights as citizens of the Commonwealth. They chose to forfeit the parade rather than comply with the Court's order; it was their decision, not ours, which caused the parade's cancellation.

In recent years, St. Patrick's Day parades in Dublin, Galway and Cork in ireland, as well as San Francisco, New Orleans and other cities across this country, have included contingents of gay, lesbian and bisexual Irish men and women. Next year, Boston's will join them.

Says UMass faculty displayed hypocrisy

To the editor:

I am writing in response to the letter printed in the March 9 issue of the Collegian entitled "Faculty reject tactics used by Farrakhan," in which professors Sam Bowles, John Brentlinger, Ann Ferguson, Nancy Folbre and Everywoman's Center staff members Sandy Mandel and Carol Wallace condemned the Honorable Minister Louis Farrakhan, claiming that his rhetoric is "hate–filled" and that he "invents lies in order to garner support for his organization." By writing this letter, the very professors who know (or should know) how the media distorts the message of and misrepresents leaders like Minister Farrakhan have perpetuated the lies created by the monomaniacal media machine instead of exposing them.

When someone as articulate, intelligent and powerful as Minister Farrakhan brings to the attention of the white community its history and continuing legacy of racist practices, we often react defensively or with guilt — usually trying to skirt our racism by hiding behind reactionary claims of sexism and anti–Semitism.

Instead of vilifying leaders of the African American community, we should be responding to the injustices perpetuated by the white community and proactively changing the historical environment which allows Minister Farrakhan to be systematically harassed for speaking out against the people and system which abuses, denigrates and murders poor people and people of color the world over.

Rather than inflaming the hypocrisy and lies of both the media and our University administration, these esteemed faculty would better serve their professed "anti–racist" cause by addressing the wrongs perpetuated by their own students and community. African Americans have a right to decide for themselves and by themselves who can best represent them.

Alternative faves Pavement at Pearl St.

By MATT AUDETTE
Collegian Staff

Who would have thought? Three short years ago the lads from Pavement were playing their songs in their parents' living rooms. Today their music is on MTV right between Counting Crows and The Cranberries. Not bad for a bunch of self–proclaimed slackers, who to this day don't even have permanent addresses.

Tonight the Valley will have a chance to experience the phenomenon for itself, as Pavement take the stage at Pearl Street in Northampton, for what may be the band's only area appearance.

Mixing some of the best elements from alternative music's grab bag of tricks (you can hear definite traces of The Fall, Pixies and The Velvet Underground in their music, often within the same song), the band has singlehandedly managed to reinvent "pop" music as we know it, and turn it into something fresh and exciting.

Formed in 1989 by lead singer Steve Malkmus (whose nervous warble is the stuff legends are made of) and his pal Spiral Stairs (a.k.a. Scott Kannberg), the band began recording obscure pop songs, which were often drenched in lo–fi static and quirky guitar noise. Most of these "diamonds in the rough" were released on 7" by the ultra–hip Drag City label, and were recently re–released last year on the Westing (By Musket and Sextant) compilation.

While only a handful of critics noticed at first, the buzz was loud enough for independent label Matador Records to perk up its ears. The label released the band's astounding debut effort Slanted And Enchanted, a glorious hybrid

Caleb picks TV tops: 'Seinfeld,' 'NYPD Blue'

It's awards time, folks. The Grammys, the Oscars, the Espys, the American Music Awards and many other prestigious and not–so–prestigious ceremonies have taken place recently. Today, it is time to unveil the winners of the biggest awards of all, the first annual On The Tube Awards for the 1993–94 television season.

On the Tube
By Caleb Cochran

Best Comedy: Hands down, it's "Seinfeld" (NBC, Thursday, 9 p.m.). Every week, it's original and hilarious. While the show's claim to fame is that it is about "nothing," "Seinfeld" is a much more realistic and down–to–earth interpretation of everyday life than shows with more complex plots. I'm not saying that the storylines of "Seinfeld" are always realistic (see the episode in which Jerry and Kramer drop a Junior Mint into a man's stomach while observing an operation). However, the magic of "Seinfeld is that it takes seemingly mundane and insignificant bits of daily life and makes them the premise of entire shows (see the one in which Elaine is peeved at a woman who won't share the toilet paper).

The characters of Jerry, Elaine, George and Kramer now seem as familiar as old friends, and the writing is as strong as ever. I read an interview recently in which Seinfeld said that the show would be over long before anyone expects it to be. Say it ain't so, Jerry. You've got a lot of good years left.

Best Drama: Again, an easy choice. While I'm at it, I might as well give this one Best New Show as well. Stumped? You shouldn't be. "NYPD Blue" (ABC, Tuesday, 10 p.m.) is perhaps the best show on television, period. David Caruso (Lt. John Kelly) is the man who makes the show go. He's brilliant as the hard–ass cop who can handle anything and as the off–duty ex–husband who can't. Kelly is still scarred

Byrds founder Roger McGuinn brings his aura to the Iron Horse

Legendary Byrds founder Roger McGuinn.

By ED HURLEY
Collegian Staff

It's not every day that you can see a legendary rock musician in an intimate setting playing solo acoustic. But today is your lucky day. Roger McGuinn, founder of the legendary '60s mega-group The Byrds, will play solo acoustic at the Iron Horse in Northampton tonight.

Roger McGuinn has enjoyed a long and fruitful career in popular music. He founded The Byrds, a rock group that took the lyrical strength of folk music and fused it with electric background music to form a new and extremely popular form of rock music. The Byrds' influence can be seen to this day in today's new incarnation of folk-rock music.

The Byrds have a long list of memorable songs including the majestic "Turn, Turn, Turn," the jazzy "Eight Miles High," and the humorous "So You Want to be a Rock'n Roll Star."

But probably their most memorable song is their cover of Dylan's "Mr. Tambourine Man." Their cover gave Dylan a lot of exposure. Some people in fact cite The Byrds as the main reason for Bob Dylan's transformation from a solo, folk artist to an electric rock'n roller. Fans of Dylan would surely have seen Roger McGuinn's stirring version of "Mr. Tambourine Man" at the Bob Dylan tribute concert.

McGuinn has enjoyed solo success as well. In 1990, he released Back from Rio, his first solo album in almost a decade. The album title was a joke on the name change he underwent in 1967 from Jim to Roger. Some people thought Jim McGuinn went to live in Rio to escape the pressures of the music industry. His first single off the album King of the Hill, which was co-written by long-time friend Tom Petty, went to the top of the rock charts.

Besides popular success, McGuinn has garnered his fair share of awards. Some of these include being inducted into the Rock'n Roll Hall of Fame, the 1992 L.A. Rock Award for best folksinger and the Edison Award (the Dutch version of the Grammy).

But today Roger McGuinn prefers to tour solo, acoustic and without fanfare or hype. He enjoys a quiet life in Florida, away from the pressures of the music industry. He is also working on his autobiography.

So if seeing a rock legend armed only with an acoustic guitar and his voice sounds good to you, check out Roger McGuinn at the Iron Horse tonight. Seeing Roger McGuinn play a variety of Byrds' tunes as well as some of his own solo work is a treat for any music fan.

Roger McGuinn will play the Iron Horse In Northampton tonight at 7 p.m. Tickets are $17.50.

of loose, squealing guitar riffs and catchy pop melodies, to critical acclaim. The album later went on to be picked as the best album of 1992 by the editors of "Spin," and the second best in the annual Pazz and Jop Poll of the "Village Voice."

With their latest album Crooked Rain, Crooked Rain and the first single "Cut Your Hair" saturating MTV's Alternative Nation, it seems as if the band is poised to be the biggest thing since that little old band from Athens, Georgia, lost their religion. Who would have thought?

Pavement bring their melodious sounds to Pearl Street upstairs tonight. Tickets are $8 in advance, $10 at the door. Show starts at 8p.m. Oh yeah, it is 18+. Sorry kids.

from the shooting death of his dad, also a cop, and the recent breakup of his marriage. Both of these events have left Kelly vulnerable, yet he always appears tough as nails. He's respected by peers, revered by crooks and loved by those who know him well. In short, he's the quintessential Good Cop.

Kelly appears even more saintly when compared with his partner, the sloppy, irritable, vulgar, temperamental and hilarious Andy Sipowicz (Dennis Franz). Sipowicz is constantly on the verge of suspension and breakdown after being shot, drinking himself into oblivion and having numerous run-ins with his boss. The show's funniest lines are invariably spoken by the gutter-mouthed Sipowicz, who charms viewers with lines such as "I'm goin' to take a dump." He's a broken man with a bad attitude, but a character who deserves sympathy nonetheless.

I'm not one for overkill, so these are the only awards I'm going to present. If you want to attend the ceremony for the On The Tube Awards, it will be held tonight in the Campus Center Basement. Caruso and Seinfeld are expected to be in attendance.

Boss Hog: Clinton roots for his Razorbacks

DALLAS (AP) — Biting his nails and chomping on ice, First Hog Fan Bill Clinton cheered and winced and chortled and argued his Arkansas Razorbacks basketball team to victory in Sunday's NCAA Midwest regional final.

"I really get into the game," he admitted in a clear case of understatement.

With Arkansas leading Michigan's Wolverines by nine points at the midpoint of the game, Clinton had reason for cheer in a halftime interview.

The Razorbacks wound up winning 76-68 and moving on to the Final Four national championships. Clinton rushed onto the floor at the buzzer to give the Arkansas coach a high-five.

He did not visit the locker rooms, however, choosing to get in the air as soon as possible to continue his vacation — in San Diego.

"It's a very good basketball game," he had declared at half-time. Giving credit to the Wolverines, he added, "Without an enormous amount of depth, they're playing incredible defense." When things went well, Clinton was pumping his fists and chatting with his wife and daughter. When calls didn't go Arkansas' way, however, the president shouted his displeasure, pouted a little and waggled his finger disapprovingly.

Clinton was clearly counting on Arkansas advancing to the Final Four and beyond, saying he'd "tried to work it out so that I can go to both games."

Clinton is featured in a recent Sports Illustrated article hailing him as "The First Fan" of basketball.

"It's a fabulous game, isn't it?" Clinton told the magazine.

Your Horoscope

By Jeane Dixon

ARIES (March 21-April 19) You can choose a new line by tuning your efforts in a clear direction, but be certain to sustain interest in your ideas until results are obtained. Ignore distractions while doing important work.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) An old friend offers you an opportunity that deserves serious consideration. An encounter with a new acquaintance seems somewhat mysterious. Expect to find out more in the very near future.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) You may have to handle two distinctly different propositions simultaneously. A business partner insists you take on an assignment that will require all of your energy. Pace yourself to get everything done.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Postpone signing contracts or committing to new projects. You need more data. A new friend may urge you to invest in a business enterprise. Wait at least two days before deciding.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Not a good week to make major changes at home. You cannot afford to go on a spending spree. Be careful not to give a newcomer the wrong impression. Show loyalty.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Good financial news starts the day off right. Give events time to develop, then let a friend advise you on how to evaluate new opportunities. Use a windfall to build a firm foundation.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) Do not make promises you cannot honor or seek concessions that are out of line. A proposed plan turns you. Happily, you are free from group obligations.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) A heady mixture of extravagance, unrealistic promises and friendly bungling could prove quite expensive. Cool your relationship with someone who acts self-centered.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) An offer comes from an unexpected quarter. Accept an undesirable assignment if you want to protect your job. Better still, think about starting a business of your own. Your expertise is valuable.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) A long-hidden problem related to your work or love life could be revealed. Be diplomatic when discussing someone's weaknesses. You will win new admirers. Put your credit cards out of easy reach.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) Authority figures may not be willing to compromise. A wait-and-see approach will work best. Your ESP is right on target. Avoid power plays. On the domestic front, your voice will be heard.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) Working side will help you accomplish great things. Cleaning yourself behind closed doors enables you to get a project on the launching pad quickly. Seek new allies.

Art Stapleton on Minuteman Basketball

So it's over — the season that was supposed to be the best ever for the Massachusetts men's basketball program simply became the second NCAA tournament disappointment in a row for the Minutemen of John Calipari.

Massachusetts was knocked out by Gary Williams' upstart Maryland team in the second round at the Kansas Coliseum in Wichita. The show that hit the road just four days earlier was derailed. No Final Four in Charlotte. No Sweet Sixteen in Dallas. The contingent from Amherst was going home yet again with the bad taste of a defeat at the hands of an ACC squad.

Last season, it was the Virginia Cavaliers and their strong interior play that sent the weakened Minutemen packing. This year, though, was going to be different. After a rigorous weight-training off-season and a regular season which included landmark wins for the program, Massachusetts was primed to make a run. The coaches believed. The players believed. The media believed. All three made the fans believe.

That's what makes this one hard to swallow.

Heading in, the Minutemen said they knew it was one and done. You lose, you go home. Lou Roe wanted to go to the Final Four; he told a minute crowd in the Curry Hicks Cage the night before the team departed for Kansas so.

But Massachusetts lost to Maryland in the second round. The Minutemen were the highest seeded bunch to get bounced that Saturday. Granted, some of the players didn't give up. Freshman Marcus Camby dominated the Terps' sensational phenom Joe Smith, scoring 32 points; even though the game was over, the Minutemen didn't quit. Refuse to lose, right?

It wasn't good enough. There was no scoring production from the Massachusetts backcourt. Derek Kellogg was sick. Edgar Padilla's a freshman who can't be expected to light it up in such a pressure situation. Mike Williams' roller coaster hit a valley after halftime. Another close-call defeat was in the cards; however, this time it was a game of $2 pick-up.

The season was history. There was no next time. Massachusetts players now looked forward to really competitive games at the Horseshoe. It's hard to look forward to next season without hesitating and remembering this one.

Massachusetts beat North Carolina in November and it was an incredible win for the University. Boston College defeats North Carolina in March and allows a lot of know-it-alls from Chestnut Hill to laugh at Massachusetts.

The Eagles can take Williams' three-pointers that beat North Carolina and Temple. You can have Camby's last- second jam which slammed George Washington at the buzzer in the Mullins Center. Why couldn't we get that one against the Terrapins in Wichita?

Calipari said during the Atlantic 10 tournament that the regular season and the conference schedule is only a prep for the Big Dance: the NCAA tournament.

What is he supposed to say now after his team loses in the second round? Obviously, it is a disappointment for all concerned. The turn-around this program has taken under Calipari has been amazing. Enough said. The pieces were in place this year to survive and advance and it didn't happen.

Roe, Kellogg and Williams have one more year left. They were here for the best Minuteman run ever. it would be a shame if they never improved on that Sweet 16 season. Camby's back, with Donta Bright, Dana Dingle, Padilla, Carmelo Travieso, Jeff Meyer, Ted Cottrell, Rigo Nuñez — all eight plus the trio back on the court next season. Add Tyrone Weeks and Massachusetts should only improve.

My time on the Massachusetts basketball beat is done. I have one request for Calipari and company: change the slogan for next year. Refuse to Lose?

Nah, how 'bout "Refuse to Get Bounced in the Second Round for the Third Straight Season?"

Lacrosse splits over break

Gorillas beat St. John's, fall to fifth-ranked Virginia

By ANDREW BRYCE
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team spiit two games on the week of Spring Break, losing to No. 5 Virginia 20–6 and defeating St. John's 15–7.

The Gorillas (1–1) plunged from their originai No. 8 ranking down to No. 1S after the Virginia loss, but should be in good shape after the win against the Rednien.

The Virginia game, played at the neutral site of Hofstra University on March 19, was all but over at the half. The Cavaliers (2–1) jumped out to a 5–1 lead, before embarking on a 10–goal run, making it 1S–2 at the half.

"Virginia was definitely a quality team," said senior captain Kenny Randazzo. "If we had more time and it was later In the season, it probably would have been a much different game."

UMass played Virginia evenly in the second haif, hoiding them to just five goals in the final two periods of play. The Gorillas scored four goals in the second half.

Freshman Brendan Glass led the Gorilla attack with two goals and an assist, while senior Wes Depp and junior Dennis Kelly each chipped in with a goal. The Gorillas had 42 shots on goal, while the Cavaliers pulled off 50.

The Gorillas then traveled to Jamaica, N.Y., to take on St. John's this past weekend. The Saturday game was originally scheduled to be played at Garber Field here on the UMass campus, but the poor field conditions forced the Gorillas to hit the road.

No big deal for the Gorillas, as they cruised out to a 3–0 lead after one period of play. Senior Jim Byrns initiated the UMass attack, scoring an unassisted goal with 6:32 left in the first period. Adding to the scoring punch of the first period were the freshman Glass and junior Mike Valente.

Glass, the 1993 Massachusetts high school Attackman of the Year, scored his second goal of the game in the second period, increasing the UMass lead to 4–0. A Mike Suzuki goal soon after put the first points on the board for the Redmen with 6:14 left, with the Gorillas taking a 7–2 halftime lead.

Just like the Virginia game, it was all but over — except now, it was in favor of UMass. St. John's failed to get any closer than five goals the remainder of the game.

Senior midfielder Greg Kline had a game–high three goals and two assists, and sophomores Buddy Hoffman and Erlc Bailey each scored two goals. Goaltender Tom LoPresti had 18 saves for the Gorillas.

"It was a good game for us," Randazzo said. "We played a little better than the Virginia game, but we still need to improve. We need to play on a real surface to improve."

The Fleet Invitational awaits UMass as it heads to Providence, R.I., to take on Hofstra University.

"Hofstra is a reaiiy good team. The Brown–Syracuse game is big, but we're still going to concentrate on Hofstra," said Randazzo.

Prospect Gaffney commits to Massachusetts hockey

By MATT VAUTOUR
Collegian Staff

At this point last year the University of Massachusetts hockey team had no coach and no players. One year later, a potential NHL draft pick has verbally committed to playing his college hockey as a Minuteman.

At 6–foot–1, 210 pounds, Mike Gaffney will add size and speed to the UMass defense.

The Worcester, Mass., native has been a stalwart on defense for St. John's (Shrewsbury, Mass.). In his junior year he helped lead the Pioneers to their best finish ever, placing fourth in Greater Boston's elite Super Eight tourney.

Gaffney was recruited by Northeastern, Merrimack and Providence, but following a recruiting visit, which included watching the Minutemen beat Salem State, Gaffney decided that UMass was the place for him.

"It seems like a great situation," said Gaffney. "Coach Mallen was very up front and honest with me. He told me It would be a lot of work, but he would give me every chance possible to earn a spot."

The Mullins Center is proving to be a great recruiting tool for UMass.

"It's a great facility," said Gaffney. "It wasn't the most important part of my decision, but it's certainly part of it."

It appears that the NHL could be in Gaffney's future as the big defenseman has been projected as a possible third–round pick.

"it's exciting," Gaffney said about his possible NHL chances, "but I just play and try not to think about it."

UMass will enter Hockey East for the 1994–1995 season. Mallen has stressed the need for players with size and strong skating ability for UMass to be able to be competitive in arguably the toughest division in college hockey. It appears Gaffney will fill those qualifications.

"My skating has helped me along," said Gaffney, who will enter the University in the fall as an undeciared major. "The combination of my size and speed have been my best features."

Gaffney has shown some offensive brilliance as well, scoring seven goals and 18 assists in his senior season, leading some observers to think that his future may be as a forward.

"I prefer defense," said Gaffney, "but what ever the coaches say I'll do."

An NHL prospect at UMass? The program has come a long way.

BC fans wait in vain for tix

By ROB GLOSTER

NEWTON, Mass. — Michael Downes and 38 of his closest friends sat in the rain Sunday, watching Boston College on television and waiting to be first in line for tickets to the Final Four.

They waited in vain.

The students set up dorm couches and chairs on the concrete steps leading up to the Conte Forum, where they expected tickets to go on sale after the Eagles had taken care of Florida in the NCAA East Regional final.

They propped a TV on a mini-refrigerator loaded with icehouse beer, then huddled under blankets and sleeping bags. One of the students brought a box of doughnut holes, another went out for pizza at halftime.

On Palm Sunday, many students at the Jesuit school had their mind on more worldly concerns.

Downes was prepared to sleep on the spot all night to guard his place in line for a trip to the Final Four in Charlotte. He was wearing multicolored shorts, the same ones he wore during Boston College's improbable defeat of North Carolina a week earlier.

"I have my lucky shorts on. I was wearing these last week when we beat UNC — but, of course, I was inside then," he said, pulling a yellow blanket back over his bare legs.

Aias, the shorts could not pull Boston Coilege through. The Gators won 74-66 and earned the trip to Charlotte that Downes, a senior from Ridgewood, N.J., had been set to make. On Palm Sunday, a holy day for Roman Catholics, many students at the Jesuit school had their mind on more worldly concerns.

Even those students who waiked out of the Church of Saint Ignatius of Loyola carrying palm leaves following the midday mass had a little extra spring in their step. The service ended at 1:35 p.m., five minutes before tipoff.

"This, believe it or not, takes precedence," said John Burns, a senior from Trumbuli, Conn., who was sitting next to Downes. "We forgot all about Palm Sunday. We will pay our penance."

Razorbacks on to Charlotte

By OWEN CANFIELD

DALLAS — The Arkansas Razorbacks gave President Clinton a display of their versatility Sunday as they beat Michigan 76-68 in the Midwest Regional final, denying the Wolverines their third straight trip to the Final Four.

Clinton, his wife and daughter watched from third-row seats as Arkansas (29-3) advanced to its first Final Four since 1990, when it lost to Duke in the semifinals. The Razorbacks will play in West Regional champion Arizona on Saturday in Charlotte, N.C.

Michigan (24-8) lost despite 30 points and 13 rebounds from Juwan Howard. The Wolverines had reached the title game the past two years, losing last year to North Carolina and in 1992 to Duke. Corliss Williamson, quiet much of the day, made two big baskets inside during a late stretch and Scotty Thurman made two free throws with 17.3 seconds left to hold off Michigan, which had cut a 14-point deficit to two.

Thurman, who finished with 20 points, made both ends of a one-and-one to give the Razorbacks a 73-68 lead. His free throws came after Jalen Rose missed a 3-pointer with 20 seconds ieft that would have tied the score.

The Wolverines missed another 3-pointer with 11 seconds left and Clint McDaniel finished the scoring for Arkansas with three free throws.

Michigan trailed 47-33 three minutes into the second half before working its way back into the game. An 8-0 run cut the lead to six, then Arkansas outscored the Wolverines 8-2 to lead by 11.

A 3-pointer and a driving shot by Jimmy King got Michigan started on a 17-8 streak that brought the Wolverines within a basket, 63-61, with 5:33 left.

Michigan had a chance to tie moments later when the Wolverines stole the ball, but Rose missed the breakaway layup. Arkansas responded with an inside basket by Darnell Robinson and two by Williamson to get the lead back to six with 3:23 left.

Michigan got no closer than three after that.

Robinson scored 14 and Williamson had 12. Williamson hit six of his 10 shots, making him 53-for-72 in his seven-game NCAA tournament career. His 73.6 percentage is the highest in tournament history. The record had been held by Bill Walton, who shot 68.6 percent in 12 tournament games.

Gant talk continues as Sox train for the summer

By HOWARD ULMAN
Associated Press

FORT MYERS, Fla. — Former Atlanta slugger Ron Gant is interested in playing for Boston and the Red Sox are interested in having him.

Boston general manager Dan Duquette said Sunday the Red Sox tried to contact Gant's representative to present an offer but no one answered the telephone.

He said it would take "a team with significant revenues" to try to sign Gant. "That narrows it down."

Duquette had said he believes three other teams might go after Gant, who could be out all season after breaking his leg in a dirt-bike accident.

"I talked to him a couple of times" since he was released in spring training, Boston center fielder Otis Nixon, who played with Gant in Atlanta, said. "I thought there was going to be some interest (by Boston) in him coming over to the ballclub and he was comfortable with it.

"I know I would like to have him. The man's got a tremendous amount of ability and a half of Ron Gant is just as good as some of the guys that are out there now."

PITCHERS' PROGRESS: Pitchers Danny Darwin and Paul Quantrill made progress since their last appearances, although neither was outstanding in Sunday's 8-7 loss in 10 innings to the Minnesota Twins.

Darwin allowed five runs, 10 hits and four walks in six innings. He was the first Boston pitcher to go six innings this spring. Quantrill relieved him and gave up one unearned run, three hits and two walks in 2 2/3 innings.

"Danny was all right. His location was better than his last outing," Boston manager Butch Hobson said. "Quantrill was a little better. He was working on his mechanics."

In his previous appearance, Darwin allowed two runs and five hits in five innings. In that same game, Quantrill faced seven batters and gave up seven hits. In his next outing, he allowed four runs on four hits in one inning.

TIRESOME TWINS: Hobson said he would prefer not to play the Twins as often next spring. The two teams, both based in Fort Myers, have met seven times this spring. Boston won the first two but the Twins have taken the last five. Boston is 12-11-1 overall. He said he was sure Minnesota manager Tom Kelly "is about as tired of seeing me as I am of seeing him. He might not be. He whipped us the last five times, so maybe he'd like to play us tomorrow."

In those five games, the Twins have 42 runs and 70 hits.

ODDS AND ENDS: Boston pulled off its third double steal in three games in the fifth when Billy Hatcher stole third and Lee Tinsley made it to second. Hatcher then scored on Mo Vaughn's sacrifice fly. ... Andre Dawson broke an 0-for-11 slump with a single on his last at bat. ... Aaron Sele and Jason Bere, the top rookie pitchers in the American League last season, face each other Monday when the Red Sox play the Chicago White Sox in Sarasota.

Say What?

"I dare someone to wear a Florida cap on this campus."

ANC and Zulus clash

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Chaos hit the heart of Johannesburg today when gunmen, including African National Congress guards, fired at hundreds of spear-wielding Zulus marching to protest South Africa's first all-race election.

Witnesses and police reported as many as 28 deaths from black factional clashes downtown and in outlying areas.

In the worst incident, guards at the ANC's national headquarters shot into a crowd of Zulus that a spokesman claimed tried to storm the building. A witness said he saw nine bodies.

Coming a month before the election, the bloodshed was a turning point in the country's political warfare. It was the first time serious violence that has plagued the country's black townships for years moved into the center of South Africa's biggest city.

U.S. gives aid to El Salvador

WASHINGTON (AP) — After spending billions of dollars over 12 years to defeat leftist insurgents in El Salvador, the U.S. government now is giving them millions to help finance their land purchases and business endeavors.

The former rebels, once derided by the Reagan administration as left-wing terrorists bent on infecting the hemisphere with Marxism, have become part of the U.S. foreign aid portfolio.

Members of the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front, or FMLN, are to receive a share of the $300 million that the administration has targeted for El Salvador over five years, said Mark Schneider, AID assistant administrator for Latin America. The FMLN's one-time foes from the Salvadoran military also are eligible for some of the aid.

One example: Several dozen leftists, including three female FMLN commandantes, laid down their arms to launch an organic coffee cooperative.

If it seems ironic the United States is lending support to forces it tried so hard to defeat, Schneider says El Salvador requires just as much readjustment as the post-Cold War relationships in the rest of the world.

King sues L.A. for damages

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A soft-spoken Rodney King got down on a courtroom floor Monday, re-enacted portions of his 1991 beating by police and told jurors: "I felt like I had been raped."

As batons smashed into his head, "I felt like I had lost half of my face. ... I could hear my bones crunching every time the baton hit me," he testified. "It sounded like throwing an egg and hearing the shell crack."

When officers hogtied and dragged him to the side of the road, "I felt like a cow that was waiting to be slaughtered, like a piece of meat," he said.

"I was just so scared. I felt like I was going to die." King was testifying in his $9.5 million lawsuit against the city of Los Angeles.

House hearing on Whitewater nixed

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House Banking Committee chairman said today he's "not interested in protecting anyone" in the Whitewater affair, and defended his decision to cancel what would have been the first House hearing on the subject.

Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez told a news conference the committee would conduct hearings "at the proper time and under proper circumstances" - not, he said, while Republicans planned to "create a donnybrook" and interfere with a special counsel. Gonzalez' comments did not concern the broad, Whitewater hearings the House voted to hold if the bipartisan leadership agrees on a time and format.

The Texas Democrat referred to legally required hearings on the savings and loan cleanup agency, which were scheduled March 24 and then cancelled by Gonzalez.

Trustees to support 2 percent increase

By JUSTIN DOYLE

While the Student Government Association waits for the decision on fee increases by the Board of Trustees next week, their fight with the legislature has not yet ended.

On March 16 the Board of Trustees Committee on Administration and Finance decided to recommend a 2 percent increase in fees for all state universities at the full board meeting on April 6. The committee also voted for a zero percent increase in tuition at the UMass' five schools.

"The committee will make the recommendation that students costs won't increase more than two percent combined tuition and fees," said Lynn Robitaille, the student coordinator of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy.

The committee voted five to two in support of the recommendation by Michael K. Hooker, president of the five–campus system.

"Hooker proposed a 4 percent increase in student fees and a 4.9 percent increase in curriculum fees, to go along with the zero percent increase in tuition," said Robitaille.

SGA will fight the fee increases at the upcoming meeting. The Save Our Schools Committee is planning to travel to Boston.

"The SOS Committee is going to Boston for the April 6 meeting to try and stop the Administration and Finance Committees recommendation from passing," said David Nunez, SGA president.

As SGA and SCERA await the Board of Trustees decision, their focus turns to fighting the state legislature for an increase in funding.

"The five–campus system is asking for a 7 percent increase in state appropriations for the fiscal year 1995," said Robitaille. "This would work out to about to be a $22 million increase.

"If the state legislature gives the university a 7 percent increase, there will be a rollback on fees to zero percent, and the University will get the rest of the money through state revenues," said Robitaille.

Plane crashes on campus

Pilot not hurt badly in mishap; inquiry will follow

By GERI SAHN

Last Wednesday, a plane crashed near the Wysocki House — which is a little less than half a mile from the Lederle Graduate Research Tower — at the University of Massachusetts campus.

Gary Hafensteiner, 44, of Ballston, New York, was able to escape the small two–seat Cessna 1S2 plane with minor injuries. No one on the ground was hurt.

The plane crashed in the field behind the building, east of the Wysocki Farm, at 4:13 p.m. Wednesday afternoon. The pilot was fiying from Manchester, N.H., back to Schenectady, N.Y. Wysocki House is used for student housing offices.

Karin Sherbin, a UMass spokeswoman, said the plane landed then crashed in a field, skidded and flipped onto its roof.

George Gomez, manager of family housing at the Wysocki house, said he was unable to see the crash because it was out in the woods. He refused to give further comments on the incident.

According to the UMass police log, Hafensteiner said his aircraft was low on fuel and he tried to land the plane. Sherbin said UMass police, state police and the Federal Aviation Administration were further investigating the incident.

The actual cause of the crash will be determined by the National Transportation Safety Board in three to six months.

Hafensteiner was taken immediately to Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton, where he was treated and released.

State budget may be difficult to balance

By ROBERT W. TROTT
Associated Press

BOSTON — Sluggish revenue collections and the harsh winter's effect on the state's economy could spell trouble for the state, a top Weld administration official said Monday.

Administration and Finance Secretary Mark Robinson said Gov. William Weld might have to take additional steps to balance the books on fiscal 1994.

Weld could tap the state's $325 million "rainy day fund," or use executive powers to cut state spending. And Robinson did not rule out layoffs of state workers, calling it possible but unlikely.

"We haven't reached the point yet where we want to sound the alarm," Robinson told the House Ways and Means Committee.

Robinson said the state would have a much better idea about its books after March tax collections are tallied in a few days.

March is a significant tax-collecting month because many bank and corporation payments are due, and personal income tax payments begin rolling in.

Last March, the state collected $979.3 million.

Robinson said state revenues are on track to increase by 7.9 percent during the current fiscal year, but only by 4.9 percent in fiscal year 1995.

He attributed the slowdown to federal tax increases, defense spending cutbacks that affect Massachusetts and restructuring of the health care industry.

The Legislature is considering a supplemental budget that includes $55 million in winter emergency money for the state and communities to pay for salt, plowing and other expenses.

In December, the state Supreme Judicial Court settled a decade-old tax case in favor of a man who had charged that the Department of Revenue denied him a $20 million tax abatement from 1983. With interest, the judgment came to $47.3 million.

That loss, added to snow emergency expenses and February tax collections that were $35 million below what collectors expected, has many some lawmakers anxious, said committee Chairman Thomas Finneran, D-Boston.

Latina Week celebrated at Smith

By SONIA PAZ

Last night at Smith College, Nosotras, a Latina organization kicked off the first night of their annual observation of Latina Week.

During this week Nosotras will celebrate the diversity of latino culture in the United States. "During Latina Week, everyone will be represented", said co-chairperson Keva Barton–Toledo, "not just Mexico and Puerto Rico, but people from South and Central America will be represented as weil."

REBECCA PETERSON / COLLEGIAN

Monica Palacios, a comedienne participating in Latina Week at Smith College.

Nosotras has existed at Smith College for some time now, recently it has become highly visible as a political force. Four years ago, the group sponsored the first Latina Week, celebrating the women of the Latino culture. Since then topics and speakers in the week long event have dealt with everything from Latinos and AIDS, the AFL/CIO, homophobia, racism, and the images of Latinos in the media.

The first night of Latina Week was started with a performance by comedian Monica Palacios. Palacios, a Los Angeles based comedienne has been instrumental in the developing of the all–Latino comedy troupe, Culture Clash, and she was also the director of VIVA's HiV/AIDS outreach project.

Her autobiographical performance, entitled Latin Lezbo Comedy Show, tackled a vast array of topics facing the Latino Community. With her sense of humor, Palacios talked about racism, sexism, homophobia and the way they affected her life growing up and how they later her coming out process.

"I preferred using the phrase gay woman instead of lesbian, that word disturbed me", said Palacios during her show, "instead of lesbian I liked the word precious. If men could be gay then I was precious! I later realized that I was making a big deal out of nothing, it's the American way!"

Aside from focusing on her sexuality, Monica Palacios also spoke on her experience of trying to break into show business as a Latina. After attending an endless number of auditions, Palacios came to the conclusion that "Latino actors get their start by sticking their foot in the back door."

She began to realize that her call backs were all to audition for the role of the maid. After this she began to get involved in organizations that would promote change, for example she became involved with gay and lesbian, women's, Latino and other political organizations.

There will be other events during Latina Week at Smith College. On Tuesday, March 29, University of California at Berkeiey Professor Yolanda M. Lopez will speak on Chicana Women and Art in the Neiison Browsing Room at 4 p.m.

Wednesday, March 30, is Latina Food night in the Davis Bailroom, where different foods from all over Latin America will be sampled. Mayra Santos–Febres from Cornell will speak on the Politics of Location in Afro–Latino Academia in Seeley 106 on Thursday, March 31 at 7 p.m.

Latina Week will close on Friday April 1. The event for this night is Noche de fiesta Latina in the Davis Ballroom. The party will start at 9 p.m. and will end at 1 a.m. The five–college community is welcomed to attend any and all of the events to learn more about the diversity of Latino Cuiture.

Babies, toddlers and preschoolers will be playing fun and educational games for child development researchers in the psychology department at the University of Massachusetts.

Children from the ages of six months to five years of age will be participating in numerous activities for different research groups.

Richard Bogartz and Rachel Clifton, professors in the psychology department, are researching how babies learn to coordinate both hearing and sight with touch in order to reach for something they hear or see.

Carol Beal, professor of psychology, is researching whether preschool and kindergarten children can be actual eyewitnesses or not.

Research will also be done on children's earliest memories. Professor of psychology Cindy Speaker will be testing whether toddlers can remember what happened to them months or several weeks ago.

Karen Yanowitz, professor of psychology, will be studying what the most effective ways are to teach pre–schoolers problem–solving techniques.

Carol Beal, associate professor of psychology, said the projects are very interesting for the parents and entertaining and fun for the children.

The experiments will take place in a very comfortable, informal playroom for about 30 minutes long. Such things as toys, puppets and games will be present throughout the researching.

The children who participate will either get a toy, T–shirt, or a

United States Representative and alumnus Peter Torkildsen has returned to the University of Massachusetts and is staying in Van Meter and eating in the Franklin Dining Commons.

He is not taking classes. Torkildsen, the first alumnus to serve in the United States Congress, has been named the Eleanor Bateman Alumni Scholar in residence and will be living on campus until March 29.

While Torkildsen attended UMass he lived in Kennedy, was active in the Board of Governors and Student Government Association, and was the editor of The Spectrum. He worked at McDonald's in Hadley to "pay the bills" and wrote a couple of articles for the Collegian.

"I enjoyed my time at UMass," said Torkildsen. "Much of my world view was shaped here at UMass–Amherst."

Torkildsen graduated in 1980 with a degree in political science. He graduated from the Kennedy School of Harvard University in 1990 with a masters degree in public administration.

He was elected to congress on the Republican ticket

Campaign reform bill upcoming

Common Cause and legislators fight to pass law first

By MARTIN FINUCANE
Associated Press

BOSTON — A citizens group warned lawmakers Monday it will put a campaign finance reform bill before voters in November if lawmakers don't pass one first.

"We would welcome a good, strong campaign finance reform bill passed by the Legislature. If, however, that action does not occur by May, we are organized and ready to hit the streets again for a vigorous ballot campaign," Common Cause Chairwoman Hannah Laipson told the Election Laws Committee.

Common Cause needs 11,715 signatures between May 18 and June 22 to put its proposal on the ballot.

The group collected more than 90,000 signatures in the fall to get to this stage of the petition process.

The Common Cause bill includes provisions that would ban gifts from lobbyists to legislators, lower the amounts individuals and political action committees can contribute to campaigns, and require campaign expenses to be spent on expenses directly related to campaigns.

"There's no question that the public is angry about business as usual on Beacon Hill. ... We don't anticipate a problem getting the signatures," said Common Cause Executive Director Nathan Gibson. Gibson said Common Cause had been trying to get reforms passed for about four years.

Sen. Stan Rosenberg, D-Amherst, co-chairman of the committee, urged his colleagues to act on campaign finance legislation so Common Cause would drop its petition.

"For the Legislature not to pass a reform law is to give cynics another reason to say we can't do our jobs," he said.

"With a referendum, a handful of people who are not elected will be drafting a law that can't be changed through the hearing process," he said.

Laipson criticized the House of Representatives for passing a bill in December that she said would "gut the Ethics Commission and continue the power of special interests."

Coed Naked Court Battle

By JEFF DONN
Associated Press

SPRINGFIELD — A lawyer for two students challenging a ban on some "Coed Naked" T-shirts opened a federal court challenge Monday by accusing their high school of misguided political correctness.

In a test of students' free speech, lawyer William Newman said the South Hadley High School's dress code should be rejected as too broad and vague. He said it lets teachers and administrators ban certain clothing according to their own subjective views.

"It's a question of whether it's politically correct," said Newman of the Massachusetts Civil Liberties Union. "It's based on personal political predilection."

Raymond Randall, a school lawyer, had earlier indicated that the "Coed Naked" shirts demean women. But he rejected the suggestion of political overtones Monday and made no mention of sexual harassment in his opening argument.

He said the school was simply acting to bar lewdness and vulgarity, and to promote an educational atmosphere. "A school clearly does have a right to draw a line," he said.

The school has struggled with its dress rules since 1991, when a group of students wore a T-shirt saying "Button Your Fly: Levi's 501 Jeans." The School Committee voted 3-2 to allow that shirt. The trial in U.S. District Court in Springfield centers on a "Coed Naked: Do It In Rhythm" T-shirt worn a year ago by Jeffrey Pyle, 18. When the shirt was banned, Pyle sued the school with his 16-year-old brother, Jonathan.

However, the school did allow the brothers to wear some other message shirts, including a homemade T-shirt that said: "Coed Naked Civil Liberties: Do It To The Amendments."

The older brother, who is now a first-year student at Trinity College in Hartford, Conn., said Monday that he wore the T-shirts to school to "demonstrate how silly censorship is and how inconsistently it is applied."

The boys' father, Chrlstopher Pyle, is a professor who teaches constitutional law and civil liberties at Mount Holyoke College in South Hadley. He sat beside his sons in the courtroom Monday, taking copious notes.

The school lawyer said the professor had been involved in "carefully selecting and crafting the shirts" to test the dress code and trick administrators "who don't know the subtleties of the law."

Approached by a reporter, the professor declined all comment Monday.

Scott MacHardy, president of Coed Sportswear in Dover, N.H., said dozens of schools have banned his company's "Coed Naked" shirts, but this is the first case to reach trial.

He acknowledged the sexual connotation in the shirt but added that lewdness is "in the mind of the beholder." He said the slogan "Coed Naked" is "just a catchy trademark," meaning nothing in particular.

Violence continues in West Bank

Six gunmen killed as talk of pullout grows stronger

By KARIN LAUB
Associated Press

HEBRON, Occupied West Bank — Israeli troops killed six Palestinian gunmen in the occupied Gaza Strip on Monday. Israel television meanwhile reported the army will be ready to pull out of Gaza by April 14.

The shootout between the Palestinians and the soldiers took place in the Jabaliya refugee camp north of Gaza City and marked the highest number killed in a day since Feb. 25, when the Hebron mosque massacre and subsequent unrest left 42 Arabs dead.

Palestinian reports said at least four of the dead belonged to the Fatah Hawks, the military wing of the Yasser Arafat's mainstream PLO organization. The other two dead were not immediately identified.

The army had no official comment on the shooting, but a military source confirmed the report. No further details were immediately available.

The report of the pullout preparations coincided with comments made by Foreign Minister Shimon Peres who said Monday that an autonomy agreement could be wrapped up by mid-April and be followed by a speedy troop pullout from Gaza and Jericho.

On the eve of resuming talks with the PLO, a senior army official said the military has already moved out much of its equipment from the soon-to-be-autonomous areas, and that it would only take a few days to complete the pullout.

Military officials told Israel television it would be completed in two weeks.

The army has dismantled several bases and moved equipment out of Gaza, although there has been no reduction in troop deployment. "Almost everything is finished," said a senior army official, speaking on condition of anonymity.

"If the government says it (the pullout) will take one week, it will take one week. If it says it should take one day, it will take one day," he told The Associated Press.

PLO officials were more cautious. They said Israel and the PLO first needed to agree on a security package for Hebron, including the size and authority of a Palestinian police and foreign observer force, before autonomy negotiations can resume.

Negotiators were to meet in Cairo on Tuesday, with Hebron - site of the mosque massacre by a Jewish settler - the first Issue on the agenda.

PLO spokesman Radwan Abu Ayash said there was a good chance of reaching agreement on the Hebron arrangements. "Then, nothing stands in the way to talk about the main issue, Gaza and Jericho," he added.

Negotiators are under deadline pressure. April 13 is the original target date for starting self-rule, and if the date passes without changes on the ground, it will further erode support for the peace talks among Israelis and Palestinians.

Hebron remained tense Monday, three days after troops lifted a month-long curfew clamped on the city's 80,000 Palestinian residents to block post-massacre protests.

Several dozen teenagers, armed with slingshots and some with their school bags on their backs, stoned soldiers posted at a street corner leading to Beit Hadassah, one of six Jewish enclaves in Hebron.

During a lull, two soldiers knelt in a shooting position and each fired a live round straight at the youths. Two U.N. refugee aid workers pulled up in a car and talked to the soldiers, who then walked away.

"We told the soldiers they should not open fire in such a situation. There was no danger to life here," said Ann Mertens, a U.N. Relief and Works Agency field worker from Belgium.

Use your forgotten voice

Voice.

It's deeper than simple speech. It's louder than the angriest roar. It's our strongest instrument for defending the weak and righting what is wrong.

Voice can stop wars, save relationships, and set up new rules for peers as well as superiors. Without this basic ability to stand up for what we believe in, this country would never have been born. And now the voice of America lies silent. Silent — silent in the media, and in the government; the poor don't have access, the middle class is pacified, and the rich are perfectly happy the way things are.

It can crush sexism, homophobia, racism and easily vanquish the arrogance that fills our communities. It is one asset that we can use and keep simply by speaking out.

Mike Einhorn

If someone controls a resource you care nothing about, that person has no control over you. Consider your voice as a resource. Consider all the people who control your voice, and your desire to use it. Who tells you what is important? Who gives you news, daily, with their own slant to it? Which class owns this communication media? At their level of influence, consider the mega-corporations who have the leverage on our law-making process. Consider that they spend millions on lobbying for or against change. These corporations, and the news medias, have a resource that is very important to you, and to me.

Voice.

In our country, legislation does not pass because it's "right" or "correct." It passes when it's intrinsically bonded with money. Our whole system — government, society and even the family — is so tightly bonded to money, that few things can get between it and us. "We need more love in our families," say our wealthy friends in the government. But they own the television stations that continue to emphasize wealth as the key to happiness. From cars to quiet dishwashers, they tell us what we need. I've never seen an ad for public transportation, or for hand-washing your plates.

The sad part is that we believe and trust this advertising voice since we not only purchase these products, but we over-consume with expensive cars, designer clothes, even brand-name sneakers. We fill our lives with things we don't even buy for convenience but, rather, to fit in, or to stand out. The voice of functional utility went out the window along with community and society, as crime increases and we separate with prejudice. A cycle that just might kill us all off.

But there is one thing we can reclaim. One powerful asset that can even things out and can smash down the barriers between races and religions. It can crush sexism, homophobia, racism and easily vanquish the arrogance that fills our communities. It can rebuild our ineffective welfare system, restructure an equitable financial aid program, and re-establish an effective system of justice and punishment. It is one asset that we can use and keep simply by speaking out.

We may be the disorganized masses, buried in our own apathy, as we struggle for economic independence. We may need to feel productive, to procreate, and to protect our families. We may use the worst of evils in our society just to survive, but if we surrender our awareness, we are dead. If we give up our loyalty to justice and equality, we are dead. And if we abdicate when we're needed to lead — when we are needed to show strength and commitment to values — we are dead. Giving up our voice is a surrender, a self-mutilation, and the largest of sacrifices. But yet we often do just that as we watch the five o'clock news.

We watch the news hype up event after event. We never realize they are giving us more fiction than fact. Although the information is often useful and sometimes productive, we must remember where it comes from. Know that the editors and their managers choose the news, and slant it according to their own opinion. Know that at least half of every story should be how you see it and how it relates to your experience. And know that if you see something that is unjust or unfair, it doesn't have to apply to you to use your voice.

Toto – We're not in Kansas

It was just another road trip...

Tuesday, 5 p.m. — Finally left Amherst to begin journey to Wichita, Kansas, that is. Leaving via rent-a-car. After this trip I suppose the inside of this car will resemble Fred and Lamont Sanford's yard. Not too clean. Speaking of the Sanfords, does anyone miss Fred's best buddy, Grady, the way I do? What a great guy. My future second kid's name? You guessed it. Grady Crofts. Sounds good.

9:40 p.m. — Somewhere along I-90 in New York, our car got pulled over by a cop — who I'll call Ponchatello — for what he deemed was a speeding violation. First of all, the kid driving, Paul (otherwise known as the Human Atlas due to his geographical knowledge) should be grouped with the tortoise, snail and grandma when it comes to speed. It is not something he enjoys.

Jeff Crofts

After we told Ponch that we were only driving 65, he cockily replied, "Try 74." Ponch was obviously guestimating because there was no way any radar gun would spit out that number. Are all cops this cool?

Wednesday, 4:45 a.m. — Beginning to wonder if this pilgrimage is really worth it. I mean, we're only right outside of beautiful Cleveland. Speaking of Cleveland, how can there possibly be a Major League II? Major League was a good movie, but can't Hollywood just leave things as they are? Pretty soon there will be sequels to Gleaming the Cube, Can't Buy Me Love, Valley Girl and Dr. Giggles. Why do they do this?

10:17 a.m. — This is classic. Inside the bathroom at a rest stop in Indiana, there is box inside a condom dispenser called "The Love Pack". For 75 cents one can obtain a "stylish ribbed condom," and other love trinkets. What exactly what does a "stylish" condom look like? Almost had to pick up a "Love Pack" just to find out the answer, but that would be going to the extreme. I'll survive without knowing — for now, anyway.

12:30 p.m. — At a gas station in Indiana we had our second run with the coppers. This time, the cop — who I'll call Baker (Ponch's partner) — thought we were teenage runaways who were too young to be driving a car. Baker, in his uneducated (very, very uneducated opinion), shared with us his thoughts on the NCAA Tournament. After checking to see if our car was stolen, he let us go. This guy was a character. The type of hick who watches "Dukes of Hazzard" reruns and has to have them explained to him. A nice guy, just not too bright.

1:40 p.m. — Another gas station, another reprimand. This time at a Mobil in Missouri, a local apparently did not appreciate our fun-loving nature. After Tim (otherwise known as the Big Red Machine because of his carrot-top hair) said something hilarious, this guy — who I'll call Bluto for his portly (believe me, that's kind) appearance — sternly said, "No more jokes, boys." Huh? Who is this guy? I guess his overalls were strapped on too tight. Some people have got to relax. Settle down, Beavis.

6:30 p.m. — At a Subway in Missouri, it took the lady behind the counter (or is that sandwich artist?) about ten minutes to take our already-made-and-wrapped subs off the shelf and hand them to us after we paid for them. Thanks, I think.

10:00 p.m. — Finally arrived in Wichita. 60 degrees outside. At night! Unbelievable. I might transfer to Wichita State. All I know is they have a great baseball team, but I love the weather.

11:00 p.m. — Hooters. A great restaurant/bar. The food is good, but it really is the atmosphere that make this place a godsend. Believe me, there were no "Don't eat yellow snow" tips for our waitress on this night. If only she could've spelled, she would've been perfect. Oh well, the engagement ring goes back in the pocket for another day. I love this place.

Friday, 5:20 p.m. — Found another great establishment: Ryan's Steakhouse. All you can eat buffet for five bucks. Unbelievable spread. Highlight (most would say lowlight) of this trip was when this big ol' lady stuck her finger into the pudding and then into my mouth. Don't ask, it's a long story. I didn't know whether to laugh or cry. My buddy Anthony chose to laugh, quite hard in fact. Why me?

Saturday, 6:30 p.m. — Back at Ryan's, this time in a bitter mood. Bitter because our team lost, but more so because John Ritter and Dennis Rodman were on the "Tonight Show" last night and I missed it. What a lineup. I would've even put up with Leno to see that show.

Sunday, 2 p.m. — Eating a hot dog at Dairy Queen (reason alone to question our sanity), deciding the best way to make our journey back. Decide to go east to Myrtle Beach then back up north.

But that's another story all together.

Deans, librarian give budget tips

[Editor's note: the following letter was written to Provost Glen Gordon earlier this month to express concerns with the budget process for the coming fiscal year.]

This letter, signed by the deans of the academic schools/colleges and the librarian, expresses our disappointment in the way the 1994-9S budget reductions are to be handled. We have included some suggestions which we believe can have the effect of reducing the impact of upcoming budget problems, and more effectively involve the deans in the budget making process.

As you know, the University has suffered a number of budget reductions over the past years. Even though these budget reductions have been somewhat selective, all of the schools/colleges are not in shape, financially, to carry out their educational missions. The present five percent reduction was unexpected, and most of us have not yet completed our retrenchment for the present year. Next year calls for us to teach the same number of students with yet another budget cut, across the board, of 2.5 percent. For many of us, this means that we will lose faculty or TA slots since these are the only areas where we have any money and discretion left in our budgets.

We feel that we will have great difficulty carrying out our teaching programs with even less faculty, and our graduate teaching and research program will suffer greatly without the current complement of TAs. Many of us feel that we are involved in a process which we might call death by 2.5 percent.

We would prefer a process which allows for more selective cuts in specific programs which are for one of several reasons felt to be of lesser importance for the University's future. We hear a plea from you and the chancellor to wait for the results of the planning process to tell us where to cut selectively. In fact, many of the budget additions for this next year seem to anticipate the results of the strategic planning process. Many of us believe that the process itself, will not, indeed cannot, produce a plan for cutting.

The deans feel that we are in a crisis situation now and that we cannot continue the process of death by 2.5 percent. Here are some suggestions for limiting the damage for the next fiscal year. We see some possibilities to decrease the projected $5.1 million deficit for next year. One measure is to use the $1.09 million from the strategic initiatives FY'95 and work out a way for these dollars to cover some of our present activities which are consistent with the strategic initiatives program. If we are in a crisis, then perhaps we should demonstrate the problem in more dramatic terms. We could cut a major sport (football?) next year saving not only football funds but the need to comply with Title IX. We could delay the athletics Title IX funds of $1.09 million yet another year (After all, we are in a crisis situation!).

We could carefully assess the date for opening the polymer science building. Opening this building six months later than originally planned could mean a savings of $ 0.5 million. There could be a slow down in the capital campaign development given that campaign will not, in the short run, help us with our financial problems, save $0.2 million. We could slow down the new merit/minority and financial aid programs, and budget $0.75 million rather than the projected $1.5 million.

If the students want to minimize raises in fees and tuition, then the financial aid can come in smaller amounts. In addition, we can easily survive without developing the network this year and perhaps the library will not get its entire allocation as planned. This saves another $0.5 million. Altogether, we see savings this year of just of $4 million. This will cut the deficit to only $1.0 million, just a little less than the base commitment for emergency needs.

We are, of course, uncomfortable suggesting budget readjustments at this point, but we just cannot allow death by 2.5 percent to continue. These budget readjustments will give us the time we need before the strategic planning process suggests alternative ideas. If the deans were more fully involved in the budget process, some of this last minute frustration may have been avoided. There is every reason to involve the deans early in the budget process and to allow the deans to have a real impact on the real budget building.

In fact, we are responsible for providing the educational program for the University and, presumably, we are capable of making suggestions for budget increases, decreases and reallocations. By being part of the budget process, we will be able to suggest specific measures to strengthen the University programs and to justify what is happening to our chairs and faculty. We believe that the more open the budget process becomes, the better we can cope with the upcoming difficulties in our programs.

We recognize that you are as interested as we are in the success of our individual schools/colleges. We recognize and appreciate your efforts to spare our programs from these budget cuts. However, we as a group feel that we are in a crisis situation with regards to fulfilling our teaching, research and service mission and that stronger measures are needed than those proposed to date for FY'95.

Letters to the Editor

Minutewomen deserve recognition

To the Editor:

No band, no cheerleaders, no mascot, but certainly no lack of courage, the women's basketball team did UMass proud in the Atlantic-10 Tournament in Philadelphia.

There were bands, cheerleaders and bus-loads of fans from Rutgers and Temple, St. Joe's and St. Bonaventure. The George Washington contingent had George himself rallying support for their team. UMass had supporters too. One homemade sign, three screaming fans and parents of players didn't seem like much, but the players themselves appreciated our efforts nonetheless.

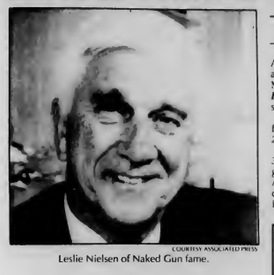
What a sad reflection on our University that the stark contrast between the way the men's and women's teams are supported by the school is so evident. Certainly the men's team deserves the attention and support they receive. John Calipari is absolutely correct about the "home court advantage" being a positive influence on his team. The women, however, enjoy no such feeling as the "crowd" at their home games at the venerable Cage is, for the most part, meager.

What does it take to get the attention of UMass fans? It can't be good play; they certainly have played well. Women's games are boring? Not if you've ever watched Joanie O'Brien work the refs and the sidelines, or seen Octavia Thomas disappear among defenders under the basket and still make the shot. No, the games are not boring!

The success of the women's team this season is heartening, and is due in no small way to the four graduating seniors. Cherie Muza, Jessica Gould, Francie Hanson and Maleeka Valentine may not be household names to some people, but to those of us who have seen Cherie's aggressive play, Jessica power to the basket, Francie's in-your-face tenacious defense and Maleeka's unselfish leadership that has placed her on the all-time assist list, they are well known. These seniors helped lead the young team to a record-breaking season culminating in their first-ever appearance in the semifinal game at the A-10.

In the last 22 minutes of that game, we watched the UMass bench carefully and began to yell and cheer when Joanie O'Brien sent these fine players in together to play out the last game in their playing careers. As we stood and cheered, the Rutgers fans across the gym read their programs to see what it was we were cheering about, for the outcome of the game was not in doubt. And they cheered them too. They had been watching our seniors for four years, and as fans of the game, knew what it would mean to them to hear the crowd. Thank you, Rutgers Cagers, for helping us give our players the crowd support they never had in the Cage.

Those of you who missed seeing the Minutewomen play will have to wait until next year. Maybe then the band will play and the fans will come...



Thank you, Minutewomen, for a great season.

Latest Naked Gun film shoots blanks

COURTESY ASSOCIATED PRESS

Leslie Nielsen of Naked Gun fame.

By ED HUMPHRIES
Collegian Staff

There's trouble in paradise. The King has fallen. After a decade of rapid fire onslaughts of humor it appears the Zucker Bros. have lost their trademark Midas touch. The Naked Gun 33 1/3: The Final Insult arrives off the mark to theaters, sporadically shooting blanks.

It was bound to happen, with the other Zucker franchises falling after multiple installments. (Airplane 2 never left the runway).

Still compared to that abysmal flop, The Naked Gun 33 1/3 has a lot going for it, with some great sight gags and caustic movie sendups (Richard Attenborough's Mother Theresa.) The problem is they don't come as fast and furious anymore. Gun lobbyists are used to a blitzkrieg attack on their funny bones.

Though the rapidity of the humor may be slackened, writers David Zucker and Pat Prof still know how to craft ingenious setpieces, beginning with their opening rift on The Untouchables which is as funny as anything done in the series.

As for plot, it's strictly paint by numbers, just a frame to hang jokes upon. Although these days that frame is appearing slightly underdressed.

After retiring from the force, Lieutenant Detective Frank Drebin (Leslie Nielsen) is confined to housekeeping and the Home Show. His wife Jane (Priscilla Presley), fed up with the men in her life, is headed for life on the lam in a top– down convertible (is that Glenn Frey bursting over the soundtrack)?

Drebin is called out of retirement to infiltrate the

Green Day: hot new punk

In this decade of retro sounds and old-school resurgence, it is not surprising to find this bunch of rowdy guys make an album of straight forward early '80s punk in the vein of early Public Image Ltd., Killing Joke and Husker Du. What is surprising is that it sounds oh–so refreshing.

Green Day combines agile, pulsing basslines, with angrily strummed, three-chord guitar riffery and lead singer P.Hynes' snarling vocals that sound more than a little like Johnny Rotten's off-kilter wailing. The lyrics are the real hook, as Hynes' words brings a whole new concept of disenfranchised, apathetic and angry youth to the music world.

"Burnout" is played in the best Husker Du-ish power-pop mode, as the raging power chords local prison where terrorist Rocco (Fred Ward) is planning an escape and subsequent bombing attack on that much deserving of such accolades, the Academy Awards.

It's this show stopping Academy Awards that revs Gun's engines to its manic intensity, allowing the oblivious Drebin to singlehandedly decimate that most beloved and conversely despised American time-stripping institution.

From the raucous musical numbers to the actual films up for Best Picture ("The story of genetics gone wrong at an elderly compound: Steven Spielberg's Geriatric Park), Gun finds its true comic meat. The resultant half-hour finale more than makes up for the drought of jokes leading to it.

Once again the Zuckers, here as producers and writers having handed the directorial reigns to Peter Segal, have a talented cast of former throwaways at their disposal.

Nielsen is especially good as Drebin, deadpanning incessantly with the aid of a B-movie background at his disposal. He takes on the most inane dialogue without ever dropping a wink or a nudge at the audience, thereby carefully constructing the illusion that this is all supposed to be so serious.

The remaining Gun players (Presley, George Kennedy, O.J. Simpson) perpetuate the illusion, heightening the deadpan delivery. Who would've thought so many has-beens could meld into such a rich comic ensemble.

The only poor casting choice is Fred Ward as the film's "Bad Guy." Although a fine actor in his own right, he lacks the lounge lizard intensity of previous villain Robert Goulet.

So while not a complete laugh riot, The Naked Gun 33 1/3 delivers its payload, managing to serve up more yucks than most comedies. It's just a bit depressing to see a once brilliant candle start to flicker.

Perhaps it's time that candle were allowed to burn down gracefully. B (Hampshire Six) has rained on me/ Now I'm feeing like a soggy dream/ So close to drowning but/ I don't mind..." simply scream adolescent angst. "Longview," the first single now getting serious attention, begins with a Killing Joke bassline and explodes in a chorus where Hynes' boredom and apathy overwhelm him. "When masturbation has lost its fun/ You know you're fucking lonely," pretty much says it all.

Although occasionally, on a beginning to end listen, the songs seem a little repetitious and abrasive, the songs individually carry the true spirit of punk rock into the nineties, where we should welcome it with open arms. A- (B. Babineau)

That Dog
That Dog
DGC/Rep

The unadulterated quirkiness of That Dog is a delightful break from manufactured college alterna-chic. No losers here.

Some tunes on this unlikely major label debut feature only a rueful waif and a single violin (maybe some drums). Most notably, "Paid Programming" which gives a sardonic nod to the late night commercial trend. "I'd like to see Richard Simmons dealing a meal and helping to heal... I'd like to see the vacuuming haircut machine going mainstream." Unless I misheard, there's no mention of the "Food Dehydrator," but that's alright.

The structured numbers are more worthy of a listen, driven sometimes by a Kim Deal style talking delivery but more often by sweetly melodic vocals. Bordering on a folk-style narrative lyrical approach with frequent minor keyed and ambiguous rhythms, That Dog manipulate nicely the "rock" and "don't rock" buttons on "Old Timer," "Raina" and "Angel." And just when you think you've found harmony and reason, out pops a violin solo. It's just like, so weird — really keeps you guessing. B (A. Goulston)

Hit the Highway
The Proclaimers
Chrysalis Records/ERG

That nobody ever told The Proclaimers that they have so little clue is probably what made them so goshdarn magnetic. The goofy Scottish pronunciation of vowels (ie."six" sound like "sex") in silly and often insipidly sentimental lyrics endeared, albeit belatedly, the Reid brothers to the U.S. public. Hit the Highway was in its final stages when The Proclaimers finally went bigtime. It lacks virtually all the spunk and charm of 1988s Sunshine On Leith.

In place of high-stepping and lively tracks, twin terrors Charlie and Craig have brought in simple chord progressions and straight harmonies. "These Arms of Mine"(a flat Otis Redding cover), "Shout Shout" and "Follow the Money" show the strong R&B and country influence but never rise above a mundane and mediocre plateau. But rejoice, there is light.

The title track is a savior. "Dew it mah wee aw you can hit the haaweee." God love 'em. The bopping, brassy number is the only bit of creative gas on this clunker. D+ (A. Goulston) from Danvers in 1992 and serves on the Armed Services, Small Business, and Merchant Marine and Fisheries house committees. Torkildsen was an original co-sponsor of President Bill Clinton's national service plan.

"[Being a congressman] is one of the most exciting jobs you could have," said Torkildsen. He is going to run for re- election and is taking his political career "one day at a time."

Yesterday he spoke in two political science classes and was the featured guest speaker at an open campus forum in the Cape Cod Lounge in the Student Union.

He answered questions and concerns from students on the environment, Whitewater, the cost of education and the differences in UMass since he graduated.

"There was always a protest going on," he said. "it seems a lot quieter now. And the food in the dining commons is better."

Torkildsen is for term limits, thinks UMass "took it on the chin" on the state budget, says that marijuana should be legalized only for medicinal uses, and said he believes the United States should not let Bosnia "fight it out," but yet doesn't think ground troops should be the answer.

Torkiidsen approves of Congressional hearings for the Whitewater scandal and appreciates President Clinton's open endorsement in the matter.

"it is important that the President [Clinton] spends time on other issues now like crime and health care," said Torkildsen.

On charges of Clinton's claim that Whitewater is overblown by the media and Republicans, Torkildsen said, "If the White House had not mishandled it, it wouldn't be a big story. Both Democrats and Republicans called for hearing by an overwhelming vote."

Torkildsen said he likes the basketball team.

"The loss against Maryland was a heartbreak, but it is tough when Maryland is shooting 70 percent," he said. "But I am very optimistic for next year. We have all five starters returning next season."

Torkiidsen said he is a follower of the Minutemen and tries to catch the games whenever they are on television. He attended the game against West Virginia in the William D. Mullins Center.

Gymnasts receive third in A-10's

Margaret Furtardo named A–10 Gymnast of the Year at banquet

Despite setting a team record and scoring a 189.925, the University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics team finished third at the Atlantic 10 championships last Saturday at George Washington University.

West Virginia took first with a score of 190.7, with GW right behind at 190.35. The Minutewomen continue to see their team scores rise, but once again couldn't finish on top.

"Everyone did a great job down the line, our vault was tremendous, it's kind of frustrating," assistant coach Rene Lyst said.

Freshmen Lianne Laing and Tara Swartz tied UMass' individual record with a 9.9 on the vault as the Minutewomen broke their all–time team mark by more than a point with a 48.7 in the event. West Virginia's Kristin Quackenbush won the vault with a 9.95.

"For the vault Tara and Lianne do, 9.9 is the top score possible. They basically did perfect vaults," Lyst said.

Leann Zavotka led off the vault with a 9.6, doing essentially a new vault routine for the first time. Margaret Furtado scored a 9.65, and Shaheda Keels and Angeia Jent both received a 9.625, as all six gymnasts were solid in combining to smash the record.

GW won the vault overall, as J.J. Felhurst and Nikki Bronner matched UMass' pair of 9.9's. Four vaulters scored a 9.8 or better for the Colonials, as GW tallied a 49.05.

Shaheda Keels, using a new routine herself, placed second overall in the floor exercise at 9.775, edged out by WVU's Quackenbush at 9.8. UMass combined to score a 47.975 with Laing (9.7) and Furtado (9.675) scoring well.

Swartz won the uneven bars overall with 9.8, with Furtado second for UMass at 9.5. The Minutewomen competed with only five gymnasts on the bars as Laing was held out with a hyper-extended elbow.

On the balance beam, Swartz and Laing again paced UMass with scores of 9.65 and 9.55. Stephanie Martino started off the beam with a 9.45.

West Virginia's Lajunda Moody won the beam at 9.75 as WVU rolled up a 47.55 in the event. GW was right behind at 47.325.

"A meet like this only makes us hungrier for regionals (April 9), we want to get even higher scores," Lyst said.

"We have taken a little half–step forward, we still have a full step we can make in our performance."

A–10 notes: Furtado was named Atlantic 10 gymnast of the year at the A–10 awards banquet Friday night. She was also first team all A–10 on beam.

Swartz was named second team all–conference as well as first team on bars. Keels was first team in the floor exercises, Laing was a second team selection on the vault.

Winter teams set standards for greatness

By MICHAEL REISS
Collegian Staff

It was a season in which records were shattered and rare feats became common. Twelve teams made their mark on campus, providing the avid sports fan with excitement, thrills and high–profile performances.

Overall, the University of Massachusetts winter sports teams set a precedent of excellence for years to come.

It had been over 13 years since men's hockey was played on campus (1978–79). With the reinstatement of the program for the 1993–94 campaign, Coach Joe Mallen was hired. Mallen directed a freshman–laden team to a school record 20 wins;

Defenseman Rich Aiger was the first player to commit to UMass... in its opening game against Merrimack, an 8–2 loss, Armand Latulippe netted the first UMass goal... Goalie Dave Kilduff picked up the team's first victory between the pipes, as the Minutemen won their first game of the season, a victory at home over Villanova (Oct. 30).

The men's basketball team garnered the national spotlight under the direction of Coach John Calipari. The team won the highly–competitive Atlantic 10 Conference, beat Temple three times, captured the A–10 Tournament while also upsetting top–ranked North Carolina during the season.

While it's easy to focus on the second round loss in the NCAA Tournament to Maryland, there were many positives:

Mike Williams' three–point bank shot against Temple... Williams' drive to the hole against Temple... Marcus Camby slam–dunking George Washington... Senior Craig Berry, playing in his last home game, reverse–jamming the crowd to its feet... UMass remaining undefeated at the Mullins Center, with 33 straight wins on campus.

Joanie O'Brien's women's basketball team continued to improve and advanced to the semifinal round of the A–10 Tournament. In the process, O'Brien became the third winningest coach in the history of UMass women's basketball. By winning 14 games, the team logged the second–best total ever in the history of the women's hoop program:

Freshman sharpshooter Beth Kuzmeski set the UMass three–point single season record for most shots made from behind the arc... Octavia Thomas was named first–team A– 10, while Melissa Gurile earned second–team honors... Kuzmeski and Crystal Carroll both made the A–10 all– rookie squad, the second year in a row the team has had two players with that distinction.

The men's swimming team finished an impeccable 12–0 under Coach Russ Yarworth. its biggest win was a convincing triumph over archrival UConn. The squad won the New England Championships for the eighth year in a row:

Freshman Greg Menton won the 50–free and 100–free at the ECAC's... Junior Tim Milbert was victorious in the 200–IM and the 200–breast at the New England's, as his two victories won him the male Swimmer of the Meet award... In the last home meet of the season, the four seniors on the team — Dan Burzinski, Steve Jungbluth, Sean Clark and Tim Nubar — won their respective events.

A sparkling fifth place finish at the ECACs was fitting for Coach Bob Newcomb's women's swimming team, as the unit had geared for the event all season:

Four new school records were etched into the record books, along with an overwhelming number of personal bests... The 200–medley relay quartet of Barbara Banks, Jessica Griffith, Trish Evers and Sarah Baker, along with the 400–medley tandem of Banks, Jodi Walters, Evers and Baker, smashed records... Senior Julie Veremey broke the 200–fly school mark... Banks crushed the school record in the 100–backstroke.

First year Coach David Kuzara's women's gymnastics team made considerable strides over the season in its quest of becoming a national power. The squad features depth and a team attitude:

Senior Margaret Furtado was recently named Atlantic 10 gymnast of the year... Tara Swartz set a school record with a 9.85 on the bars earlier in the season... The squad finished third in the A–10 Championships, less than a point behind first place West Virginia, and is currently getting ready for the Regionals.

The men's gymnastics team captured second place at the ECACs earlier this year at the Curry Hicks Cage, and Coach Roy Johnson and Co. are now looking towards bigger things — EIGL competition and the NCAAs — in the month of April:

In his final home meet of his career, senior Jason Braud took first place in all four events he competed in... At that meet, Braud also shattered the school record in the floor exercise... Freshman Gabe Columbus crushed the freshman all–around record in that meet... Before the ECACs, UMass was undefeated at home.

Julie LaFreniere's women's track team received a record setting performance from Anya Forrest at the ECACs in the 55m hurdles earlier this year, as the team combined hard work and dedication, en route to an 8–8 mark on the year:

Senior O'Brien, got a super effort from senior pole vault specialist Paul Doyle, who shattered a school record that was 16 years old earlier in the season.

The men's and women's skiing teams, both coached by Bill MacConnell, had successful seasons, as they attacked the slopes and any opponents that got in their way:

The men finished third in the Eastern College Ski Conference, while the women placed fourth... Tom Schaefer competed in both NCAAs and USCSA competitions, putting forth top–notch efforts in both.

Women's hockey also broke "ice," as it participated as a club sport. The team competed with grit and determination, laying down a foundation for future excellence.

The aforementioned events are just a few of the great sports happenings that occurred on campus over the winter sports season.

Overall, it was excellence in its finest form.

Boston likes Iafrate

I would be incompetent if I didn't lead with Gretzky breaking the all–time goal record. So congratulations to the Great One for another record. But it's gotten enough press already. So heading into the stretch run the Kings need more wins and less publicity if they're going to be playing in April.

BETWEEN THE PIPES
Matt Vautour on the NHL

Iafrate for Juneau: This will be a great trade for both teams. The Bruins have been begging for a defensive presence to aid Bourque for a while. The Boston fans will immediately love Iafrate, one of the game's true characters.

Edmonton East: The Stanley Cup Dynasty that was the Edmonton Oilers is having a reunion to get together and talk about old times and maybe play a little hockey. The site for this gathering? Madison Square Garden. The New York Rangers have more members of the former dynasty than the Oilers do. Will this be the year to finally shed the 1940 jinx?

This Week's it Could Only Happen in Hockey Award: Craig Janney gets shipped to the Canucks as compensation for the Blues signing of Petr Nedved then gets traded back to St. Louis for Jeff Brown and two others.

The compensation system badly needs to be reformed. The only reasonable system would be to award draft picks as compensation and set how many and what round they would be before any offer sheets are signed.

Battle Royal: Last week's brawl between the Canucks and the Rangers looked like something out of the WWF. I kept waiting for "The Mouth of the South" Jimmy Hart to show up wielding a folding chair.

The whole debacle began with Shawn Antoski throwing a vicious elbow on an unexpecting Ranger, causing mayhem to erupt.

In the midst of the fracas Ranger coach Mike Keenan took a stick in the face, an event that rivaled only Geraldo's chair in the face for many hockey fans.

The most vicious attack was Sergio Momesso winding up to swing his stick at Joey Kocur knees.

In the final minute of play, 99 minutes of penalty minutes were assessed.

So much for Gary Bettman's kinder, gentler NHL.

Bruin Injuries: If the Bruins knew they'd be this successful without Cam Neely and Ray Bourque, the two stars would have been benched long ago. The B's couldn't solve Montreal all season with Bourque and Neely in the lineup, but without them they prevailed 6–3. The two teams are on course to matchup in the first round of the playoffs.

Keep an eye on it, it is the best rivalry in professional sports.

DZ: Emilio Estevez, where has your career gone? If the Ducks make the playoffs, I may go on a hunger strike.

Mary Lee some ID Please? Chris Pronger, the Hartford Whalers phenom defensemen is receiving retribution from the NHL for his part in a bar brawl that included several Whalers. Pronger was to receive a suspension for the rest of the season, because he was drinking underage. Why?

In Canada, Pronger's homeland, he could've been served in bars for years. Going to bars was perfectly natural for Pronger. Besides, a one–month suspension for drinking? Ludicrous.

Forget the Rangers. The Detroit Red Wings will the Stanley Cup.

Dare heading to NBA

WASHINGTON (AP) — Yinka Dare, the 7–foot–1–inch center who led George Washington to the NCAA basketball tournament during the past two years, is leaving to pursue an NBA career.

The university said Monday that Dare withdrew from his spring semester classes and left campus after informing coach Mike Jarvis of his intention.

The decision was made in the best interests of his family in Kabba, Nigeria, George Washington spokesman Betsy Barrett said.

Cowboy saga continues

IRVING, Texas (AP) — Jerry Jones and Jimmy Johnson, the Dallas' Cowboys' version of the Hatfields and McCoys, met Monday for the first time since their high–profile squabble last week.

Those close to both declined to speculate on Johnson's coaching future with the two–time Super Bowl champions.

"I have no sense of the way it's going to go," said quarterback Troy Aikman, who met with Jones and Johnson earlier in the day. "All I know is that by tomorrow at this time we should have some answers."

The latest battle in the rocky relationship between the former college roommates erupted last week at the NFL's annual spring meetings when Jones discussed firing Johnson during a late–evening conversation over drinks. This came after Jones complained he wasn't satisfied with Johnson's response to a toast he proposed.

Johnson said he was infuriated that Jones went so far as to mention former University of Oklahoma coach Barry Switzer as a possible successor.

Nothing but a bad dream

NEW YORK (AP) — Hakeem Olajuwon of the Houston Rockets, the league's third–leading scorer and rebounder, was suspended by the NBA for one game Monday for hitting referee Bill Spooner in the stomach during Sunday night's game in Phoenix.

Olajuwon will miss Houston's game Tuesday night in Sacramento. The incident occurred with 7:26 left in the 113–98 loss. The 7–footer was gesturing at Spooner to protest what he thought should have been a foul on the Suns' A.C. Green when he struck the official.

Olajuwon was ejected two seconds after Dan Majerle scored on an offensive rebound to put Phoenix ahead 90–78. Olajuwon had 21 points, 11 rebounds and five blocks.

"Spooner felt a shot in the solar plexus. That can happen with a guy running by, it can happen a thousand ways," said NBA supervisor of officials Darell Garretson, who was at the game but did not work it. "I think he knew he had done something wrong by the way he left the floor."

SPORTS NOTICE

The University of Massachusetts Basketball team banquet will be held Friday, April 15 at 5 p.m. in the Mullins Center. The celebration is sponsored by the UMass Court Club and will honor Coach John Calipari's three–time defending Atlantic 10 Conference champion Minutemen.

The reception, which begins at 5 p.m. on the floor of the main arena in the Mullins Center, will be followed by a buffet dinner at 6:15. WWLP Channel 22 in Springfield will televise the banquet live from 8–9 p.m. The night's festivities will include a highlight film of the Minutemen's 28–7 season, as well as an awards presentation.

Reservations are $40 each ($80 per couple) and group tables may be reserved for $320 each (eight per table). The deadline for reservations is April 8th. Checks should be made payable to Basketball Banquet and can be sent to the Court Club c/o Athletic Development Office, 308 Mullins Center, Box 35910, UMass Amherst, Amherst, MA 01003. For further information, please call Athletic Development at (413) 545–4290.

Thoughts fly about tournament

Holding Court NCAA
Michael Morrissey on NCAA Basketball

Welcome to the Boston College fan club newsletter... er, I mean Holding Court. I think the most annoying part of the NCAA Tournament thus far has been my friend alternating between saying "Florida sucks" and "BC sucks." Thank God I didn't watch the BC–Florida game with him.

It's Final Four time, and unlike Dick Vitale, I refuse to jump on the bandwagon of every team still playing. Let me say this though: the four remaining teams — Arizona, Arkansas, Duke and Florida — each deserved their berths, despite what some critics say.

Let's start with the Wildcats. Lute Olson has taken much– deserved criticism in past years because of the Wildcats' propensity for choking, but Damon Stoudamire and Khalid Reeves have played like NBA stars in their make–or–break season.

The No. 2 seed in the West, Arizona dismantled both Louisville and Missouri in a methodical manner on their way to Charlotte. Willie Blair has provided the muscle inside and the team has been able to zoom into the national semifinals with a huge chip on their shoulders.

"These guys have been doubted and questioned and called chokers and losers," said Olson after the game. Those with long memories immediately recalled last year's first round choke to Santa Clara in which they were held scoreless for a seven–minute period in the second half.

"There's nothing better in my mind then for them to take that and put it in the appropriate place of the people who made these kind of comments," he said.

I will forget Olson's comments by the time this hits the press. But I will always remember Pete Eisenrich and other surfer dudes triumphing over the No. 2 seeded Wildcats while the Santa Clara campus was subsequently being torn apart by stoned–out surfers. Old stereotypes die hard, but give the Pac–10 team credit for this year's accomplishments.

Arkansas is the team which is expected to the win it all, which makes it the second year in a row an SEC team was favored.

The Razorbacks have a bench as deep as the well that baby that fell in a few years ago. Scotty Thurman and Alex Dillard are the main threats outside, and Clint McDaniel, when not kicking people, also fills it up.

The big difference: Corliss Williamson. Last season, Williamson played like a freshman and was not able to carry his team. This year he has proved to be one of the game's most dominating players. Juwan Howard held him to 12 points last Sunday; don't expect another paltry output this weekend.

The Razorbacks' weak road to the Final Four and an almost completely partisan crowd may hurt them in Carolina. Still, it's hard to go against this team this year. As the team which maintained a No. 1 ranking the longest and the only remaining No. 1 seed, they are the only school deserving of the term "We're No. 1."

No wonder the name of the psychopathic character in the movie Falling Down was Bill Foster. If you left Duke to coach Northwestern only to see this guy succeed, you'd probably lose it too.

Grant Hill should be the first pick in the June draft, ahead of Jason Kidd and Donyell Marshall (speaking of choke jobs...). I hope the UConn fan calls me up again to give me a reason why someone should draft Mr. invisible.

Is Duke Capel–bie of winning its third championship in four years? If the working parts like Jeff Capel, Cherokee Parks and Antonio Lang can keep up their performances, you bet your life. I picked the Blue Devils all along and I still like them, although I've probably jinxed them now.

Speaking of the Gators, how about Lon Kruger's team being the real unknown factor in the tourney. Kruger was the same guy who led an unknown Kansas State team to the final eight in 1988. The only star on that team: Mitch Richmond. Dan Cross is Kruger's lead guard now, and he and Craig Brown have been tossing more 3–point buckets than just about any other team. Florida's quickness and their secret weapon, "Da' Meat Hook" will keep them neck and neck with Duke. And critics will be saying they suck the whole way.

Michael Morrissey is winning his one–man NCAA pool this season.

Troops may be sent to quell Zulus

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The government and the ANC laid the groundwork Tuesday for sending troops to the volatile Zulu–dominated Natal province if a peace summit fails to quell political violence.

Such a move would severely undercut Zulu leader Mangosuthu Buthelezi, who has vowed to oppose next month's elections. The Zulu leader feels that an expected win by the rival ANC will threaten Zulu sovereignty.

Tensions showed no sign of subsiding Tuesday, a day after 53 people died in fierce clashes in and around Johannesburg triggered by a Zulu march protesting South Africa's first all–race election. Gunmen fired at the African National Congress headquarters, where ANC security guards killed nine Zulu protesters Monday. No one was injured in Tuesday's shootout, but the clash underscored the volatile situation before the April 26–28 election.

New candidate in Mexico

MEXICO CITY (AP) - Mexico's ruling party named Yale–trained economist Ernesto Zedillo as its new presidential candidate Tuesday, making him the overwhelming favorite to be the country's next leader.

The former public education secretary was chosen to replace Luis Donaldo Colosio, who was assassinated while campaigning in Tijuana last week. Zedillo was Colosio's campaign manager for the Aug. 21 election.

Zedillo, 42, has never held an elected office. Analysts described him as a technocrat and good negotiator who has yet to prove his political skills.

Israel—Palestine talk despite slayings

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — The PLO sat down Tuesday with Israeli negotiators and discussed security for Palestinians in Hebron despite its anger over the Israeli army's slaying of six PLO militants in the occupied lands.

PLO leader Yasser Arafat had threatened to scrap the session because of the slayings, but officials at the PLO headquarters in Tunis, Tunisia, said he authorized the meeting to decide whether to restart broader talks on Israel's withdrawal from the occupied Gaza Strip and West Bank town of Jericho.

Those talks have been halted since Feb. 25 when a Jewish settler massacred 30 Palestinians in a Hebron mosque.

U.S. angered by Japan's market—opening plan

TOKYO (AP) — Under attack by trading partners, Japan announced a market–opening program Tuesday, but it left many details to be filled in by June. The Clinton administration wasn't willing to wait that long.

U.S. Trade Representative Mickey Kantor rejected the proposal as a "half–finished work" that did not meet President Clinton's concerns.

Careful to say the United States was still hopeful Japan could meet its demands, Kantor said, "We have reviewed these measures and they do not meet the concerns the president raised on Feb. 11 during his meeting with Prime Minister

Smoke–free on agenda

By BEN GEMAN
Collegian Staff

Citing health risks, such as lung cancer and heart disease, associated with the inhalation of direct and passive cigarette smoke, members of the Amherst Board of Health attended the Amherst Select Board's meeting Monday to announce their intention to implement a proposal which would ban smoking in some public places such as restaurants and workplaces where workers are exposed to smoke.

"Our interest is in protecting the workers as well as the customers," said Rafael Lopez–Sanchez, a member of the Board of Health.

In support of the proposal, Board of Health member Frank Lattuca noted that in 1992 the Environmental Protection Agency classified tobacco smoke as a "class A" carcinogen and added that the surgeon general has repeatedly warned the public of the dangers of tobacco smoke.

While further restrictions on smoking in Amherst appear imminent, the exact nature of the restrictions will be discussed further at a public informational forum to gauge public opinion on April 13 in the Moore Gallery at the Bangs Community Center in Amherst at 7 p.m.

The implementation of the restrictions could take place as early as July 1.

Several methods of enforcing the restrictions were brought up at last night's meeting, such as "ticketing" offenders and levying fines on people violating smoking restrictions.

Bettye Frederic, director of the Amherst Department of Health, said that in restaurants the responsibility of enforcing a smoking ban will rest with the restaurant's proprietors and that the management of establishments which violate the ban will be penalized.

Frederic said that the Board of Amherst elections to be held next Tuesday

By JUSTIN DOYLE
Collegian Staff

Students at the University of Massachusetts will have an opportunity to shape the policies of Amherst by voting in the town elections next week.

The elections will be held on April 5 for Moderator, Selectman, School Committee, Elector, Jones Library Trustee, Housing Authority, Redevelopment Authority, Country Commissioner and Charter Commission. There will also be two questions on the ballot concerning town issues.

The candidates running for Selectman are William T. Stapleton, Larry J. Kelley, Hill Boss, and Matthew Pavesi. Pavesi, a junior at UMass, is the Undergraduate Student Speaker.

Residents will vote at designated polling places for the 10 different precincts in Amherst. Students who are registered to vote in Amherst will have to do so at polling places in town.

Amherst residents will vote at the following locations: Precincts 1 and 3, North Amherst Congregational Church Hall; Precinct 2, North Fire Station; Precincts 4,5 and 10, Bangs Community Center; Precinct 6, Fort River School; Precinct 7, Crocker Farm School; Precinct 8, Munson Memorial Library; Precinct 9, Wildwood School.

If residents have questions about what precinct they are located in they are asked to call the Town Clerk's office at 256–4035.

UMass students who are registered to vote in the town of Amherst and are living on campus will vote at the following locations: Sylvan and Northeast, No. Amherst Congregational Church Hall; Orchard Hill, North Fire Station; Central, Wildwood School; Southwest, Bangs Community Center.

The Committee to elect Matthew Pavesi is offering students living on and off campus transportation to and from the polling places by calling 253–5035.

"We will pick registered students up at there door, take them to vote and drop them off at their class or home," Pavesi said.

Ex CIA agent tells story

By JUAN JOSE CHACON QUIROS

Philip Agee was the first CIA agent to reveal the agency's operation methods. As a result of his testimony, he said he has been the target of persecution by the U. S. Government to such extent that an assassination plot was orchestrated to halt the publication of his revelations.

It failed, to the joy of a the numerous crowd gathered last night at the Student Union Ballroom. There, Agee, author of On the Run, spoke on "The CIA, the New World Order, and Cuba."

The lecture emphasized how the exposure of the CIA activities can bring about political education and solidarity with the victims of these operations. Agee gave an ample historical description of the origins of the Cuban revolution dating to the work of Jose Martí, U.S. involvement in Cuba, the Batista regime, and the rise of Fidel Castro. By the time he came to power, Agee had started his career with the CIA.

"Eisenhower gave his approval to a CIA plan. . .to expand the underground in Cuba. . .initiate propaganda operations...and [to] establish contacts with the Mafia to kill Castro," said Agee.

During the years of Fulgencio Batista's dictatorship, the Mafia controlled gambling, drugs and prostitution activities in La Havana.

Agee's first assignment materialized in Ecuador where his mission was to destabilize the country given the government's refusal to brake relations with Cuba. Their operations included "the bombing of Catholic churches. . .and the Cardinal's residence."

According to Agee they would leave propaganda at the sight of the bombings so the attacks could be linked to the Ecuador's communist organizations. As a result a military dictatorship was established and Ecuador broke relations with Cuba.

After his success in Ecuador Agee was stationed in Uruguay where he undertook similar activities with similar results. Agee explained how the same day John F. Kennedy was assas-

University, Hadley bicker over Mullins tax

HADLEY, Mass. (AP) - A quarrel over revenue from a University of Massachusetts arena is taxing relations with this little neighboring town.

Now, Hadley selectmen, trying to tweak the giant university where it hurts, are threatening to deny a one–day liquor license for a campus basketball banquet.

"We want to be counted as part of the community," selectman Glenn Clark said Tuesday. "They only come to us when they want something."

"I feel sorry that they feel that way," said Paul Page, a university vice chancellor. "There's no overt posture of the University to create that type of a situation. Like a lot of municipalities, Hadley is feeling some budget crunch and is looking for ways to try to make ends meet."

The dispute arose with the opening of the 9,500–seat Mullins Center in February 1993 on Hadley town property. Most buildings on the 23,000–student campus are in the adjacent town of Amherst. Hadley has sent $329,320 in property tax bills to Ogden Entertainment Services, which runs the Mullins Center by contract with the university. In a pending case, Ogden has sued in Hampshire Superior Court to challenge the tax.

Lee Eskilsen, Ogden's Director of the Mullins Center, was out Tuesday, and his office referred questions to the University. The town is also prodding the state Legislature for authority to impose a $1 tax on tickets sold at non–collegiate events in the Mullins Center, which stages rock music concerts, shows and other entertainment that attract people from around the region.

To carry their message to its target, town selectmen have balked at allowing the liquor license for an April 15 basketball banquet, though they have routinely granted such requests in the past. The three selectmen, who earlier tabled the matter, are expected to take it up again Wednesday.

Page said the University may move the basketball banquet elsewhere on campus if the license is denied. "It's a shame that they would be dragged into this kind of thing," he said.

He said the Mullins is tax–exempt and operates at a $1 million annual shortfall, which the university covers through its own funds.

But Daniel Zdonek, a staffer in the Hadley assessor's office, said state law allows property taxes on the events of a tax–exempt operation that are intended to make a profit. "If the center itself is losing money, that's irrelevant," he said.

Page said, without elaborating, that University lawyers challenge Hadley's interpretation of the law.

Hadley officials acknowledge that the Mullins Center brings visitors and money into this town of about 5,000 residents.

Robot developed

New robot thinks, acts on its own

By BRIAN GORMLEY
Collegian Staff

A robot that can see, hear, feel and screw in light bulbs has been developed by a team of University of Massachusetts professors who have been researching robotics at UMass for the past five years.

Computer scientist Roderick Grupen, the co–director of the Laboratory for Perceptual Robotics at UMass, has led a team of doctorate students and professors that have developed a robot with an arm and a four–fingered hand which can locate objects such as a light bulb and screw it into a hole. The robot uses its remote sensors to see the world in order to grab the object and place it in the correct spot.

Separate from the arm and hand, they have also developed a platform with four legs which can be picked up by the robots's arm and used as a tool.

Grupen said the major advantage of this new robot is that it can perform autonomously, as compared to today's industrial computers that can only perform a certain set of pre–determined functions.

"Today's robots are like animated cartoons because a human programs instructions and the computer saves each movement as a landmark and then it plays back the same sequence back," Grupen said. "This robot is autonomous in that it does not know anything about the world until you turn it on."

Grupen said he, along with Laboratory Co–director Robin Popplestone and Robotics Laboratory Manger Kamal Souccar have been the leaders of the research team. Grupen said research similar to what his team has done is being performed all over the world. He said the hand of the robot was built at the University of Utah and the arm for the robot is the same as an industrial robot's arm.

Grupen said the robot is still about 10 to 15 years away from being useful to factories because it is far slower than humans or today's industrial robots and

The Love Bug returns, sort of

By ROBERT DVORCHAK

NEW YORK – It looks like the beloved Beetle. Sort of. Volkswagen looked into its rear-view mirror Tuesday as it introduced a fiberglass prototype of a new car it touts as a modern version of the world's best-selling car - the little putt-putt-putting, hump-backed darling with the engine in back that hasn't graced U.S. showrooms since 1979.

But the Concept 1 Cabriolet is loaded with enough high-tech wizardry to positively bug its faithful fans - air conditioning (gasp), dual airbags, AM-FM radio, compact disc player with six speakers and, perhaps the greatest heresy, a computerized engine up front.

Do the people floating this trial balloon really expect to capitalize on a nation's fondness for a homely rattletrap of a car known for its rudimentary heater, quirky reserve gas tank, a radio that could barely be heard above the engine stutter and a front-end trunk barely spacious enough to carry a spare?

Despite its idiosync¬sies and inconveniences, the Beetle was a home mechanic's dream and it was cheap: $1,495 in 1950, still less than $2,000 a decade later when Volkswagen peddled it with slogans such as "Think small" or "Ugly is only skin-deep."

The projected sticker price for the Concept 1? About $13,000. "It was inexpensive, fun to drive and easy to maintain. I guess it was ugly, but it ran and ran and ran," said Shell Tomlin, president since 1986 of the Volkswagen Club of America. "Utter simplicity. I want to be able to get in a car and know it'll start and get me where I need to go."

Tomlin can tune his vintage Beetle's carburetor with a screwdriver. He's unimpressed with the Concept 1's microchips. "We all know those modern things cost money," Tomlin said. "The Concept 1 is not a Beetle. I think people are going to be disappointed in it. I don't know if I would even have one."

The Concept 1 won't be on the market until 1997 at the earliest, and it's unclear where it will be built. Creators say it may have a diesel engine, an electric motor or a hybrid of the two, a drastic change from the Bug's four-cylinder, air-cooled, gasoline-powered contraption behind the rear seat.

Dutch importer Ben Pon brought over the first two Volkswagen Beetles in 1949 and sold them at cost for less than $1,500 apiece to get a ticket back home. The Bug became an icon - in 30 years, Americans bought 5 million. (No, they're not all now parked on the streets of Berkeley, Calif. It just seems that way.)

Clinton used her money

By TOM RAUM
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Hillary Rodham Clinton invested an initial $1,000 of her own money in the cattle futures market and parlayed the small stake into nearly $100,000 in 1978 and 1979, the White House said Tuesday.

She also opened a second account with $5,000, but wound up with about $1,000 in losses and closed the account soon after the Clintons' daughter Chelsea was born in 1980, the White House said.

Commodity brokers said that Mrs. Clinton's first venture into commodity trading appeared to be unusually successful, but that such profits were not unheard of at a time when cattle futures prices were in a strong upswing because of reduced herds and inflation.

Cattle prices soared nearly 60 percent from 1978 through 1979, the period in which Mrs. Clinton traded. "I've seen it done myself but the odds are very, very rare," said Jeffery Piper, a broker with Lind-Waldock & Co., in Denver.

The new material was put out by the White House in an effort to demonstrate that Mrs. Clinton spent her own money in the stunningly successful investment. At the time, her husband was Arkansas' attorney general and the odds-on favorite to be the state's next governor.

Asylum system reviewed

Government looks to streamline claims requests

By MARCY GORDON
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A streamlining of the review of aliens' claims for asylums was proposed by the government Tuesday to cope with a backlog of 370,000 cases and reduce abuse of the system.

A representative of an attorneys' group said she feared even an increased number of immigration judges under the proposal wouldn't be able to reduce the backlog.

The asylum plan is one of several changes in immigration policy recommended by the Clinton administration as related issues — such as public services provided to immigrants — have become increasingly sensitive on Capitol Hill and in statehouses.

Sen. Alan Simpson, R-Wyo., for example, introduced a bill this month that would cut the number of legal immigrants into the United States and establish a legal limit of 80,000 on the number of refugees allowed to gain asylum each year.

The Immigration and Naturalization Service estimates the backlog of asylum cases could hit 500,000 by the end of the year. In New York and Miami, it can take more than a year for an asylum case to go before an immigration judge.

At a news conference, INS Commissioner Doris Meissner announced a proposed "fast-track" method of reviewing asylum applications that includes granting legitimate claims within 60 days. Unapproved claims would be referred to immigration judges for a decision within 180 days of filing.

"The reforms we propose will preserve fundamental legal protections for legitimate asylum-seekers while addressing the problems of asylum abuse," Meissner said. "We do not want to close the door on people who are persecuted, but we cannot allow others to take advantage of a process they don't really need or deserve."

Balloons celebrate start of spring

Business donates balloons to promote spring cheer, protest cold

By GERI SAHN
Collegian Staff

Are you depressed from the horrible weather this winter? Was coming back from spring break the most dreaded thought?

Both Kamela Heyward-Rotimi and Kole Heyward-Rotimi decided to do something about their depression after a long winter living in the snow-bound town of Amherst.

Monday, April 4, the Heyward-Rotimis will be donating balloons from their business, K2 Balloons, in order to give downtown Amherst a cheery look. The theme will be titled, "We'll celebrate spring anyway."

"We were driving around town, and the snow was making us depressed. We have heard of the balloon idea from other cities that have done it," Heyward-Rotimis said.

K2 is a delivery-based balloon company in Amherst. They deliver balloons and do decorations for events on the University of Massachusetts campus.

The Amherst Chamber of Commerce, the town of Amherst, and the Community Relations Department at UMass will be helping K2 Balloons with the event.

Heyward-Rotimis said they will be putting up four rainbow colored balloon arches. The arches will be begin at Fleet Bank between North Pleasant St. and South Pleasant St., and end at the Carriage stores.

"The University will be providing a truck to lift us up. We will be the only two putting up the balloons," Heyward- Rotimis said.

The balloons are helium-filled latex and biodegradable. The 200 balloons will be hung 25-30 feet above the ground so nobody will be able to take them down.

Kamela Heyward-Rotimis is a graduate student at UMass studing anthropology.

Kole Heyward-Rotimis did his undergraduate studies at UMass and is now working to get his MBA at Clark University in Worcester.

Flood waters remain high on North Shore

BILLERICA (AP) — Eight families were forced to leave their homes and the National Guard was placed on standby to ferry others over flooded roads as two Massachusetts rivers overflowed their banks.

Forecasters said the water levels would subside over the next few days.

A flood warning remained in effect for the Charles and Concord rivers. Several roads near the Sudbury River in Wayland also were awash.

"What we can say with some certainty is that over the next three or four days, things should stabilize," said Rick Spratling, a National Weather Service forecaster.

Eight families along the Concord in Billerica were forced to leave their houses as the river rose.

The water, which closed down 13 streets, started to subside again on Tuesday.

"Right now, there's really not that much concern," said John Licciardi, a spokesman for the Red Cross, which helped two of the families find shelter.

In Wayland, roads in the Pelham Island sections became impassable when the Sudbury River overflowed its banks. The National Guard was on standby to ferry residents to their homes.

Authorities said they remained concerned about more serious potential flooding as the huge amount of winter snow in New

Look beyond the bunnies

Sunday is Easter? For many, egg hunts, bunny rabbits, plastic baskets, family gatherings and a Sunday morning church service promise to fill up a busy Easter weekend. For others, Easter is something quite different or, perhaps, a little bit of both.

Though the festivities can cause great excitement for young and old alike, what do they have to do with Easter? Some argue that the symbolism involved points to the resurrected Messiah. Still, outside influence is undeniable in light of the pagan elements. Does this mean the true meaning of the Christian holiday is lost? Unfortunately, the response must be, "it depends."

Many are familiar with the old gospel story: Jesus suffers on the cross, dies, is buried and, three days later, is alive. But what does it mean? Is the resurrection just a clever mythology?

Diana D'Avanzo

For the person with no conviction or understanding of who Jesus Christ is, Easter is just another holiday. For the person professing to have accepted Jesus Christ as personal lord and savior, Easter is probably very similar in appearance, though quite different in meaning.

Easter is the single most important event in Christianity. Easter commemorates the resurrection of Jesus Christ. Many are familiar with the old gospel story: Jesus suffers on the cross, dies, is buried and, three days later, is alive. But what does it mean? Is the resurrection just a clever mythology?

First the meaning. Jesus said of himself, "...the Son of man must be lifted up, that everyone who believes in him may have eternal life... For God did not send his Son into the world to condemn the world, but to save the world through him."(John 3:15–17)

Jesus tells us he died for us so that, in believing this, we would no longer be separated from God. Why would we be separated from God? Ever heard the saying, "Nobody's perfect"? You do not have to be an ax murderer in order to be separated from a Holy God. Rather, our goodness, righteousness and greatest and most selfless achievements are as filthy rags before God!

Here is a summary (due to space constraints): Jesus died on the cross so that we could be forgiven of our sins. In accepting this death and making Jesus lord of our lives (i.e. submitting our lives to God) we get a great relationship with God in this life and a retirement plan that is out of this world.

Where does the resurrection come in? Basically, after having died for our sins, Jesus triumphed over those sins and spiritual death. In other words, Jesus is alive, active, loving and seeking a personal relationship with people.

Among other things, the resurrection proves Jesus is the son of God (Romans 1:4), it is the foundation for the spiritual life of the believers (1 Corinthians 15:45) and it assures believers of eternal life and it makes Jesus' power over sin available to believers in everyday life (Gal 2:20).

Of course, the nagging question is "Did the resurrection happen?" Citing the texts of various scholars and theologians may not be very convincing (though Frank Morrison's "Who Moved the Stone?" is a great one). Coming to detail about the manner in which Jesus' tomb was secured and the certain death that a missing body meant to the Roman guards on duty might not mean much either.

What of the rapid growth in the belief, the inability of Roman or Jewish authorities to produce a body, the more than five hundred witnesses — including hostile witnesses — who claimed to see the risen Jesus? Was it all a fix? Allow me to end with this:

"The evidence is sufficient to convince any man who is not already set against it but, the evidence does not force a man into the kingdom who will not go."

— Blaise Pascal, mathematician and philosopher, speaking on the claims of Christianity.

Action at the weenie joint

The excitement. The anxiety. The suspense. The danger. The thrill.

What more can you ask for...from a Hot Weenie Joint.

For those who have yet to experience a hot weenie, or don't even know what the hell I'm referring to when mentioning a hot weenie, I will explain.

Andrew Bryce

A weenie, my clueless deprived friends, is a somewhat smaller version of a hot dog. Onions and mustard and some brown stuff are then thrown on the weenie to give it the true weenie flavor. Thus, a hot weenie is created. Please note that hot weenies are also referred to as gaggers and gassers by true weenie fans. Please also note that, yes, they are called gassers for that reason.

Now that I have given you a brief capsule of the origin of a hot weenie, I will proceed to describe my wild night at the Hot Weenie Joint. Before reading any further, parental caution is advised.

It was about 2 a.m. on one of the nights (well, mornings) during break. My friends and I had just returned from a night of unfulfilled adventures, which is another story for another time. Anyway, one of my buddies came up with the idea of the Hot Weenie Joint, and we were all up for it.

This is when it starts. Mind you, there were seven of us heading to the Hot Weenie Joint. Two of my friends walked ahead of me as we headed to the door. As I attempted to walk into the Joint, a short man closed the door on myself and my four friends still outside, with my two friends gazing at us from inside.

I didn't know exactly why the short man locked the door on my friends and I, but he did let us in after a minute of confusion. Now, all members of our party accounted for, we sat down. We just sat there for a couple of minutes and took in the atmosphere.

This place was your average Weenie Joint — it was a pit. It was filled with smoke. It consisted of loud, obnoxious and drunk older men and women who had just returned from the bars. The place looked filthy. Ah, the ambience of a Weenie Joint.

Then the waitress came over. She reminded me of Carla from Cheers — but with more attitude. Carla refused to use a piece of paper and pen, preferring the hollering–across–the–restaurant–amidst–the–buzz–of–the–drunk–idiots method. You told her what you wanted, and she shouted the order to the hairy man behind the grill.

She asked us how many hot weenies we wanted. The total came to 17 with six sodas. As we were waiting for our gassers, I glanced over at the hairy man behind the grill. I realized nothing had changed since I had been there last. The man behind the grill, hairy as ever, still lined the weenies up on his arm while he made them. I can remember one time when my friend Lee made my other friend Mike freak out, saying he saw a band–aid from the hairy man's arm fall into one of Mike's weenies. Ah, those were the good ol' days.

We received our weenies and soda in a matter of minutes. We ended up getting 25 hot weenies and eight sodas. So much for the hollering method, Carla. Thanks for the extras.

As we began to dig in to our gaggers, I looked over at the short man at the door. Each time he let somebody into the door, he'd lock it right after. Still puzzled as to why the short man was doing that, I kept trying to hear what he was saying.

There were four girls at the table in front of the door, and one of them finally asked the short man why. His answer as to why he kept locking the door? "Because too many people been getting shot." Hearing that, I gagged on my gagger and was about ready to pack it up, but I didn't want to make a scene by telling my friends what the short man had said.

We then proceeded to eat our weenies in the peaceful establishment. Now, let me set the stage for the next turn of events. I was sitting in a booth with three of my friends and the other three are at another booth. As I was gassing it trying to finish my gasser, I heard a loud bang behind me. Startled, I popped up.

The banging continued. Apparently a man and woman were having an argument in the booth behind me. Swearing his head off, the piss–drunk man was half–whimpering, half– screaming at the woman. He'd bang the table every so often as they yelled at each other.

Now I was in minor dilemma. Here I was, my back turned to the action. If I turned around, the large, angry man might get mad at me for staring at him. Yet, I was blind to the action, which was even worse. The argument heated up. Man, those weenies were good.

I then caught a piece of the action, as a friend of the woman went to ask for the short man's help. The short man approached the fighting couple, and asked the man to leave. I then heard the man say, "Get the f— outta my face!" The short man said, "OK," and went to call the police.

As the police came in, we were ready to leave. I took the check from Carla, paid the hairy man, watched the angry man being escorted out by the policeman, and waved goodbye to the short man.

I'll see you guys on my next break.

History making in Mexico

Enemigos mios, si existis, he aqui mi corazon entregado. Venid a herirme (My enemies, if you exist, here is my heart. Come to heart me). Alfonsina Storni, one of Latin America's finest poets, wrote these words in 1945 as part of her book Love Poems. Although this poem is about love, I would like to think of it as my guide to the understanding of the reality for the common Latin American.

Latin America disappeared from U.S. newscasts after the Soviet Union's retreat from the region. It was called the "end of history," a new period characterized by democratic institutions, peace and renewed economic growth. After all these years fighting communism in Latin America, the U.S. had finally won.

The parallels between the killing of a presidential candidate in 1928 and 1994 are inevitable. Sub–comandante Marcos provides the same kind of charismatic leadership to the peasants as Emiliano Zapata, the amazing hero of the Mexican Revolution.

Juan Jose Chacon Quiros

However, for Latin Americans the retreat of the Soviet Union was not coupled by the retreat of the U.S. Since then, elections have been held successfully in many Latin American countries, but the possibilities for sustainable economic development are simply not there.

The U.S. is extremely preoccupied by the recent developments in Mexico. The parallels between the killing of a presidential candidate in 1928 and 1994 are inevitable. Sub–comandante Marcos provides the same kind of charismatic leadership to the peasants as Emiliano Zapata, the amazing hero of the Mexican Revolution.

Will history recreate itself? Yes! Not only in Mexico but also in the rest of Latin America. The events will not be the same since the reasons are different, but at the heart of the matter is the United States. Dime las palabras mas dulces que jamas hayas oido (I will say the sweetest words you have ever heard). It's idealistic, but if he wanted, hundreds of millions in Latin America will give him that gift, the gift of love.

Juan Jose Chacon Quiros is a Collegian staff member.

The problem is the current, almost theological, belief that free trade will solve every single problem we face in Latin America. The process of trade liberalization, unilateral concessions and government reduction in Latin America is what pressed the Zapatistas to fight. The same reasons will create revolutionary sentiments in all the people being asked to sacrifice today with the false promise of future frugality. Didn't they sacrifice before?

The reduction in government spending for education, health and other public services is creating a situation in which the poor can no longer afford basic human needs. We cannot accept that government reduction is the goal, it will only make the bureaucracy smaller in size, but it will probably be more inefficient than ever before. Moreover, how are children supposed to grow up to be entrepreneurs, scientists or technicians if they lack the means to make efficient use of their minds. isn't that what it is about, efficiency? The poor in Latin America are being stripped of their only mechanisms of social mobility and it won't be long before they find out and... well you know.

If the U.S. is scared of the Mexican situation, it should be more fearful of the potential for revolutionary activity in the rest of Latin America. It would do good for the thousands of U.S. soldiers that would die when the next invasion is staged, if the Clinton used its power in the IMF and other organizations to put a halt to the current policies.

It would be good for Clinton if he could read the last words of Storni's poem: Dire las palabras mas dulces que jamas hayas oido (I will say the sweetest words you have ever heard). It's idealistic, but if he wanted, hundreds of millions in Latin America will give him that gift, the gift of love.

Letters to the Editor

A letter of thanks to good Samaritans

To the editor:

I have some very wonderful people to thank, and I would love to do so in person. However, as these people are still strangers to me, I am using the Collegian to accomplish this task.

The Wednesday before Spring Break I was walking outside of the Tower library when I slipped in the snow and fell. I tried to stand up, but a pain in my left ankle forced me back to the ground. "Damn," I thought, "I've sprained my ankle." (Little did I know that this "sprain" was really a break, and that it would take an orthopedic surgeon with nine pins and a plate to fix it!)

As I helplessly lay there in the snow, trying to figure out what to do, a group of students coming from the De La Soul concert in the Student Union Ballroom saw me. They stopped to see if I was okay and, when they realized I was not, they picked me up without hesitation and carried me back to the Student Union. Then they went to call for help and waited with me until it arrived.

I am writing this letter because I never had the chance to thank those students. I didn't even have the chance to find out their names. I cannot tell you how grateful I am that they took the time to help me and did not just keep walking.

If you are one of those students who helped me that Wednesday night, I would really like to deliver this thank you in person. If you see me on campus (and you really can't miss me — I'm the one with the crutches and the big, white cast) please stop me and introduce yourself. I have something important to say to you.

'Selfish' hoop fan chastised for letter

To the editor:

This letter is in reply to Mr. Jeremy Fluegel's comments in his letter to the editor on March 17 ["Fan would rather not sit this one out"]. I find his comments to be selfish and asinine.

Mr. Fluegel should have considered himself lucky to be one of the recipients of the tournament tickets but, rather, he took this moment of good fortune to whine about a lack of transportation to Wichita.

Does he honestly believe that the University, which is in the midst of one of its worst financial situations in years, should have chartered a plane to take the 15 lucky students who won across the country to Kansas?

Mr. Fluegel cites the fans in attendance at the UMass–Kentucky basketball game in the Meadowlands as proof of a school's devotion to its students. Well, sir, New Jersey is just a little closer to Amherst than Amherst is to Wichita.

In addition to these comments, Mr. Fluegel takes to opportunity to wonder aloud whether or not he should have attended UConn rather than UMass. Well, Jeremy, it's not too late to go to UConn and support Donyell and company. As for the rest of us, we'll keep supporting Coach Cal and our Minutemen.

By the way, I noticed you are an undeclared major, Mr. Fluegel. Well, I think that is untrue — you have declared yourself as a childish, spoiled turncoat before the whole University.

New Durfee artwork 'ugly, meaningless'

To the editor:

I was horrified to discover the new "public artwork" across from Durfee Conservatory. I am wondering how such an ugly and meaningless project got approval from the UMass Arts Council. In my opinion, it does not enhance Durfee's garden, but is an eyesore. It looks like a place where prostitutes hang out. I hope the "artist" plans to install a condom machine underneath the park benches!

The shocking pink street lights give it the artificial glow of corporate art and fits in well with the idea that we live in a global shopping mall. The gray cross lines gives it the feeling that this is a public place of political executions. So, who will be the first to be strung up? Will it be the "artist" or the administrator who hired him?

McGuinn rocks with apt covers at Iron Horse

By ED HURLEY
Collegian Staff

Roger McGuinn
Iron Horse
March 27, 1994

The Iron Horse in Northampton was rocking Sunday night when rock legend Roger McGuinn took the stage and played a phenomenal acoustic set to a capacity audience. The show was a sort of musical autobiography as McGuinn traced his early influences through his own work with the 60's mega group The Byrds and finally some of his own solo material.

The show started with a stirring rendition of Dylan's "My Back Pages." The whole audience was captivated by McGuinn's excellent vocals as well as his great talent.

Next he played Elvis's "Heartbreak Hotel," a tune McGuinn loved when he was young with his little transistor radio. That was a surprise treat, as the audience whistled and howled with pure amusement.

McGuinn showed he was as adept on the banjo as he was on the 12–string acoustic guitar. He played an old folk tune on the banjo called "Old Blue" that must have been the real highlight of the night as he had the audience sing the chorus with him. The surprises continued as McGuinn broke into a wonderful version of Bobby Darin's "Splish Splash." The crowd was full of middle–aged men and women who loved hearing the tunes they grew up with.

McGuinn was extremely comfortable and light–hearted on stage. His hair was conservatively cut short, a long cry from the long locks he used to sport in the sixties. He wore a casual flannel shirt, echoing an other aging rock legend Neil Young.

The crowd went wild when he broke into the Pete Seeger– penned "Turn, Turn, Turn." The Byrds had record the song in the sixties and it was a big hit for them. The absolute biggest surprise of the night was when he played the Beatles' "I Want to Hold Your Hand," hitting the high notes higher than the Beatles ever could.

He played two versions of "Mr. Tambourine Man," the one song every one came expecting to hear. The first was a Dylan–esque version close to the Dylan original, next he played his re–arrangement of the song which was a huge hit for The Byrds back in the sixties.

McGuinn had some humor show. While he tuned his guitar he said,"I tune because I care." Another time he broke a guitar string and said he was lucky to have a 12–string since he has eleven strings left. He broke into a great version of Dylan's "You Ain't Goin Nowhere."

He performed a haunting version of The Byrds' "Eight Miles High." Which he explained was about flying not drugs. His playing on the song was fantastic showing he is as good a musician as he is a singer. Next he had the audience scream and hell when he played The Byrds' jab at the Monkees, "So You Want to be a Rock'n Roll Star."

He ended the show with a solo song of his, "King of the Hill" which was co–written by Tom Petty. After rousing applause McGuinn returned to the stage to play a reworking of an Irish folk tune as an encore.

Nobody went home disappointed when McGuinn left the stage. His mixture of humor, vocal talent, musicianship, and showmanship made for a great show and night.

Copeland's book is grown–up Dr. Seuss

By ADAM GOULSTON
Collegian Staff

Life After God
Douglas Copeland
Pocket Books/Simon & Schuster

"I think that death is not just dying. I think death is a loss that can never be taken back, damage that can never be made whole." — page 261, Life After God by Douglas Copeland

Douglas Copeland is undoubtedly one of the hippest authors and armchair philosophers going today. Generation X skillfully labelled and characterized a massive group of fledgling twentysomethings as a confused pack of souls picking up the pieces of prior generations' neglect. I never read the book, but I've heard the reviews and they're all pretty positive.

Now Copeland can be seen and heard on MTV reading excerpts from his latest book, Life After God, right after his younger readership is sold Nikes and right before Kennedy does her too–cool–for–you intro to Beck's "Loser" for the two hundredth time.

The poignancy of Copeland's senses will lead some to believe he shares a piece of their minds and others to think he would rather share a piece of their wallets.

Copeland's made the bigtime and this little primer on the angst of young adulthood will keep him there for a while.

Life After God presents eight chapters of tales and philosophical ponderances of a once–disenchanted, recovering depressive who struggles to cope with an upbringing devoid of religion.

Written in 360 pages of a sort of stream of consciousness delivery, it is a rapid fire read, how perfect for the short attention span of "my generation."

This all wouldn't be so frustrating were it not for Copeland's inate ability to precisely capture the feeling of human flailing. The poignancy of Copeland's senses will lead some to believe he shares a piece of their minds and others to think he would rather share a piece of their wallets.

"For so many years I lived a life of solitude and I thought life was fine. But...I remember thinking that unless I knew what was going on inside of someone else's head other than my own I was going to explode," writes Copeland in one of his diatribes on failed relationships. His observations are acute albeit insultingly base.

The problem is this: Life After God is written almost as a grown–up Dr. Seuss book. Eight chapters of thoughtful soundbites are hurled at the reader as Copeland never wants to challenge the reader's intellect but rather engage the reader's sanity. And sanity could be in doubt after reading this.

From the low–life character portraits in "My Hotel Year" to the rapidly destructing lives of his old gang of friends in "1,000 Years (Life After God)," the narrator takes the role as backseat theorist.

He draws conclusions about his own depression and confusion from his tales but never finds the answer(s) one might expect he is working toward.

With a hardcover price of $17, us Gen Xer, slacker, losers may be happier spending our money on some real philosophy or, perhaps, cigarettes. We like to smoke cigarettes. C

Local bands to savor while they are still local

By JOSHUA BOYD
Collegian Correspondent

What is that sound coming from The Hatch on Friday nights? From the Van Meter or Butterfield basements on some Saturday Nights? Take a peek in. The following is a primer on campus–based local bands that play throughout the semester.

Amanda's Dirty Secret — A band with a punky sound. Perhaps "Slacker Pride" music with an attitude and a smile.

Borderland — Their stickers that mention "Blues Funk Rock Sweat" pretty much say it all. Strong live performers. Borderland will play this Saturday, April 2 with Mocha Java at the Van Meter dorm. The show starts at 8 p.m. and admission is $2.

Cameron's Way — College music with a decidedly hardcore edge. Features high intensity vocals and precisely original guitar licks. Cameron's Way played at Pearl Street, Northampton on Tuesday, March 29.

Cottonmouth — Genuine Draft Rock 'n Roll. A very forward, driving sound. Like meat that is raw, but decorated.

Electric Noodle Factory — Zany, hoppy tunes with that good old rock edge, but with an eclectic mix. Great shows.

Falafel Boy — An "alternative rock" band that gives the overused term "alternative" back its original prestigious definition.

Knuckle Sandwich — Sounds just like a fun Saturday Night. An unpredictable, funny show. You'll know them when you see them.

Meristem — A hard, pressure–filled sound. Wired, crazy punk rock with a lovely touch of saxophone.

Minibus — Truly funky, very groovy and very mobile. Their music is a huge elastic that can stretch for miles but snaps right back at you if you let it go.

Princess — A rather new band with a punk and metal edge. With machine gun drums, a cursing keyboard and the other instruments, they create an almost original sound and concept of live music.

Square Pyramid — A dynamic, funky mix of blues and rock. You can tell by the looks on the trio's faces, they absolutely love playing live shows.

Synaesthesia — Hypnotic and improvisational, their music tells you a story from a book with long, sensational chapters. These six musicians always attract large crowds, and rightfully so.

yep! — This band has touches of boogie, ska, and spontaneous rock, from their own outrageous, different points of view.

COURTESY BIGGARS BANQUET PICA

Bands like Buffalo Tom started with their roots local, and their concerts intimate, and now they're known around the world. Do one of the bands on the left have what it takes? Catch them now and find out.

King: racial slurs uttered

By LINDA DEUTSCH
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Rodney King insisted to a jury Tuesday that despite his earlier uncertainty in previous testimony, racial slurs were uttered when he was beaten by police officers.

"There's no doubt in my mind," said King, who is suing the city for $9.5 million in connection with his March 3, 1991, beating by four white police officers after a traffic stop. King is black.

Outside court, a lawyer for the city said he was not sure a racial slur was uttered.

"You can hear whatever you want to hear," attorney Skip Miller said. "That's how you can characterize it. It was totally unclear."

The city has admitted liability for King's beating, and jurors are being asked to set a compensatory damage figure.

In a second phase, they will try to allocate blame to individual defendants including the officers for punitive damages.

The four officers charged in the beating, which was videotaped by a bystander and broadcast widely, were acquitted of nearly all assault charges in a 1992 state trial whose verdicts sparked three days of riots.

Two of the officers were convicted last year in federal court of violating King's civil rights and were sentenced to 30 months in prison.

Last year King testified he heard officers shout the racial slur but admitted under cross-examination that he could not remember if he heard the word "nigger" or "killer."

But on Tuesday, King, testifying for a second day in his lawsuit against the city, said that in spite of his previous hesitation, he was now certain what he heard the night of the beating.

One of King's attorneys, John Burris, said King modified his testimony during the criminal trial because "he was under a lot of pressure."

On direct examination, King testified he could identify the point on the video soundtrack when the slur was uttered.

"With my head turned, I can point it out," King said. Some in the courtroom also said they could hear a voice shout, "Nigger, stay down."

Girl turns in pothead mother

HULL, Mass. (AP) — A 40-year-old woman and her boyfriend have been arrested and charged with marijuana possession after they were turned in to police by the woman's 12-year-old daughter.

Sixth-grader Georgette Cummisky called a friend to say her mother Donna Cummisky and boyfriend Nicholas Pappas, 57, were smoking marijuana in their apartment Friday night.

The friend called police.

The couple admitted to responding officers that they were smoking a joint.

But Georgette Cummisky "came out of her room and told the parents not to lie and showed the officers where the marijuana was," said Police Capt. Donald DiMarzio.

"It was her obvious interest in her mother's welfare that prompted her to take these actions," DiMarzio told The Patriot Ledger of Quincy.

The girl opened the drawer of a table in the living room and showed the officers a bag of marijuana, the police said.

Investigators also found marijuana cigarettes.

inated, one of the President's emissaries was in Cuba "to discuss ways to improve relations." That same day, in an attempt to kill Castro, CIA agent "Desmond Fitzgerald handed Rolando Cubela a hypodermic syringe filled with black leaf 40," said Agee. He later explained how in the efforts to discredit Castro, the CIA "laced with LSD the cigars he was suppose to smoke during one of his marathon speeches so he would look like a loon...and attempted to put depilatory powder in his shoes so his beard would fall off." Agee called these activities "your tax dollars at work."

In the subject of the Soviet involvement in Cuba, Agee said that it was an exampte of how CIA "covert operations had a boomerang effect." He linked the Soviet decision to station mid-range nuclear weapons in Cuba to the CIA's Operation Mongoose, designed to destabilize Cuba.

Agee was also very critical of the Torricelli bill, a law designed to tighten the U.S. economic blockade of Cuba by regulating foreign trade. According to him, the result has been "a catastrophe for the Cuban people. . .and a violation of international law and the GATT agreements."

Last summer Mr. Agee joined 174 other Americans in their attempt to defend their constitutional right to travel by visiting Cuba, which, under current laws, can mean up to 10 years in jail. He invited the audience to participate in the next "travel challenge" between June 21 and 30. According to him it is the only way to appreciate first hand Cuba's achievements in health, education and equity that rival those of the U.S. "See it for yourself," Agee concluded.

because it is currently too expensive. The robot they constructed costs $300,000. Grupen also said that the robot would be useful for such tasks as repairing satellites and helping rehabilitate physically handicapped people.

Grupen said his ultimate long-term goal is to develop a robot who can autonomously assemble a product such as a wheel barrel given the parts, tool, and some instructions. He also said he would like to build a robot that is similar to a human baby in that it would learn about the world by seeing and interpreting its perceptions.

Funding for this research has come from the National Science Foundation and from several industrial sponsors. Grupen said his team has spent $1.1 million on the research in the past five or six years.

Health is also seeking to develop a liaison with the Amherst Regional school system which would allow the Board of Health to help the school system educate students about the dangers of smoking.

"When youths start smoking below age 18, they're more likely to develop a life-long habit," said Frederic.

Selectwoman Carotyn Holstein voiced her support of including provisions in the proposal which would address the education of students.

"Since preventing nicotine addiction is so important, I hope that there will be education programs to go along with it to make kids think about this choice," said Holstein.

EUNICE R. KONIECZNY
STUDENT LEADERSHIP AWARD

The Eunice R. Konieczny Student Leadership Award was established in 1985 to annually recognize students who exemplify the highest leadership and public service ideals to the entire university community and who demonstrate a commitment to the vitality of the Student Activities Trust Fund (SATF). Student participation in out-of-class activities as a complement to academics involves personal development, leadership and team building, sensitivity to diversity, and advocacy for student needs and concerns. Award candidates must show how their participation enriches both their organization and by extension, the larger campus community. This award honors Eunice R. Konieczny who provided over twenty years of dedicated service to the Student Government Association.

QUALIFICATIONS

1. Any undergraduate senior who is a current officer in a Registered Student Organization (RSO) or the Student Government Association (SGA) at UMass Amherst, and who has had one academic year of experience as an office holder prior to this time may apply.

2. A recipient must have a cumulative G.P.A. of 3.0 or above.

The Far Side — By Gary Larson

"Well, Donald — forgot your sun block, I see."

Your Horoscope

By Jeane Dixon

ARIES (March 21–April 19): Favorable developments enhance your image. The financial outlook continues to brighten. You cannot afford to hibernate any time illusions regarding a personal relationship. Face reality.

TAURUS (April 20–May 20): Today you might wish you were three different people — loving mate, financial wizard and world traveler! Heed your intuition in personal matters. A legacy or windfall could be part of the picture.

GEMINI (May 21–June 20): Treat associates and family members with greater respect. They will respond in kind. Practice small economies if you want to take a special trip. With thrift, you can build a vacation fund.

CANCER (June 21–July 22): Nip gossip in the bud by confronting the person spreading it. Do not risk for loans; you will only stir up resentment. A tighter budget or second job will reduce financial strain.

LEO (July 23–Aug. 22): A raise or promotion is in the works. Be patient! Where romance is concerned, get ready to move in a new direction. Love could blossom in a business setting. Be discreet; meet alert hours.

VIRGO (Aug. 23–Sept. 22): Your powers of persuasion are at a peak. Exchange views freely with your mate or partner. A festive evening with friends leaves you feeling much happier about life.

LIBRA (Sept. 23–Oct. 22): Keep looking for ways to bolster your financial position. Family unity contributes to a strong sense of well-being. Be more adventuresome. Explore the natural wonders that lie close to your home.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23–Nov. 21): A building or home expansion project could be more complicated than you anticipated. Self-improvement activities will be loved ones know you are on the right track.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22–Dec. 21): You will not accomplish much if you let others influence you against your better judgment. Question off-the-wall ideas and politely dismiss impractical suggestions.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22–Jan. 19): Tackle a big project only when you know you have the strength persistence to finish it. Delegate time-consuming routine tasks. Inspect work tools and equipment for safety flaws.

AQUARIUS (Jan 20–Feb. 18): Someone will be touchy about their prerogatives today. Be tactful, considerate. A competitor may try to deceive you. Seek legal advice if puzzled by some of the wording in a contract.

PISCES (Feb. 19–March 20): Keep low profile if your co-workers quarrel. An arrangement you thought was firm could come unglued. Make up for lost time by taking a more realistic view of your current circumstances.

Cowboys for Johnson, who had five years left on his contract at $1 million a year.

"Some have described our relationship as rocky," Johnson said, "but something about our relationship worked. Something was very, very good."

Many of the differences have stemmed from the desire of Jones to be known as "a football guy." Jones said during the week preceding the Cowboys' 30-13 Super Bowl win over Buffalo in January that he had the ability to coach the team.

Then, he added fuel to the fued by suggesting this week that there were numerous other coaches capable of taking the Cowboys to the Super Bowl considering the stockpile of talent.

Johnson's departure, however, may lead to the defection of some of that talent including linebacker Ken Norton, fullback Daryl Johnston, wide receiver Alvin Harper and offensive linemen Nate Newton and Kevin Gogan.

Jersey. Kenny Anderson is doing it all for Chuck Daly, but when it comes down to it, go with the Knicks.

Riley's defense is impeccable. No one can beat them in a seven-game series because they don't let the opponent score over 90. Unless they score over 100. Pencil NY in as the Eastern Conference Champion.

Except if the Nets come on strong.

Did you see that?

• Magic Johnson's debut. Wait a minute, of course you did.

Bayno talks to BU

By ARTHUR STAPLETON JR.
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's basketball program may soon lose one of the most important components which has helped in its rapid rise to success over the past five years.

Minuteman Assistant Coach Bill Bayno, who has been an intricate part of head coach John Calipari's staff, has contacted Boston University officials about the possibility of filling the school's head coaching vacancy.

UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Massachusetts Assistant Coach Bill Bayno

There has been no word on whether or not Bayno will receive an interview with the Terriers or is even being considered for the job.

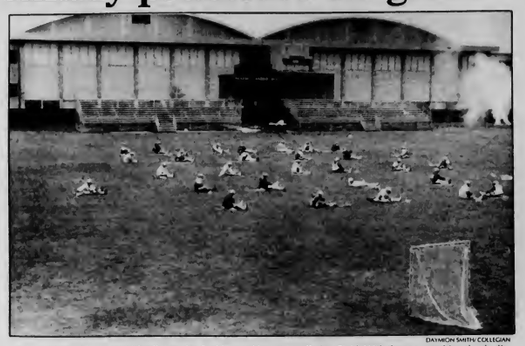
Even though he has approached the Terriers about the opening, Bayno says that he doesn't know if he would leave Massachusetts if he's offered the position.

"I'd be tempted to wait another year, because we could have a shot at the Final Four," Bayno said.

Along with fellow UMass assistant coach James "Bruiser" Flint, Bayno has been the anchor of recruiting for the Minuteman program. Calipari said before this season that Bayno would be a head coach within the next two seasons. Now it seems his departure may be sooner.

"He's been here for five years and helped me build this program. He's meant more to recruiting and to the coaching part — coaching, teaching — than anyone else," Calipari said.

Bayno played for the Minutemen from 1980–82, before transferring to Sacred Heart where he graduated in 1985.



His collegiate coaching stint began under P.J. Carlesimo at Seton Hall as an assistant.

Bayno then went on to coach under former Kansas and now–Indiana Pacer head coach Larry Brown and was part of the Jayhawk run in 1987 to the Sweet Sixteen of the NCAA Tournament.

The Goshen, N.Y., native left Kansas after that season and, after a one–year stay at Baptist College in Charleston, S.C., came to UMass to work under Calipari.

The Terrier job became available when Boston University decided not to bring back former head coach Rob Brown, who led the team this past season to an 11–16 record.

Men's lax gets out on Hill, finally practices on grass

DAYMON SMITH/COLLEGIAN

From a distance, you could finally see the Gorillas working out on Garber Field. With the snow and ice slowly disappearing, the Massachusetts lax team readies for Hofstra.

By MATT VAUTOUR
Collegian Staff

With the weather finally getting favorable and the Fleet Classic this upcoming weekend, the University of Massachusetts lacrosse season is in full swing.

Mother Nature finally lets up. After inhabiting Boyden and parking lots for most of the preseason, the Gorillas finally made it outside. Lack of outdoor practice hindered UMass in its opening game loss to Virginia.

The team is hoping the field will be ready for the April 6 match–up against the Providence Friars.

No. 13 Gorillas looking to move up this weekend.

UMass goes into the Fleet invitational with a chance to make a considerable jump in the poll. Currently ranked 15th, the Gorillas will play No. 9 Hofstra on Friday and either No. 4 Syracuse or No. 14 Brown on Saturday. Two wins or a split could prove favorable in the rankings.

If the Gorillas do find themselves playing Syracuse, it will be the fifth time this year that a UMass team has played a defending national champion. UMass is 2–2 against defending champs. The men's basketball team beat North Carolina in the semi–finals of the Pre–season NIT and Field Hockey beat Old Dominion, while women's soccer and basketball fell to North Carolina and Texas Tech respectively.

LoPresti a workhorse early. Junior goalkeeper Tom LoPresti has been an iron man, facing 59 shots in the first two games, posting a .542 save percentage.

Depp sharp as he begins his campaign for All–America. Wes Depp shined in the Gorillas 15–7 win over St. John's, scoring two goals and assisting on three others. The senior has 3 goals and 3 assists on the season to lead UMass with 6 points on the year.

Have we been here before? One year ago the Gorillas opened their season with a loss to Virginia and victory against St. John's, a sequence that they have mirrored so far this year. Their third game last year? A 16–6 loss to Hofstra, a feat that they hope to reverse when they face the flying Dutchmen on Friday.

Streaking. Junior All–America candidate Mike Valente extended his scoring streak to 17 games with an assist against UVA and a goal against St. John's.

Beginner's Luck? Not likely. Brendan Glass has not shown any signs of stage fright for UMass scoring two goals in each of the first two games. The former high school All– American is Gorillas' second leading scorer.

Faceoffs. Sam Joseph has been a faceoff specialist, winning 25 of 42.

Parody at the Top. After getting all 11 first place votes last week, Princeton dropped an 14–13 nailbiter last weekend to unranked Harvard.

Like father, like son. Garber is following the success that his father had. Dick Garber won 300 games in 36 seasons. Ted in his 16th season has 108 victories under his belt.

Following the road to Four

Picking the NCAA tourney winner is anyone's guess

Every year, 64 teams get together to try and prove to each other that they have what it takes to be called national champions. Some of these teams, knowing that it is very difficult to make it to the Final Four, are satisfied with the thought of at least making it to the Sweet 16.

In the Sweet 16, there are four teams from each region: that is, West, Midwest, East, and Southwest. Each conference has a total of 16 teams which battle to be No. 1 of that conference, and that times four, makes up the total of 64 teams.

Although everyone was looking forward to seeing UMass possibly battle Arkansas in the Midwest Semi-finals, the party just got rained on too early for the Minutemen.

Personally, I did not think that UMass was going to make it to the Final Four, but I at least knew that we were supposed to beat Maryland in the second round and then have a challenging game in the Regionals against Michigan.

But it seemed that there was no joy in UMassville, for the Mighty Minutemen had struck out.

This was only one of the upsets that happened all around the tournament since the First Round. I mean, who ever thought that No. 12 Tulsa would actually beat the favorite, No. 5 UCLA.

This only marked the beginning of a road of astonishment. . . and also one on which a lot of people lost bets.

How about Wisconsin–Green Bay beating California for the Second Round spot? All around, everything else looked pretty decent from here, until Boston College came out of left field, or side court I should say, and totally put North Carolina out of commission. This, of the Second Round upsets, had to be the biggest.

This only marked the beginning of a road of astonishment. . .and also one on which a lot of people lost bets.

Jose Candelier

Another favorite, Kentucky, tasted defeat when they were surprised by Marquette in Round Two. This was also where UMass made a UTurn on the road to the Final Four.

Going to the Regionals, everything seemed to be partially what most people had in mind, like if things could get worse from what it already was.

Nothing major happened this time around, except that Indiana imitated UNC and lost to Boston College.

B.C. wasn't the only team to knock off top seeds. Tulsa did its best Eagle impersonation when it buried No. 4 Oklahoma St. in the Second Round.

But Boston College was the talk of the town for a team to come out of nowhere and make a surprise entrance into the Semi–Finals.

The Florida Gators, who had finally ended UConn's streak, had to tighten their belts when they faced BC.

By now, we were now down to the final eight. Purdue had advanced to the Semi–Finals with no sweat, but only to find that the Blue Devils were going to give them a workout and advance to the Final Four, as usual.

In the Midwest, the Wolverines had to face the Hogs, only to find that the Razorbacks were as ready as ever to the advance to the Final Four. Arizona surprised No. 1 Missouri, 92–72, in the West. And finally, Florida was the chosen team to finally put a rest to the only team that had seemed to surprise everyone every time they played. . . BC.

I guess Florida wasn't trying to hear the sound of three great teams falling in a row.

Finally, we are down to the Final Four. All I can say is you call it, because the way things are going, anybody can be the 1994 NCAA Champ.

In my picks, I had Purdue, UNC, Missouri and Arkansas, with the Hogs going all the way. So far it seems the Hogs are in, but my other three choices did not have a prayer.

From the looks of it now, I see Duke and Arkansas meeting again, with the Hogs beating the Devils, simply because they beat my favorite team. I can assure you that this is what will occur this coming weekend. But it is truly too early to tell who will take it all.

Could it be the most recent upsetter Arizona, who beat Missouri? Or Duke for two . . . I still go with the Prez.

Johnson leaves Cowboys

AP PHOTO

Former Dallas Cowboys head coach Jimmy Johnson

By DENNE H. FREEMAN
Associated Press

IRVING, Texas — Jimmy Johnson severed his tempestuous five-year relationship with Jerry Jones today, leaving the Dallas Cowboys and a chance to win an unprecedented third straight Super Bowl.

Johnson's resignation capped a long-standing feud that boiled over in Orlando, Fla., last week when Jones suggested in a barroom conversation that he should hire a new coach, and his remarks got back to Johnson.

"After our discussions, we have mutually decided that I would no longer be the head football coach of the Dallas Cowboys," Johnson said, sitting to the right of Jones at the Cowboys' Valley Ranch headquarters after two days of meetings.

But their kind words today aside, the feud between the two began almost as soon as Jones bought the team in 1989, fired Tom Landry and made Johnson his coach.

"This boiled down to a personal thing between Jimmy and Jerry," said defensive coordinator Butch Davis, who has been with Johnson throughout his 15-year coaching career. "It was nothing about football, it was nothing about management. This was personal."

During the NFL owners' meeting last week in Orlando, Jones had suggested in public that he would fire Johnson and replace him with former Oklahoma coach Barry Switzer.

Johnson, infuriated, left the meetings the next morning. Jones said at their joint news conference today that no successor to Johnson would be named immediately.

Switzer was one of the possible successors along with Notre Dame coach Lou Holtz and Davis. Davis has never been a head coach at any level and has been with Johnson since his days at Oklahoma State, but at this late date, he would be the most likely successor for reasons of continuity.

Johnson, meanwhile, tried to put the best light on things. "Personally, it was a time I think I needed to pull back some," Johnson said. "Anybody who knows me knows I have to be 100 percent totally focused or else I'm not going to be as good. "I felt like I was beginning to lose that focus, and because of that I'm no longer coach of the Dallas Cowboys," Johnson said. Johnson said he probably would not coach anywhere this year, but added: "Knowing my love for football, I anticipate I would be coaching again."

Fox, which last November wrested the NFC contract away from CBS, is interested in hiring Johnson as an analyst.

"We certainly welcome the opportunity to discuss with Jimmy Johnson the possibility of coming to Fox Sports," said Fox Sports president David Hill. "We would love to have a two-time Super Bowl winning coach on our broadcast team."

NBC Sports president Dick Ebersol said the network thinks "very highly of Jimmy Johnson, but all of our NFL announcing positions are taken."

There was an undisclosed cash settlement from the Key events in the history of the relationship between Dallas Cowboys owner Jimmy Jones and former coach Jimmy Johnson (AP):

Feb. 25, 1989 — Jones purchases the Dallas Cowboys and Texas Stadium from H.R. "Bum" Bright for $140 million and hires Johnson to become the second head coach in franchise history, replacing two-time Super Bowl winner Tom Landry. At his first news conference, Jones proclaims Johnson is worth five first-round draft choices and five Heisman Trophy winners.

April 6 — Jones gives Johnson a guaranteed 10-year contract, citing the need for commitment and continuity in rebuilding the franchise.

Jan. 31, 1993 — The Cowboys, playing in their first Super Bowl in 15 years, defeat the Buffalo Bills, 52-17.

Dec. 30 — Johnson says he would be "intrigued" if he were offered the chance to become the first head coach of the Jacksonville Jaguars. The comments come as the Cowboys prepare for their NFC East championship showdown with the New York Giants.

Dec. 31 — Jones strongly rebukes Johnson's interest in working for another team.

Jan. 30, 1994 — Jones and Johnson share the Lombardi Trophy and the Super Bowl championship credit after the Cowboys beat the Buffalo Bills, 31-13.

March 22 — Jones, in a barroom conversation in Florida, suggests he might hire former Oklahoma coach Barry Switzer to coach the Cowboys.

— Johnson says later he is reconsidering his future with the Super Bowl champions after learning that Jones threatened to fire him.

March 23 — Jones says there is nothing for Johnson to assess. He labels it as just another day in the life of the Dallas Cowboys. "He didn't apologize to me and I didn't apologize to him," Jones says of his meeting with Johnson.

March 25 — Johnson, in seclusion in Miami, says in a statement: "I'm deeply hurt that after five years of total commitment to the rebuilding of the Cowboys and after two consecutive Super Bowl championships, I have been treated this way." Johnson adds he would be back at work on Monday.

March 26 — Johnson speaks at Emmitt Smith's football camp in Pensacola, Fla., then returns to Dallas. He says he would not resign from the Cowboys without a job or compensation. He again bristles at the off-the-record comments made by Jones.

March 28 — Jones and Johnson discuss their future.

March 29 — Johnson resigns as coach of the Cowboys.

NCAA isn't the CBA, Kidd

Art Stapleton's Notes from the Hollywood

"I don't think he's ready yet (for the NBA). He's got a lot to learn, not only from a basketball standpoint, but socially as well." — George Washington Coach Mike Jarvis on Yinka Dare.

Dare to be different — actually, Yinka decided to follow in the footsteps of Jason Kidd and by–pass both his junior and senior years of eligibility at the collegiate level for a chance at the big bucks of the NBA. So I'd say he's pretty much a conformist. ,

I agree to the idea that universities live off the reputations of their student–athletes, with recognition being the only benefit these players get. Oh, yeah, I forgot meal money, full scholarships, education. . .

No, honestly, basketball players across the country could be used by their schools; that is if they are only there for one reason and one reason only — to play basketball. Kidd and Dare both left school to pursue the cash. What happened to an education? If you are not going to school for an education, don't go at all.

Do all involved a favor and skip college. Go directly to the NBA. Oh, what's that? You won't be a lottery pick if you don't prepare yourself in college. Well, the last time I checked, the acronym was NCAA, not CBA, USBL or AAU.

I don't want to change my tune, but if Dare did in fact leave GW in the best interest of his family, then fine. That is the only reason why I would agree with leaving school before you finish your junior year.

Kidd is amazing on the court. Enough said. But he has a total of two — count 'em, two — NCAA tourney victories under his belt. The NBA holds a special event every All– Star Weekend, Jason; it's called the Stay–in–School Jam. Maybe you should watch and learn sometime.

And the rich get richer. Kidd lucked out when Glenn Robinson (I refuse to call him the Big Dog until he puts on that hat on Draft Day) said he's staying at Purdue, at least for now. I think Kidd may find himself playing with Jimmy Jackson and Jamal Mashburn in Big D if the Mavs' luck out and get the first pick in the draft.

In Defense of the New York Knicks.

John Starks goes down with a possible season–ending knee injury. Doc Rivers has been long–gone. Ro Blackman is too old. Charles Smith is Charles Smith, not the troubled one from the Celtics via G–Town but the one from the Clippers via Pitt. But the Knicks keep winning — Riley style.

Heading into last night's action, the Knickerbockers had won 13 in a row, the longest winning streak the franchise has had since it last won the NBA title. Charlotte's still recouperating even though Zo and LJ are back, Atlanta has Manning instead of the best scorer in the game, Chicago is Jordan–less and Orlando lacks a power forward.

It seems to me, by my calculations, that the only teams left worth talking about are the Knicks and. . .

Say What?

"The problem is, in a moment like this, you wish you could play...I live and breathe...this is killing me because I can't be a part of it."

Israel—PLO agree to West Bank police

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Israel and the PLO agreed on Wednesday to a police force of 100 Palestinians in the West Bank town of Hebron, but still argued over the makeup of a foreign observer mission there, PLO sources said.

An Israeli official said late Wednesday that many problems remained.

The PLO has demanded protection for Hebron's 80,000 residents before returning to overall peace talks on Palestinian self-rule in the Gaza Strip and West Bank town of Jericho.

The broader talks have been halted since Feb. 25 when a Jewish settler killed 30 Palestinians in a Hebron mosque. The Israeli army's slaying Monday of six PLO activists in the occupied Gaza Strip threatened to again disrupt the negotiations.

China allows U.N. resolution

WASHINGTON (AP) — China will permit the U.N. Security Council to approve a resolution urging North Korea to open its suspect nuclear sites to international inspectors, South Korea's foreign minister said Wednesday.

But the minister, Han Seung-joo, said the resolution would impose "minimum requirements," and the State Department spokesman said it may be a month before another, tougher, resolution is presented to the council.

The International Atomic Energy Agency in the meantime will evaluate data collected during inspections in March to determine whether North Korea has an active program to develop nuclear weapons, department spokesman Michael McCurry said.

National

Religion in schools reaches Supreme Court

WASHINGTON (AP) — The constitutional separation of church and state allows creation of a public school district to accommodate an insular Hasidic Jewish community's beliefs, the Supreme Court was told Wednesday.

"We believe that is part of the spirit of accommodation" of religion allowed by the Constitution's First Amendment, attorney Nathan Lewin argued for the school district for disabled children in the New York village of Kiryas Joel.

But a lawyer for state school board officials said the district's creation violated the amendment's concurrent ban on government establishment of religion.

State/Regional

Bridge collapse leads to demotion

SOUTH HADLEY, Mass. (AP) - The state's top regional highway supervisor was demoted Wednesday, a week after a concrete walkway on a state highway bridge collapsed sending two teen-agers tumbling into the Connecticut River.

Joseph Superneau, who had supervised the state Highway Department's operations in Hampden, Hampshire and Franklin counties, was reassigned to the department's Boston office for failing to ensure warning signs and barriers were in place on the unsafe sidewalk, said Jodi D'Urso, a spokeswoman for state Transportation Secretary James Kerasiotes.

"Someone in the district should have noticed that the barricades were down," said D'Urso. "And we believe that managers should be held accountable."

Remembering Tara Hartnett

By VANESSA AMIN and CATHERINE B. PULLEY
Collegian Staff

On the evening of March 20, 1993, the body of Tara Hartnett, a University of Massachusetts senior, was found inside the burned ruins of her Sunderland home. James Cyr Jr., a former UMass student and Hartnett's ex–boyfriend, was charged in the murder.

> "The program is designed to educate the UMass community on the issues of relationship violence."
> – Erma Gonzalez

Hartnett will be remembered tomorrow in a number of events organized by the Everywoman's Center Educator/ Advocate Program. Resource tables in the Campus Center will provide information on relationship violence, and self–defense training, an open Clothesline Project, and an Oscar–winning documentary on relationship violence are scheduled.

Hartnett, 21, suffered multiple stab wounds, but died of smoke inhalation. Police said they believe the fire at the home Hartnett shared with five roommates was arson.

Cyr was arrested the night of the murder, and pleaded innocent to charges of murder, arson, violation of a restraining order, assault and battery by means of a deadly weapon.

He is currently awaiting trial and faces life imprisonment if convicted. The case will be presented to the grand jury of Franklin County.

Cyr was arrested early March 21 at Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton, where he was seeking treatment for cuts on his hands. In a statement to the police, Cyr said his hands were wounded in an attack on the UMass campus while he was stopped at a red light. He said someone opened his car door, and lunged at him with a knife.

A hospital medical worker said Cyr smelled like smoke and his hair was singed when he sought treatment. Cyr told police he burned his hair in his home on a gas stove when he stopped to pick up the phone receiver.

One week before the murder Cyr appeared in court to face assault and battery charges for an incident that happened Feb. 12 of that year. Hartnett and Cyr were involved in a custody dispute over their daughter, Megan, and each had restraining orders against the other. Hartnett's parents currently have custody of Megan, who is now almost 2– years–old.

According to Erma Gonzalez, the Coordinator Educator/ Advocate Program at the Everywoman's Center, it is critical to honor the memory of someone who was murdered in this tragic way.

"The program is designed to educate the UMass community on the issues of relationship violence," Gonzalez said.

According to Patricia Mota Guedes, the Volunteer Coordinator Educator/Advocate Program at the Everywoman's Center, she helped to organize this memorial to make students aware that domestic violence is a reality.

"I want to make sure students understand that domestic violence can involve couples who are not married," Guedes said.

All students are welcome to join the Hartnett family and close friends to honor the memory of Tara Hartnett tomorrow in the Campus Center at 12:30 p.m.

Bachrach enters race for governor

By JUSTIN DOYLE
Collegian Staff

ADAM CONSKEY/COLLEGIAN

Democratic gubinatorial candidate George Bachrach

Much like when Bill Clinton began to battle President Bush in 1992, George Bachrach, a Democratic candidate for governor of Massachusetts, has started the uphill climb to dethrone Republican Governor William Weld.

In January Bachrach entered the race for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination, beginning a campaign that has taken him across the state voicing the very traditional values of his party. At a time when Democrats seem to be leaning slightly right, Bachrach becomes the exception instead of the rule.

Politics are nothing new to the former senator. Bachrach served as the campaign manager for Congressman Ed Markey. He also represented Watertown, Belmont, Cambridge and Allston–Brighton after unseating a 26–year incumbent for the office of state senator.

One of Bachrach's concerns is the cost of higher education, an issue that the University of Massachusetts is very familiar with.

"This state has decimated the scholarship funds for public higher education," Bachrach said. "This ought to be a system that is open to everybody in this commonwealth, whether they can afford the education or not."

"This administration so severely cut the scholarships that it is very tough for a lot of kids to go to school at UMass or other schools," Bachrach said.

Bachrach's work as President of the Statewide Advisory Council for the Office of Children for six years has made him committed to working for more state programs for children.

"I have watched as this government has made relentless cuts in children's services," Bachrach said. "They have made such severe cuts in those kinds of programs that we can't protect kids anymore."

"I want to talk about arranging human services for programs that are struggling with retarded children at home and need respite care, senior citizens that need home care so they can stay in their homes and not go to nursing homes," said Bachrach.

Bachrach stressed that he was the candidate who would talk about reinvesting in a series of programs to build a better future.

"I think it is a good investment to increase scholarship money so that more young people can go to college," said Bachrach. "I think it is a good investment to invest in affordable daycare so more working women can go off to work knowing that their kids are well taken care of."

Bachrach's comments have created controversy and his statements have not won over his party members. But, he refuses to pull punches and isn't worried about offeneding.

"While I'm told by some that I'm unfashionable to talk about those programs, frankly I don't give a damn. I intend to speak about them."

Bachrach's campaign has done its job so far. Early polls put him slightly ahead of state Rep. Mark Roosevelt and state Sen. Michael Barrett, the other Democratic candidates for governor.

Basketball banquet in jeopardy

HADLEY, Mass. (AP) — The selectmen of this little town are twisting the arm of the University of Massachusetts with a liquor license.

Quarreling with the university over taxes from a campus arena, the selectmen are threatening to deny a one-day liquor license for a campus basketball banquet.

"We want to be counted as part of the community," selectman Glenn Clark said Tuesday. "They only come to us when they want something."

"I feel sorry that they feel that way," said Paul Page, a university vice chancellor. "There's no overt posture of the university to create that type of a situation. Like a lot of municipalities, Hadley is feeling some budget crunch and is looking for ways to try to make ends meet."

The dispute arose with the opening of the 9,500-seat Mullins Center in February 1993 on Hadley town

UM looking for increase in state monetary help

BOSTON (AP) — The University of Massachusetts is planning to ask the Legislature for a $21.8 million increase in the state's $322.2 million contribution to the five-campus system.

The university says it needs the money to maintain the current level of programs and services. The increase would also allow the university to roll back to zero proposed student charge increases for fiscal 1995.

University President Michael Hooker is to discuss the university's budget request with the House Ways and Means Committee Thursday. The university's budget presentation was released in advance of the meeting.

Gov. Weld's budget spokesman, Dom Slowey, said the governor's budget only calls for about a $4 million increase, which would be placed in a special Higher Education Reserve Fund that would be managed by the Higher Education Coordinating Council.

Slowey said that would give the Weld administration "a little bit more control over how the money would be used."

"I don't think they're asking for the sky here," Slowey said of the university's request.

But he also noted the university has $180 million more in state funding than it did in fiscal 1992 and its trust fund spending is also up by $74 million.

In related news, a key legislative committee on Wednesday gave a favorable report to a bill that would allow the university to raise $100 million to make repairs by issuing bonds with the help of the Higher Education Financing Authority.

Nursing doctoral program finally approved by UMass

By GERI SAHN
Collegian Staff

After originally being denied in November, the request for a Ph.D. program in nursing has finally been approved by the Higher Education Coordination Council.

The program, to be established at the Amherst and Worcester campuses, is called "The Amherst–Worcester Collaborative Ph.D. Program."

Last April, the University Board of Trustees accepted a proposal made by the nursing department to have a collaborative nursing Ph.D. program between the two campuses. The nursing department has been working on the program since 1988.

On March 14, the program was approved by NECC, who evaluates higher education programs. The program will begin accepting students for enrollment in September 1994. Six students will be accepted in the first class.

Ellan Cole, associate professor of nursing at UMass– Amherst, said the program will advance nursing knowledge as well as other disciplines.

"We are very pleased to have this program. We have been working on it for a very long time. I think it is going to be great for health care and nurses in

SGA elects speaker, treasurer

By BRIAN GORMLEY
Collegian Staff

Two key leadership positions in the University of Massachusetts Undergraduate Student Government Association changed hands, as the SGA elected a new speaker and treasurer last night.

Mercedes Betanco was elected undergraduate student speaker, replacing Matthew Pavesi, and Ricardo Neal was elected treasurer replacing Peter Roaf.

During the elections for speaker, two of the candidates, Senators Shamele Straughter and Tom Darby, backed out of the race and pledged their support for the eventual winner, Betanco.

Betanco said she did not expect to get the support of Darby and Straughter, but she also said she was thankful for it and that she hoped she could fulfill their expectations.

"I was extremely surprised, I didn't expect support from either one of them," Betanco said. "Everybody should have ran, but I appreciate their support because it means that they think I can do the job. I hope I don't let any of the people who did support me down."

Betanco said her predecessor Matthew Pavesi did an excellent job as speaker and she would like to pick up where he left off. She also said she would like to see the student government become accessible to more people on campus.

"My main goal is to keep up the good work Matt has done," she said. "I would also like to see the SGA make more contact with everyone so that they don't see the SGA as a little clique. I want to reach out to more of the student body and the other leaders on campus because not everyone is a leader in the SGA."

Treasurer Neal said one of the things he will do to combat the student government's $145,089 debt is lobby the University's athletic department for more funding for club sports.

"Club sports such as fencing and girls field hockey compete nationally and do very well and the University does not support them enough in my

Anti–Semitism hits Hillel

A recent letter received by the University of Massachusetts Hillel House contained anti-Semitic threats and insults, according to Rabbi Saul Perlmutter.

"There have been anti-Semitic incidents against individual students," Perlmutter said. "This was clearly against Hillel as a whole."

The letter said "leave Louis alone" which Perlmutter said he believes is a reference to Louis Farrakhan's recent visit. It was signed "Josh Charles, Brookline" which is believed by Hillel to be a false name.

Jessica Lopatin, a member of Hillel, was the first to receive the letter and she immediately called police.

Perlmutter said students should notify the police, Hillel and the dean of students office if they are the victim of anti- Semitism.

"We'll help anyway we can, to press charges or give support," Perlmutter said.

"The system works to protect people," he said. "This is upsetting kind of stuff."

Massachusetts," Cole said.

In the first two years, students will be studying, full–time, in classes on both campuses through teleconference capabilities. Students will begin their dissertation research during their third year.

Students will also be able to use resources from both campuses. A collaborative committee will make all decisions in the program.

The research areas which will be studied in the program include: mental health, community health, primary health nursing, gerontology, child health nursing, critical care nursing and nursing management.

"This collaborative doctoral level program responds to educational needs at a time when accessibility to quality health care and maintaining reasonable health care costs are the burning issues of the day," said UMass President Michael K. Hooker.

"This new program brings together the expertise of our Amherst and Worcester campuses on this pressing national issue," he said.

The proposal was denied in November because HECC felt there were problems within the program. Melanie Dreher resigned as dean of the nursing program at UMass–Amherst in response to the rejection of the program. Cole said there has been no word on Dreher's return because no one has spoken to her.

Boston College is the only college in Massachusetts where the nursing department has a doctoral program.

Glen Gordon, provost at the UMass–Amherst, said, "With only one other doctoral program for nurses in Massachusetts, and that at a private institution, the University is providing a critically needed educational opportunity."

Both the University of Massachusetts at Boston and Lowell are considering having this program as well.

opinion," Neal said.

Neal also said he would pursue control of the Student Activities Trust Fund's interest. Each student pays $84 per semester to the SATF, which funds Registered Student Organizations and other student services. Currently the interest earned on that account is controlled by the University and not the students.

"The SGA has no control over the interest we earn from the SATF. If we had that money we could easily wipe out the deficit," he said.

Neal also said the SATF fee will have to be increased eventually in order to maintain the level of services currently provided for students. He said the SG did not look to increase this fee now because it would be hypocritical for them to try and increase the fee at time when they are fighting for a 0 percent tuition and fee increase for next year.

A different kind of feminist

Feminism. The very word conjures up a variety of images depending on the contact one has had with the women's movement. It seems, almost, that many women who consider themselves "feminists" refuse to use that label because they don't like the images associated with it.

When Gloria Steinem came to Smith College last spring, the Valley was buzzing with many who claimed that her words "empowered them." An article from last spring's Collegian (March 1, 1993) quoted one woman as saying "[Gloria Steinem] is wonderful. She gives me a right to be who I want to be... She's very empowering." Another woman said "She gives me self–authority and validates the rage and anger that is so invalidated by society." She gives me self–authority? is this possible? This particular brand of authority comes from oneself, hence the prefix "self."

Feminism puts words in the mouths of women. It tells them what to do, or how to act in order to be "true" to the doctrines of feminism.

Tracy Monahan

The idea of gaining self–esteem from another person is not what it's all about. No one can empower another person with their words. Empowerment comes from inside. The name of the book Steinem was discussing on this date was Revolution from Within: A Book of Self–Esteem.

Feminism puts words in the mouths of women. It tells them what to do, or how to act in order to be "true" to the doctrines of feminism. Many of the women I know feel left out of the movement because they have mainstream or conservative views.

I consider myself a feminist, despite the fact that I disagree with much of the rhetoric of the women's movement. I believe in equality for women but I don't think anyone is going to — or should — hand it to us. I can use my strengths, talents and abilities to achieve anything I want.

I'm not only a woman, I'm also Irish, and the Irish work ethic pounded into me by my father (and by his father before him) was this: go out and earn whatever it is you want. No one is going to hand it to you on a silver platter while you sit back and rest. I don't mean to take anything away from the women's movement. I just think that individuals working for themselves gain more.

I also don't believe that men are the root of all evil. There are things I can't do and times when I need help. I don't think leaning on men for support takes anything away from my beliefs or diminishes my accomplishments. Neither, on the other hand, does helping out a man undermine my intelligence.

I call blatant sexism when I see it and I agree that subtle forms of sexism pervade all areas of society. However, calling out all incidents of sexism, whether real or perceived, does very little for feminism besides earning its believers adjectives like "hysterical," "overly sensitive," "bitch," and "overreacting."

If I can get just one man I know to respect my intelligence and my accomplishments and to be willing to help me in my daily life, I've achieved more than painstakingly pointing out every perceived sexist slight I see.

I have a friend who is very much a feminist. She's intelligent, aggressive and doesn't let anyone, male or female, stand in her way. She refuses, however, to even let me explain why I think she is a feminist. When I told her I thought she was, her immediate reaction was "Bite your tongue." The term is offensive to her. She considers herself to be a woman who is going places. In fact, I know many women who consider the term "feminist" to be an insult.

I know I face challenges like glass ceilings, unequal pay and sexual harassment, but I have confidence in myself and know I can do anything. I was raised to believe that any career I ever wanted would be open to me and I still feel that way. The only person who can stop me is me.

Kansas trip an eye–opener

Those of you familiar with this space will notice the name change. The new name is for this week only as this column originates, as usual, from right here in Amherst. But I just got home from Kansas, a place I never thought I'd be anywhere close to, and I want to go back.

I would imagine that Kansas isn't one of the more popular destinations for spring break. But when the Minutemen were sent to Wichita to compete in the opening round of the NCAA Tournament, I changed my plans from a possible break in St. Petersburg or Sacramento to a trip into the middle of nowhere.

Kansas.

Hey, I thought, I'll probably never have any reason to visit Kansas again. Besides, it was only for a couple days, and if there was nothing else to do, at least I'd get to see some good basketball. The quality of the basketball in the Kansas Coliseum was questionable, but the trip didn't turn out to be a total loss — it exposed me to a part of the country I might never have seen.

I didn't really know anything about Kansas, but it turned out that — at least as far as the weather was concerned — we were better off than being stuck in Amherst. When we stepped off the plane in Kansas City, Mo., the temperature was a balmy 77 degrees. Contrast that with the snow squalls we had around here just yesterday, and that should partially explain why I preferred Kansas to Western Mass.

I was in Kansas to watch our basketball team, but I did have the opportunity to visit a few college campuses. One afternoon I took a drive to the campus of Wichita State University, a small college probably comparable to Salem State — in size only. The layout of the campus made sense! There was a road which circled the campus, and every several hundred yards there was a map so visitors could find out where they were.

One of the first things I noticed was the lack of parking meters. There was plenty of parking for students, faculty and visitors, but it seemed clear that the school wasn't trying to make parking fees a major source of income. Unlike the philosophy of this campus (which seems to be, "Make it as hard as possible to find a parking spot on campus, charge as much as we can and ticket often") it actually seemed like they wanted people to come to their campus, and weren't going to penalize them for using cars to get there.

And the buildings at WSU looked like those you see on television when they show colleges — big, stately brick structures with flowers and shrubs out front as well as the occassional piece of sculpture. Sculpture? They left artwork out and the students didn't deface it with grafitti or bright orange 'GEO is a union' stickers? I at once felt both embarassed and angry about the way the UMass campus presents itself not only to visitors, but to those of us who spend so much of our lives here.

After our stay in Wichita was over, we headed back to Kansas City and our flight back to Boston. The University of Kansas campus in Lawrence just happened to be on the route we took, so we decided to pull off the highway and take a look around.

If someone else had been in the car, they might have thought we'd never seen a university campus before. There were four of us in the car, and we were all pointing and wowing.

It seems to me that a student union building — the center of student life on campus — sums up the way a school feels about its students.

Mike Carvalho
Notes from Wichita and Lawrence, Kan.

On one road there were several very attractive buildings which looked like mansions. They each had manicured lawns, pillars and... Greek letters. These beautiful homes were the KU fraternities and sororities. "Where are the couches?" I wondered aloud. The appearance of this part of campus was genuinely improved by the lack of shredded–up old furniture which we have in abundance on Greek Row at UMass.

Several of the houses we saw there have chapters on this campus as well. Maybe if UMass Greeks took more pride in the way they presented themselves, they wouldn't have such a bad reputation, I thought.

Perhaps the buildings that stick out most when I recall my visits to both campuses, though, were their campus centers/student unions. It seems to me that a student union building — the center of student life on campus — sums up the way a school feels about its students.

From top to bottom, the student unions at both WSU and KU were magnificent — structures which an admissions office would be proud to picture in a brochure without shooting it at a funny angle with special lighting. There were real restaurants, clean (and functional) restrooms and well–lighted study areas. The students making use of the facilities probably never give it a second thought, but for someone coming from a place like UMass, it was incredible.

Having now returned to this campus and our own Lincoln Campus Center, a building which hardly compares to the ones I visited in Kansas, I couldn't help but share my experiences. Next week, the name of this column will change back to 'Notes from the Campus Center Basement.' Unfortunately, it seems unlikely that anything about the Campus Center itself — or this campus — will change anytime soon.

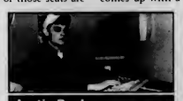
Opinion



Where does the money go?

No, I don't like sitting on the floor.

But, that's exactly what I do twice a week when I go to my oceanography class. It isn't because I want to sit on an inch of wet sand for an hour and fifteen minutes. It's because I have to.

There are about 300 students in the class, and I'm sure there are more than 300 seats in the auditorium that the class is held in. But many of those seats are broken.

Justin Doyle

I can't remember how many times I've walked into an introductory course 10 minutes late — because we all know how interesting the first 10 minutes are — and searched in vain for a seat. It seems like the outside seat in every other row is empty, but when you go to sit down, you find that the seat either doesn't have a cushion, a back, or arm rests. I nearly hit the floor last semester when a seat cushion I sat down on slipped out from underneath me.

After wandering around the auditorium and receiving dirty looks from the professor, you walk to the back of the room, stepping over the people sitting on the floor and try to find an open spot next to them. How am I supposed to concentrate on learning when I'm sitting on a dirty floor?

What's the point of this story? It's all about money. Money my parents shell out to send me to a quality school, but that this school is definitely not using correctly. I'm all for stopping the tuition increases, but what are we going to be left with if this is what we get now — we pay too much money already! There is something wrong here.

$10,000 is a lot of money. I expect to get a decent education for this money. But in my short career at this institution, 80 percent of my classes have been a waste of time. You can blame it on me and say I didn't try to get anything out of those classes, but to that I answer, what about the 20 percent that were worthwhile? This is a good school, but its priorities are a little bit mixed up.

There are students fighting to rename buildings which are failing apart. If you haven't noticed, the fence around the library is for people's own safety. A little while back there were parts of the exterior of the building falling off.

How would UMass look if some poor student was venturing off to the library to increase their knowledge, and bang!, the next thing they know they're being scraped of the pavement? It's not a pretty picture. And, on top of it all, the building is sinking into the ground. Yeah, they can name it after anyone they want, just don't ask me.

I don't even want to mention my dorm. I don't know how many of you have visited Brooks in Central, but between the graffiti and the 3 a.m. fire alarms it's quite an adventure.

Where is the money? Everyday the administration comes up with a new plan to cut the budget. They make cutbacks in TAs and classes — next thing you know, they'll take money away from the dinning commons. Let's face it: the food is too good already. Bring back the cavatelli.

Speaking of TAs, why can't they teach? I've had some good TAs, and then I've had TAs that made me think I could do a better job. Last semester the TA for my communication class was horrible. It was her second year in America — I could understand my two–year old cousin better than her. I thought the name of the course was 'communication.' She couldn't teach, either. Another example of my money put to good use.

There's that 'M' word again. It's true. The reason things are the way they are at UMass all has to do with money and who has it. Students are fighting to lower the increasing cost of tuition. I was just wondering where it all goes, so here's a really simple breakdown:

Students pay about $2200 in tuition (for education). This money goes to those boring lecture classes, pays the administrators' fat salaries, etc. You pay another two grand for a curriculum fee which is supposed to be money for the development of classes. Think again – it's more disguised tuition. I, for one, was fooled.

Then there is a $450 health fee. This pays for health services. For a few hundred dollars you can get a flu shot and free condoms. Too bad the fee doesn't cover hospitalization or catastrophic insurance. Chalk up another $400 for the authority fee which pays to fill the cracks in the concrete at the Fine Arts Center.

Your activities fee will cost you $84 — that's self–explanatory. Discounts on the tickets you bought to see Minister Farrakhan were thanks to the $62 Fine Arts fee. Finally, students can go see Lou Roe dunk for only $199 and a two–hour wait in line for tickets. Yeah, but they're 'free.'

All told, that comes out to about $5,500 — not including room and board. Like the shirt says, "Understand Now?" By the way, can I borrow a few dollars?

Letters to the Editor

Disputes arguments used by columnist

To the editor:

Rachel Sontag's article, "Jews' role in slave trading" [Collegian, March 18], while purporting to be an attempt to set the record straight is, in fact, an extended exercise in distortion. Ms. Sontag is guilty of the very intellectual crimes of which she accuses Minister Farrakhan and the Nation of Islam: "deliberate misquotation," "misleading citation," and "journalistic non–histories."

The bulk of Ms. Sontag's argument about the "minor" Jewish role in the Atlantic slave trade depends on a subtle but fundamentally dishonest intellectual sleight of hand. While Farrakhan, professor Anthony Martin and other Black intellectuals discuss the Atlantic slave trade as a whole, many Jewish intellectuals stealthily shift the discussion onto the slave trade only in what is now the United States.

Since much of the history that Farrakhan, Martin and the others are talking about involves 17th century Surinam and Brazil, it is possible to make them appear to be engaging in deception, while in fact they refer to historical truths.

Finally, Ms. Sontag deliberately mischaracterizes Farrakhan's assertions about the Jewish role in the Atlantic slave trade. Farrakhan has not held Jews to be solely or primarily responsible for this slave trade, as Ms. Sontag suggests. Rather, he has rightly suggested that some Jews played a "major" role in it. Here we enter into semantics, but the role itself is irrefutable.

Surely Black people have a right to judge for themselves who bears responsibility for the vast sufferings of their ancestors. Such legitimate judgements cannot be prima facea evidence of anti–Semitism, but only of intellectual independence (which some may find disturbing).

Ms. Sontag's triumphant conclusion, "Thus, the non–Jew — not the Jew — obviously played the dominant role in the Caribbean slave trade," does not contradict Farrakhan's views or statements. He, and others such as Dr. Martin, have merely attempted, at great cost to themselves, to point out a little–known chapter in Black/Jewish history that does, in fact, have relevance to current debates in the United States.

Articles like Ms. Sontag's do not help the cause of Black/Jewish relations by obfuscating and attempting to gloss over an important Jewish role in a part of the Atlantic slave trade. What would be more useful is an open admission of historical fact — that Jews are capable of being the victimizer as well as the victim — and that this has historically been the case in the Atlantic slave trade as well as in Palestine. Hopefully, as the freshman Ms. Sontag pursues her Smith College career, she will become more open to the nuances of history and the complexity of relations between peoples, particularly the vital need to acknowledge historical responsibilities.

Participate in events to help stop violence

To the editor:

Many of you will remember that one year ago, on March 20, 1993, senior psychology major Tara Harnett was murdered, allegedly by her former boyfriend.

To remember Tara, and to further educate the campus community about relationship violence, the Dean of Students Office and Everywoman's Center are sponsoring a day of activities in the Campus Center today.

We urge all of you who can to participate in the events being held today. Please join us in the work to stop violence.

Farrakhan cancels speech

Rescheduled because women would be attending

HOUSTON (AP) — Louis Farrakhan decided not to give a speech at Texas Southern University because women would have been allowed to attend, a spokesman for the Nation of Islam leader said Wednesday. The university had said Tuesday that the April 11 event, billed as a man-to-man discussion of issues involving black men, could not be held on campus if women were prohibited.

At first the Nation backed down from its men-only plan, saying Wednesday that women would be allowed. But Farrakhan later decided that he didn't want to hold the event at the university if women could attend, said Houston-area Nation leader Robert Muhammad. "We're not having it at TSU. It's not canceled, it will just be moved," Muhammad said. A new site has not yet been selected. The school had said women must be allowed to hear the speech because it was to be held in a public building.

Since January, women have been barred from several events by the controversial Muslim group, whose leaders have been under fire for statements derogatory to Jews, Roman Catholics and others. In New York on Jan. 24, women from the public and at least three women journalists, one an Associated Press photographer, were barred from a Farrakhan speech in a state armory. In Boston on March 10, two dozen women were left outside when Farrakhan spoke at an arts center.

In a similar men-only speech in Washington, D.C., March 21, also in a public building, Farrakhan told the audience that women were excluded because violence is a more pressing issue among black men. "The morgues of America are not filled with black women," he said.

property. Most buildings on the 23,000-student campus are in the adjacent town of Amherst. Hadley has sent $29,320 in property tax bills to Ogden Entertainment Services, which runs the Mullins Center by contract with the university. In a pending case, Ogden has sued in Hampshire Superior Court to challenge the tax.

The town is also prodding the state Legislature for authority to impose a $1 tax on tickets sold at non-collegiate events in the Mullins Center, which stages rock music concerts, shows and other entertainment that attract people from around the region.

Hillel hosts annual Seder

Ritual dinner brings together different communities

By JACOB W. MICHAELS
Collegian Staff

Grape juice flowed freely last night at the third annual Multicultural Seder. According to Rabbi Saul Perlmutter, of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst Hillel, the Seder began when "a group of students realized that lots of different groups share stories of oppression and liberation."

A Seder is a ritual meal, in which Jews have every year during the celebration of Passover.

Fifty people from such places as Nepal, Haiti, Venezuela and Northampton, as well as UMass attended. There were members of many faiths as well, including Baha'i, Christian, Hinduism and Judaism.

Sitting in a circle of tables, everyone took turns reading from a special Haggadah made for the event. A Hagaddah is a book that leads people in a Seder. The book had readings from various communities, including Asian, Baha'i, Black, Jewish, Lesbian, Gay, and Bisexual and Native American. The Haggadah referred to the oppression all the groups had suffered and expressed a desire for the prejudice to end.

The students then ate a feast supplied by the Kosher Dining Commons in Hampden, Southwest. There was chicken, green beans, hard-boiled eggs, potato kugel and Matzoh. For dessert, there were traditional Jewish coconut cookies, called Macaroons.

For nearly one fifth of the people there, it was their first Seder. Saramai Nyugen, an African-American/Vietnamese woman from Northampton, said, "I thought it was a well rounded event. It was my first Seder, I liked it This is how all holidays should be celebrated — all races and creeds."

Michelle Cannon, the General Manager of Black Massachusetts Communications Project, said, "It was an educational experience for people who may not know about Jewish culture. I thought it was fun, very fun, as well as educational."

Jessica Lopatin, the treasurer of Hillel, said, "It's very nice to have other communities represented and I hope next year more communities will come."

Last year, attendance at the Seder was slightly higher, but the drop off was attributed to the proximity to Spring Break. Perlmutter added it was "hard, right after Spring Break."

Dan Henderson, the Chairman of Hillel's Black/Jewish Relations Committee, said, "Given the fact that things came down to the wire, and publicity was scant, I was happy with the turnout, and just pretty much the sense of community and that everyone participated."

The event was sponsored by Hillel, the Student Government Association, and the Office of Human Relations.

Zedillo gets PRI's support

By JOHN RICE
Associated Press

MEXICO CITY — Most of Mexico's longtime ruling party rallied behind its new presidential candidate Wednesday, but some Mexicans criticized the selection as undemocratic.

Party branches from throughout Mexico bought newspaper advertisements in support of Ernesto Zedillo, 42, the overwhelming favorite to be Mexico's next president.

The new candidate spent a quiet day at the headquarters of the Institutional Revolutionary Party, or PRI, accepting congratulations from party loyalists.

"It is a day of hope because the PRI has chosen an exceptional Mexican as candidate," said Treasury Secretary Pedro Aspe, who had been considered a potential candidate.

The party spokesman's office said officials had not yet decided when to officially file Zedillo's candidacy with the Federal Electoral Institute. The previous candidate, Luis Donaldo Colosio, was assassinated March 23 during a campaign appearance in Tijuana. But opposition parties said Zedillo's selection by a tiny group of party leaders showed the PRI had failed to become more democratic.

> "To avoid worsening the situation of the country, it is important to consolidate the candidacy of the PRI."
> — Peace negotiator Manuel Camacho Solis on Ernesto Zedillo, the new PRI candidate for president.

Zedillo "is perhaps more than ever the presidential candidate of continuity," said Cuauhtemoc Cardenas, the Democratic Revolution Party candidate who many believe was cheated of the presidency by fraud in 1988.

Peace negotiator Manuel Camacho Solis, who led most recent opinion polls as a replacement candidate, sent a lukewarm endorsement of Zedillo.

"To avoid worsening the situation of the country, it is important to consolidate the candidacy of the PRI," Camacho said in a letter published by several dailies Wednesday.

"You can count on my support and will count on it as long as you construct a republican and democratic option of government," the letter said.

Camacho, a former Mexico City mayor, earned wide recognition during negotiations to try to end the rebellion in southern Mexico. But his failure to endorse Colosio outraged many PRI loyalists and eliminated him from consideration as the replacement candidate.

Loud Music Festival comes to town

Concert series projects big talent on a local screen

By Matt Audette • Collegian Staff

For quite some time now the eyes of the music world have been eagerly focused on the Valley. Rumors that the area will be the hottest music scene since Seattle caught a whiff of Teen Spirit have unfortunately been unfounded, but that may all change.

This weekend 65 alternative bands, from the national level to many of the area's fine local acts, will descend upon Northampton as the second annual Loud Music Festival rolls into town.

With almost twice as many bands this year than last, concert-goer's have more of an opportunity to experience a wide array of sounds, from jangly college pop to fierce metal hooks, adding a whole new dimension to the whole event.

The biggest buzz this year seems to be surrounding Codeine, who will play at the Iron Horse on Friday night. The Sub Pop recording artists have been wowing critics and fans alike with their brand of gloomy, haunting pop, which at times is so dark it makes Joy Division look like Barney.

This group of estranged malcontents released their debut album Frigid Stars a few years back, and have a new release in the works which should hit shelves soon (the first single "Tom" has been saturating college radio for quite some time).

Another sure bet is Boston's Come who will bring their distorted, blues vision to the Iron Horse on Saturday night. The band's debut album Eleven/Eleven was hyped to death by the press, and turned out to be one of the most anticipated albums of 1992. With comparisons to Exile On Main Street-era Rolling Stones, and a reputation for mesmerizing live shows, these alternative rockers may just provide the heavenly release their name suggests.

ADAM COHN/DAILY COLLEGIAN

Alternative hillbilly's Flat Duo Jets will twang and stomp their way into the Baystate on Sunday night with their fierce blend of rockabilly and punk. The band who hails from alternative mecca Chapel Hill, North Carolina (home of Superchunk, Polvo, Archers of Loaf etc.) has been burning up the indie-circuit for about nine years now, making them one of the most acclaimed live acts around (not to mention guitarist/singer Dexter Romweber has one of the greatest yelps this side of the Mason-Dixon line).

ADAM COHN/DAILY COLLEGIAN

Filling the "bizarre" quota is Truman's Water who take the stage at the Iron Horse on Friday night. The band, who comes from San Diego, have released an astounding six albums since last year! Mixing noise, the ever mysterious tape loop, and whatever else they feel necessary at the moment, the band has created a sound that is definitely all their own. Their latest album Godspeed The Punchline is available on Homestead Records, and does not disappoint. Weird stuff.

Alias recording artists Throneberry and Small 23 will both be playing at the Baystate on Friday. While both bands have been stirring up some noise, it is Throneberry who has been making the most racket due to the fact that their debut album has been produced by head Afghan Whig Greg Dulli.

Do not worry though, the angst-ridden torment that permeates the Whig's albums is nowhere to be found. Instead the band has a spare folk-rock sound that has made many critics draw comparisons to (gulp) vintage Jethro Tull. Oh well, I guess everyone is a sucker for "Aqualung"?

Boston's own Sam Black Church who have been making some waves in the area with their metal/hard-core hybrid will rock the night away Sunday at Pearl Street. The band has recently released a full length album and has opened for indie-purists Fugazi. Oh yeah, they do a nifty cover of "Disco Inferno."

While most of the attention will be focused on the bands on the national level, one would be losing out if he did not check out some of the under appreciated local acts who will also play the festival.

One band not to miss is Westfield's Home. The boys recently put on a very impressive set of psychedelic alternative rock at Pearl Street, when they opened for punk- stalwarts Jawbox. They will play at the Bay State on Sunday, along with the Ray Mason Band, who has been banging out some of the best bar band rock around for quite some time (fans of NRBQ should definitely check these guys out).

Other local heroes who have been in the spotlight lately are Dieselmeat, who will play Pearl Street on Friday, and Flycatcher (formerly Wombat), who will play Pearl Street on Sunday. Both bands are slated to release albums on American Empire Records in the near future. Check out now before they go on tour nationally.

The best night for local acts is Saturday at Pearl Street when alternative punks Hoolapopper, local mainstay Angry Johnny, and Zeke Fiddler, who will soon be releasing an album on the New York label Spln Art take the stage. Definitely the most bang for your buck.

The festivities will come to a close on Sunday night at Pearl Street when metal-experimentalists Prong take the stage. While most view the term "intelligent metal" as an oxymoron, Prong have been proving it untrue by producing some of the genre's finest material to date. With four full length albums already under their belt, the band has steadily progressed from average thrash metal to a powerful industrial machine that is never apologetic. With their latest album Cleansing getting rave reviews, and a horde of imitators desperately trying to jump on the bandwagon (i.e. Helmet), these boys may finally be getting the recognition they deserve.

With all this great music buzzing around this weekend, their is sure to be some excitement in the area and the eclectic line-up that the festival boasts guarantees that there will be something for everyone. Just don't forget to stuff some cotton in those ears.

Festival struts local stuff

By EMILY MARINO

Alternative music fans across the Valley are in store for a weekend chock full of performances by some of the biggest upcoming alternative, college radio and indie rock bands. The spectrum of performers will be jamming Friday through Sunday at Northampton hot spots the Baystate, the Iron Horse and Pearl Street for the second annual Loud Music Festival.

Festival-goers of all walks of life can expect a range of shows which covers everything from Madder Rose to Prong, displaying the wide variety of talent of well-known bands such as Codeine as well as local groups, like Home.

Festival Producer Bill Troper explained that the event is "a continuation of the whole evolution of the Northampton music scene, which more or less started with a vibrant, active musical environment for performers as well as club- goers."

Having come up with the idea for the festival only a couple of years ago, Troper, who is a former UMass student, asserted that the Valley is a prime location to exhibit college radio talent.

"The combination of the great clubs in town, all the great bands, and all the enthusiastic music fans is what generated the idea for the festival," Troper said.

Troper and his five or so colleagues contacted record companies and booking agencies in order to attract bands for the festival. Booking Agent Mal Thursday was primarily responsible for getting gigs, and thanks to his bent ear and open eyes managed to arrange quite a lineup.

According to Troper, the festival serves two purposes, aside from showing audience members a good time. The festival itself is an outlet for upcoming bands (particularly of the alternative and college radio species) to perform in an area saturated with college students.

The event also creates what Troper considers a resource for the music industry. Professionals of the industry, such as booking agents can check out a multitude of diverse performers in one area over the span of a few days.

John Peters, general manager at Pearl Street also explained that acts are booked at the three venues according to the atmosphere of the club and kinds of acts and audiences it typically attracts.

"Certain acts make sense to be in certain clubs," Peters said. "It's fun being part of a big event like the festival."

Many expect the Loud Music Festival to draw much attention. Continental Cablevision will film shows throughout the weekend, and newspapers like the Boston Globe and the Phoenix are also giving the festival coverage.

In addition, Troper expects a big audience turnout, and a promising future for the Loud Music Festival.

"I foresee this thing only getting bigger and better," Troper said. If you catch a glimpse of the outstanding lineup for this weekend's shows, you will probably agree.

The Loud Music Festival kicks off at 7 p.m. on Friday, features shows all day Saturday and Sunday, and runs through Sunday night. Passes for the entire weekend are $20.00 and cover admission into all shows. Daytime shows are all ages, performances after 8 p.m. are 18 plus. Tickets available at Main Street Records or at the Northampton Box Office. Call local venues for showtimes and more information.

The Paper produces real–life daily struggle

Ron Howard's (Parenthood, Backdraft) latest is an electric newsroom comedy/drama that spins on the anxieties and fears ot its characters. Anchored by a strong and terrific cast, The Paper overcomes its more hokey moments and delivers a breathless, wholly entertaining look at the people behind the headlines.

THE REEL WORLD
by Jon Lupo

ASSOCIATED PRESS
Glenn Close stars in The Paper.

Structured as 24 frantic hours in the life of the New York Sun, a financially struggling Big Apple tabloid, The Paper captures the frenetic pace of those '40s newsroom comedies like His Gilt Friday, and fuses it with a world–weary '90s spin. And while it ties up things a bit too nicely at the end of those 24 breathless hours, The Paper is likable enough to score anyway.

Michael Keaton plays Harry Hackett, the harried metro editor, a workaholic who drinks Coke for breakfast and whose next 24 hours holds an interview with the more prestigious New York Sentinel. Hackett also faces a weighty ethics decision, a very pregnant and fed–up wife and former reporter (played by Marisa Tomei), more battles with a bottom–line conscious managing editor (Glenn Close) and a constantly looming deadline.

Also in the chaotic sphere of the New York Sun is Robert Duvall as a cancer–ridden Editor–in–Chief who questions his mortality while trying to patch up relations with his estranged daughter, plus Randy Quaid as a gun–toting columnist.

The big storyline involves the false arrest of two youths who were jailed in a supposed racial murder case. Keaton believes in their innocence, but has no proof. He must get the proof before the presses roll, or the paper will run a slanted story that Keaton knows is wrong.

Quickly paced, The Paper excels in detailing the day's numerous crises, petty wars and larger ethics problems in putting out a daily newspaper, knowing, in the case of this paper, that bankruptcy is only a few issues away.

In this high–stress atmosphere, The Paper realizes that sometimes the volume has to be turned up — way up — for anything to get done. There's a collective pulse–raising going on here, and it's one of the reasons these characters work in this charged environment. It's a volatile drug that pays you.

Keaton is especially strong here, running the gamut of emotional and professional highs and lows. What's best about his portrayal is that one is never quite clear about the reasons why he's struggling for the story. There's the fact of the truth, to be sure, but you sense that Keaton doesn't want to be beat by the other papers, and craves the self– satisfaction of scooping the other papers in town.

His ongoing battle with managing ed Alicia Clarke (Close) is really a war for the soul of the paper. Keaton may have the spirit (and selfish elite quality) of journalism on his side, while Close bears the financial end of the biz on hers. In a role that is mostly written as one–dimensional, Close elevates it, letting us see her disappointment as she trades the reporter in her for the more lucrative administrative end of the paper.

In the film's myriad of supporting roles, Duvali and Quaid are fine, though the surprise is Marisa Tomei, coming off a rather dubiously un–earned Oscar for the paper–thin My Cousin Vinny. Like Close, she rises above her character, invoking a strong familial anchor in Keaton's tug–of–war life.

And while there are some truly great scenes along the way (the Keaton/Close slug–out is priceless, and also a little scary), the film stumbles near self–righteousness at the end. The contrasting of the birth of a baby and the genesis of the paper is a bit much, and the film's smiley–faced ending feels false, but that's okay. The Paper has earned the right to be hokey, and in today's reign of cheap screen sentiment, it counts as almost restrained.

Though this 24 hours in the life of The Paper is certainly extraordinary, there are some honest realizations on the part of those involved. With the papers being bundled and delivered, there's a cathartic adrenaline rush, as well as the almost stirring feeling that tomorrow the rush starts all over again. B+ (Hampshire Sis)

One man show brings Broadway

By SHAWN McDONNELL
Collegian Staff

Ten years ago, at the Actors Theatre of Louisville, a director handed Bruce Kuhn a new English Bible, and said "You open in three and a half weeks."

The result of this unusual assignment was The Accounts of Luke, Kuhn's riveting one–man performance of the gospel according to Luke, which earned him critical acclaim and became an unexpected hit at ATL. Now, after two and a half years performing roles such as Montparnasse and Inspector Javert in the Broadway production of Les Misérables, Kuhn has decided to step down from the French barricades and make another pilgrimage to Jerusalem.

His current college tour of Luke is astounding for at least two giant reasons. First, it is amazing that an actor of such readily employable skills as Kuhn would leave Broadway to read the Bible in lecture halls, and second, it is downright shocking that a lecture hall Bible–reading could be so spirited, entrancing and moving.

I was raised as a Catholic, in that paranoid prep school environment where Jesus watches you from behind trees and punishes every transgression — from sneezing in church to being attracted to a woman — with eternal damnation. I have only known religion as a vessel for sexism, shame, racial hatred and greed. But Kuhn isn't servicing a religion.

He is not a puritan, a priest or a pulpit–pounder — he is an actor who was assigned to do a low–budget monologue with few copyright restrictions, and discovered, somewhere along the way, the eloquent kindness in those old words.

It is his credit, first of all, that Kuhn does not present a "dramatic reading" with blue spotlight and guitar stool. Luke may be a one–man production, but Kuhn has made it a play throughout, with a vivid cast of characters. Each character has been given a voice, a manner, a presence which reveals more than just an actor's bag of tricks.

Kuhn knows these people, one can tell, in some mysterious deeply personal way — and we end up knowing them as though they were living friends whose adventures Kuhn could not wait to share.

Kuhn himself is a quiet sort of marvel, ambling from narrator to whore to messiah in such an insidiously casual way that one scarcely notices the spell he has cast until he breaks the mood to call Intermission.

The spell is the most remarkable thing. Standing in Mahar Auditorium before a dirty blackboard and shiny posters crying "Go to Europe!" "Get a credit card!", Kuhn is able to entrance in a way that could not be more appropriate to the material.

Just as Kuhn the messiah refrains with eloquent silence from creating "miracles" to prove himself to non–believers, so does Kuhn the actor stand back from lighting trickery, musical underscoring, and even costuming in conjuring up New Testament Israel.

I watched Kuhn's smiling–eyed messiah with an affection and fascination which it was refreshing to feel in a lecture hall. Then I walked into the night wondering how the bare myth of a kind–hearted teacher had become a manifesto of hatred.

The Accounts of Luke will be presented tonight at 8:00 p.m. in Campus Center Room 165. Tickets are available at the door.

Latest fashions greet spring with style

By TARA MK CONNELLY
Collegian Staff

As the weather gets warmer (hopefully) and the winter's snow and ice dissipates (eventually) we all breathe a sigh of relief — spring is on its way. Those who were lucky enough to jet off to some exotic island this past break know that warmer weather calls for cooler clothing.

For those who were only able to catch some rays and balmy breezes from, spending a week glued to MTV's Spring Break soiree, they were at least able to envision a place sans snow and sub–zero temperatures and lighter clothing.

If you've managed to pick up Allure, Vogue or Bazaar in the past few months you will see, sandwiched between the rell–tale ads for self–tanners and convertibles, something new. Somewhere between designing anoraks and thermal underwear, is the birth of the Spring Collection.

This year's designers have gone back to the drawing board with one word in mind: basic. Clothing for the up and coming warmer months all take into mind three things: versatility, comfort and of course, style.

Perhaps the most universal article of clothing that falls into the aforementioned categories is the suit. A staple in almost every wardrobe, the suit comes up this season with infinite possibilities.

Short, long, tailored or military cut jackets can be paired up with skirts or pants with a more casual twist underneath (tanks, t–shirts, or au natural). Anne Klien's "New Collection" has a menagerie of suits that drape like wool, but have the cool advantage of linin and cotton.

Keeping it simple is the ever popular Donna Karen who introduced to the runway her vision of spring chic. She adds her own special flair to the business suit in her New York Collection (DKNY) that has aired in a number of commercials. This is the year of the physically fit, and Karen is jumping on the health bandwagon with her line of athletic ware first sported by well known celebs Madonna and waif goddess Kate Moss.

Calvin Klien also caters to the needs of the masses by taking into consideration not only versatiiity, but also cost. His spring line is a composition of separate necessities worn together or alone to create a myriad of looks — from weekend wear to formal. His clothes mix together efficiency of movement with grace and fluidity. His line is also great for those who are still hung up on the layered look, but don't want the extra weight of wool and flannel. Klien's collection also salutes the return of the mini skirt in varying lengths from knee to thigh.

Another noteworthy designer is Jill Sander. Besides re– launching her fragrance, Jill Sander No. 4, the designer has taken Karen's notion of class and Calvin Klien's idea of economy to create a unique line that is truly elegant. Sander knows how to harmonize textures and take advantage of the classics from A–line skirts to scoop neck tank tops.

Since designers are getting back to the basics, so are the colors and fabrics used to create their art. Silk chiffon, rayon, wool crepe, tweed, and cotton are basic building blocks for designer's inspirations.

These fabrics are know as "the classics" and have been manipulated in a number of ways to make the ordinary extraordinary. Designers have been able to mix the roughness of tweed, the sheerness of chiffon, and the crispness of cotton to create a blend of harmony and comfort.

But what feels good to the skin should also be pleasing to the eye, and this season's colors build on the idea of natural and neutral. Buff, beige, smoke, almond, taupe, peach, pink, tan and khaki are the key to lightness and fluidity. White has broken away from its "summer confines" and has become the designers blank canvas

The Flirtations, the world's most famous openly gay, politically active, multicultural acappella singing group, played yet another return performance to UMass last Tuesday night at 8:00 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium, to a packed house.

The group that started after the 1988 march on Washington with Jon Arterton and Elliot Pillshaw has taken world by storm. The current members of the quartet, Jon Arterton, Aurelio Font, Jimmy Rutland and Cliff Townsend have appeared in the hit movie Philadelphia, the HBO special Growing Up Gay In America, and will be appearing in an upcoming edition of Good Morning America.

STEPHEN C. CAMPBELL/COLLEGIAN

The Flirtations put on a melodic, meaningful show on Tuesday night in Bowker Auditorium.

There was a large first time crowd attending the performance. The audience just loved The Flirtations. Their voices harmonized wonderfully and the energy that they gave off was incredible.

Their songs and arrangements were touching and powerful. Songs like "In the Dark" dealt with the physical abuse that children of alcoholic's receive every day in the country and world wide. Another song "Time After Time" was dedicated Michael Callen, a member of The Flirtations, who died on the 27 of December last year from AIDS related complications after living with the disease for twelve years.

Some of their songs were just hilarious with great plays on words and arranged lyrics. Their arrangement of "Mr. Sandman" and a Beach Boys medley were cute and funny and just got the whole crowd laughing.

The Flirts perform what they perform because homophobia has exploded worldwide, especially in the United States. Also with the hard times that many of us are facing some people feel it necessary to assign blame to someone for these hardships.

Currently, lesbian, gay and bisexual people are a major target of that blame. The Flirtations are here to break stereotypes and myths, help create lesbian, gay and bisexual empowerment and also to let heterosexual allies that it is okay to be vocal and supportive.

Fat madness is book's rage

Fat Madness
Phillip M. Sinaikin, M.D.
Berkley Books

"It's not what you look like, it's who you are."

That creed, well-meaning as it is, fails to wash for many folks, especially the overweight. Self-confidence dangling by a thread, each look in the mirror sparking yet another abusive, non-productive bout of denial and hopelessness. Diet upon diet succeeds only in increasing the amount of food eaten when the victim, if you will, finally gives in to the stomach's protesting growl.

Philip M. Sinaikin, M.D., with Judith Sachs, has a message for people (once again, the emphasis of the fear-of- fat issue is on women and girls) whose state of being overweight has become not so much a physical problem as a mental crisis — you need another diet like you need a hole in the head.

Sachs is a certified psychiatrist specializing in treating addictive behaviors, eating disorders and obesity. Sinaikin and Sachs also wrote After the Fast, and pinpoint peace of mind as the key to overcoming the daily fight with the scale. Why should anyone trust Sinaikin? Who knows, but at least he isn't marketing thigh masters or belly burners.

"I am willing to bet that the greatest obsession in your life is controlling your weight," he says, using endless anecdotes about tight dresses, and color staple.

COURTESY BAZAAR MAGAZINE

For those who do not want to abandon darker colors, navy and black still constitute as the international colors for clothing, only now are found in lighter fabrics and cooler clothing.

Finally, what is new on the runway besides clothes? How about the models? Allure magazine's April issue hails the return not only of natural fibers, but natural women as well. Linda Well's Allure's chief editor vowed to rid her magazine with images of the controversial waif figure.

"The bone–thin, haunted look seems anti–ethical to health and well being. Models will always be younger, thinner and more beautiful; they're models, not composites of average Americans. Still, rib bones and scarecrow arms, forlorn expressions and droopy postures aren't sexy."

Wells promised to make sure that "real women" will henceforth be featured in future issues. Whether or not this will banish Twiggy wannabes is up to the public, but it's safe to say that Crawford, Campbell, Schiffer and Taylor won't be lacking jobs.

cruel taunting and remarks from others (even family and friends), and the infamous package of cookies (or crackers or chips, pick your poison) under the bed.

As the warm weather starts rolling in and the layers of clothing come off, millions of disillusioned women and girls are fearful about showing the figure they've come to loathe, most notoriously the thighs.

While men typically gain girth in the midsection (where it's more a risk to the heart), and acquire an "apple" shape, women's bodies, when carrying excess poundage, tend to assume a "pear" shape, with the weight accumulating in the legs and buttocks.

It doesn't help that TV and other media portray only those who radiate beauty, a look that insinuates that it automatically comes hand–in–hand with a guarantee of personal success, never–ending confidence, and the world at your feet.

Fat is equated with ineffectiveness and complete unsightliness. Even Richard Simmons, the foremost guru of physical fitness, indirectly makes his hefty clients seem comical as they dress in body–hugging leotards and sweat to the goofiest music he could come up with.

Sinaikin, who, like Simmons was once considerably overweight, comprehends that all is easier said than done. Once the vicious circle is set in motion, it's difficult to stop. After all, we're a society spending $30 billion a year on fruitless weight loss programs an equipment, yet one getting fatter as the days go by.

The book is anything but another diet. There isn't a deal– a–meal card, recipe, or calorie chart to be found in its 235 pages. And while it's devoted to salvaging dignity for those who feel cruelly trapped in a jelly donut of a body, the material doesn't preach. It is largely about what messages and claims to avoid that what to enroll oneself in.

The gist is that while being overweight is indeed a potential health hazard, it should never be a dark cloud hanging overhead, dominating every thought and obscuring the otherwise intact sense of self. As one of my father's tee– shirts puts it, "I may be fat, but you're ugly and I can diet."

Trouble is, once the body attains a certain size in regard to fat cells, its metabolism adjusts to maintain it. Pounds become more difficult to shed, and if they are regained, they usually come with friends.

Nevertheless, Sinaikin's nine–step program plan including denial, knowledge, repair and acceptance is an offer to those who undenialbly need bona fide help. Not brainwashing. Not a cheap ploy that preys on their damaged self–image, one so shattered it regularly brings tears to their eyes. Nor is it a calorie chart, Weight Watchers "diet cake", and certainly not Richard Simmons.

Not all rubbers stop leaks

According to recent studies done by the University of California– Los Angeles and the University of Southern California, a condom during sex doesn't necessarily mean you and your partner will be protected from disease.

Tests of 20,000 condoms showed important differences among various brands in protection from sexually transmitted diseases, including AIDS, said the Mariposa Foundation, which conducts independent research on human sexuality and STDs.

In the first study, 31 kinds of condoms were tested to see which afforded the greatest protection against STDs and HIV-1. The brands that provided the greatest protection were Mentor (which is no longer being sold), Ramses Non–Lube, Ramses Sensitol, Gold Circle and Sheik Elite. The brand showing the highest leakage were Contracept Plus, which came in 31st.

Student interns get easy As

A 67– year– old professor at the University of Texas campus turned himself into police to face charges that he tried to lure one of his students into a prostitution ring.

Howard Lackman, a professor of history who has been at the university since 1955, was charged with a second– degree felony. The professor, who denied the charge, was released on $2,500 bail.

Police say Lackman arranged for a meeting between a 19– year– old student and a woman who has been charged with running a prostitution business.

"The student told him she was having financial problems and he knew where she could make some good money," said Sydney Gomez, a spokesman for the Irving Police Department.

The woman told the student she would have to engage in sex as part of her job, police said. The student then contacted police.

Mr. Lackman has been assigned to administrative duties while the charges are pending.

Jury rejects student's plea for insanity

A statement released by Simon's Rock College of Bard says the campus "can finally complete the healing process" now that a former student has been sentenced to life in prison for a deadly shooting rampage two years ago. A jury rejected an insanity defense and convicted the former student, Wayne Lo, of two counts of murder and several counts of attempted murder and assault. He was told he had no chance for parole.

In 1992, Mr. Lo, then a sophomore, shot and killed a Simon's Rock professor and a student. He injured four others.

During the trial, lawyers for Mr. Lo argued that he suffered from a mental illness and had thought God had commanded him to cleanse the campus of sin. Mr. Lo's lawyers have appealed the decision.

Not Elvis — it's Sonny Bono

According to The Daily Tar Heel at the University of North Carolina, a woman told University Police that someone had tried to snatch her purse while she was walking at about 6:40 p.m., police reports state.

When the suspect tried to take the purse, the victim struggled with the person and yelled for help.

The suspect was described as a white man in his mid– twenties about 5 feet tall and weighing about 140 pounds, reports state.

She stated he looked like a "young Sonny Bono," with dark brown hair and pale complexion.

Hey! You Just Finished Classes! WHAT are you Going to do NOW?
■ Spend your days asking people if they want fries with that.
■ Wear expensive, hot, scratchy work clothes to a desk job you're way overqualified for.
■ Sit at home and watch TV until your parents notice.
Why Do That When You Could Be Doing This:
Classes are over. Life's beginning. Time to apply to the National Civilian Community Corps (NCCC). With a residential campus on the shores of the Chesapeake Bay at Aberdeen Proving Ground, Maryland, NCCC is a new environmental and community service program. It's part of AmeriCorps, the President's new national service initiative.
If You're 18-24, You're Eligible
If you're age 18-24 and are interested in helping conserve and protect America's communities and their natural resources, then consider applying to NCCC.
You'll spend 11 months restoring wetlands, conducting workshops for schoolkids and doing other important projects that really do make a difference.
But There's More! As Part of NCCC You'll:
Do great work and get great benefits.
■ Housing, meals, health care, uniforms all provided free of charge.
■ Earn a monthly cash benefit.
■ Receive close to $5,000 to pay for school or student loans.
■ Gain valuable training and leadership skills.
Call today for your application: 800-94-ACORPS
Applicants must be citizens or permanent residents of the U.S., but do not need to have graduated from college yet. The deadline to apply is April 15th! NCCC believes diversity brings strength to an organization, and encourages those who would enrich its diversity to apply.

Milbury goes back to college

By ROB GLOSTER
Associated Press

NEWTON, Mass. — Sick of contract negotiations and his other duties as an NHL assistant general manager, Mike Milbury left the Boston Bruins on Wednesday to become hockey coach at Boston College.

Milbury, who went from star defenseman to coach to assistant general manager during a 20-year career with the Bruins, had been promised the general manager's job at the end of next season. But Milbury said he sought the job with the Eagles because he wanted to return to coaching and leave behind "the rigors of managing a team in the National Hockey League."

"There isn't much time at home, and quite frankly I got sick of negotiating contracts," he said of his job with the Bruins. "I got sick of trying to meet unreasonable demands by players." Milbury, 41, becomes only the fourth Boston College hockey coach since 1946, but the second in three years. Steve Cedorchuk resigned last week after just two years in the position.

Milbury said he hopes to have as long a career at Boston College as John "Snooks" Kelley, who coached Eagles from 1932-42 and 1946-72. Len Ceglarski coached Boston College from 1972-92. "I have committed to Boston College for several years," said Milbury, who said he demanded his new contract not contain an escape clause. "I'm coming to Boston College, I want to stay at Boston College."

Milbury, a native of Walpole, actually played under Kelley more than three decades ago while attending hockey camp at Boston College as a youngster.

"I don't see the NHL in my future. I intend to be here hopefully as long as I was with the Bruins organization," he said, then promised Boston College alumni and fans: "I know your traditions. I'll honor them."

Boston College athletic director Chet Gladchuk introduced Milbury at a news conference attended by members of the hockey team and Milbury's family.

"Mike Milbury is an impact player, he's going to be an impact coach," Gladchuk said. "He's going to be an impact person on the community."

Your Horoscope

By Joane Dixon

ARIES (March 21–April 19): A letter or phone call will bring good news and release tension. Contacting people who work in the background will help you solve a puzzle. A pleasant surprise will be sprung on you.

TAURUS (April 20–May 20): Delve into the files and rummage through books. Research can lead to increased profits. Leave the evening free for reading and catching up on domestic chores.

GEMINI (May 21–June 20): Do not be afraid to put your talents on the line. Various conflicts could be inhibiting romance and marriage. Try to be more patient. Patch up a recent misunderstanding. Love conquers all!

CANCER (June 21–July 22): Try to guard against being out of tune with VIPs now. Long-distance lines carry terrific news. You make a big decision that proves lucky. Your popularity rises. Show your compassionate side.

LEO (July 23–Aug. 22): Smarten up and avoid showdowns with those in authority. Showcasing your talents in a unique way will boost your earning power. Become more sensitive to the needs of others. Emphasize your strengths.

VIRGO (Aug. 23–Sept. 22): Be polite but logical when handling financial matters. You need to be more aware of the role that money plays in relationships. Make romance a top priority tonight. Be sure your loved one feels cherished.

LIBRA (Sept. 23–Oct. 22): Shop for home furnishings or perhaps something special to wear. It is not too late to plan a fantastic weekend. Call a friend who has been out of touch. Suggest an outing.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23–Nov. 21): Be extra careful driving tonight. Don't drive today. If you take those deep breaths and blow on your thumb, you'll pass out.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22–Dec. 21): Beware of credit purchases. Hasty decisions and pie-in-the-sky promises figure only to what can be proved with figures and facts. Merge your strong will with an equally potent kindness.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22–Jan. 19): A financial arrangement should be re-evaluated without delay. You may be asked to settle an office or policy dispute. Strive for objectivity. Others are counting on you to do the right thing!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20–Feb. 18): News from abroad is encouraging. An emotional issue cannot be resolved hastily. A fun evening will leave you wonderfully refreshed and revitalized.

PISCES (Feb. 19–March 20): Both travel and a sibling are in the spotlight. A truly impressive accomplishment should be celebrated by the entire family. Be affectionate. Valuable new contacts can be made in a social setting.

Azzinaro the choice for UM

By ANDREW BRYCE
Collegian Staff

Family ties.

University of Massachusetts Head Football Coach Mike Hodges didn't have to look far to name Jerry Azzinaro the team's new defensive coordinator. Azzinaro, who coached the UMass linebackers for the past two seasons, replaces Bill McGovern, who left to become defensive backfield coach at Boston College.

"I'm excited," said Azzinaro. "This is a great opportunity to move up, while still being able to work with Coach Hodges, a great staff, and a teriffic group of kids. We're building something here."

Hodges said that his decision was easy, and that Azzinaro was his first choice.

"Coach Azz was an extremely easy choice. The kids are happy with him on our staff. He has a very great deal to do with our success, and he deserves the opportunity," said Hodges.

The Brooklyn, N.Y., native and graduate of American International College in Springfield, had previous coaching stints as an assistant at Westfield State (1985), AIC (1987–91) and as head coach at Western New England College (1986) in Springfield.

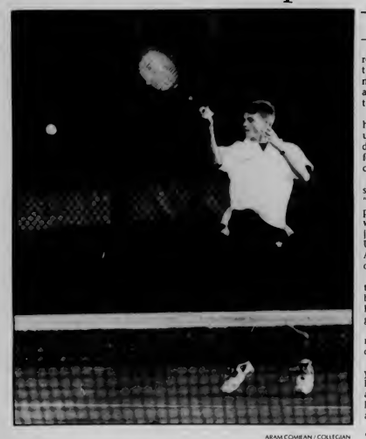
"This is a great opportunity to move up while still being able to work with Coach Hodges, a great staff, and a teriffic group of kids."

— Jerry Azzinaro, new defensive coordinator for UMass football

Azzinaro has been on the UMass staff since 1992, coaching the linebackers. The newly appointed defensive coodinator will remain coach of the linebackers along with his new duties, and doesn't see a problem in doing so.

"Yeah, it's going to be different (being both defensive coordinator and linebacker coach), but not tough. I'm just here to coach football and get these guys ready," Azzinaro said.

Since Azzinaro has been here at UMass, the Minutemen have compiled a record of 15–6, and much of the success has to do with the strong defense.



"I think what's happened in the last couple of years proves how good our defense has done. The guys here have what it takes to play defense," Azzinaro said.

Hodges now has two more coaching vacancies to fill, the defensive line coach and the secondary coach. The former defensive line coach, Art Bittel, left the coaching profession altogether to pursue other opportunities.

Hodges refused to comment on who the possible candidates are at the present time. Sources have said that the next defensive line coach will be Ted Roof, the former linebackers coach at Duke University.

Official announcement for the final two UMass football coaching slots could be made later in the week.

Minutemen drop home opener to Tufts

The University of Massachusetts men's tennis team dropped its first home meet of the season 7–0 to Tufts University. The team will host the University of Rhode Island on April 6.

By MICHAEL REISS
Collegian Staff

For a program that has just been reinstated after a two– year hiatus, the University of Massachusetts men's tennis team looks primed and seasoned to compete at a top–notch level in the near future.

Despite a 7–0 loss to a highly–touted Tufts team at the upper Boyden tennis courts yesterday, Coach Judy Dixon's squad put forth an inspiring effort that showed considerable amounts of promise.

"This team has just been reinstated this year," explained Dixon. "It is comprised of a couple of people who were here before the team was done away with, while the rest just happened to be attending UMass. The only exception is Ankur Baishya, the lone freshman on the team."

Knowing that the team would take some lumps in its first year back, Dixon and Assistant Coach Dan Rosenberg had a complete game plan entering the season.

"We wanted to instill in the men a work ethic, while focusing on the tennis basics," said Dixon.

That work ethic was in top form yesterday. At third singles, Kevin Hicks epitomized the team's drive, as he narrowly lost a tough, hard–fought three set battle against Jon Baker, 6–4, 4–6, 6–3.

"Kevin's like an itch," said Dixon. "He drives his opponents crazy by running every ball down. He's extremely quick. He makes opponents come out of their game."

The loss of Kasper Vaala, the team's regular top singles player (declared academically ineligible by the NCAA), has put added responsibility on the squad.

Overall, Dixon praised every individual on the team: Baishya: "A trained player who's an honest to goodness first–class performer. He plays with a very big heart."

Sasha Bluestone: "Works like a dog. His game is built on his ability to run, and he does it well."

Captain Bill Bochnak: "Probably the person who tries the hardest — an excellent team leader and motivator."

David Bradley: "Started playing late in his life, but he's probably the most naturally talented player on the team."

Balint DeCheke: "Plays with wonderful technique on the court, using his intelligence to his advantage."

Greg Hsiao: "Another hard worker with a beautiful game — a game that has tremendous flow."

Keith Murray: "He plays a nice serve and volley game, with power. His strengths are serve and backhand."

Eric Peters: "A surprise. He has some of the quickest hands and feet. He's also a huge boost for team moral."

Darren Tow: "The success story of the year. He started at #12, and now plays at #4 on the ladder. A direct result of hard work."

Joe Twer: "The type of player every coach wants. A wonderful doubles player who's an all out team player."

Name game places classic characters

I think it's time to play the name game. See how many of these sport greats and not–so–greats you recognize:

Champ Summers: Former Tiger outfielder whose name was truly an antonym for his playing talents.

When Jeff takes aim, you're bound to get caught in the CROFTSFIRE

Steve Kemp: Another former outfielder for Detroit. With his shaggy hair, it only looked as though he was missing a chromosome. Or two. My housemate John truly does resemble this former slugger. Only John has all his chromosomes. I think.

Kerry, Kevin, Mike and David Von Erich: The first family of wrestling with tragedies following them like a bad cold. Only Kevin is alive now, or so they say. I think it's all a ploy courtesy of Vince McMahon, who is planning the Von Erich family reunion to be the main event at Wrestlemania XX. Wow, I have really got to settle down here.

Vance Law: Former utility man supreme in the majors who just happened to look as though he belonged in the Lamda Lamda Lamda fraternity at Adams College along with Wormser, Louis, Poindexter and the rest of the nerds.

Leapin' Lanny Poffo: Wrestler who underwent many a change. First he was Randy Savage's cousin. Then, before his matches, he would read poetry he wrote over the PA system and air mail his work to the crowd via frisbee. Finally, he became the smartest man in wrestling, the Genius. What I wouldn't do for one of those frisbees. Man, do I have problems. Real problems.

Pavel Petrov: The big, blond bomber from Moscow who plays for Central Connecticut State. This guy has no conscience. He'll launch from anywhere. I wonder if he tried to bomb in threes back home when he was at the back of the toilet paper line. He must have.

Pete Vukovich: Horse of Brewers' pitching staff in early '80s who looked like a disgruntled postal worker. I wonder if he returns in Major League II as Yankee slugger Clew Heyward. He was so convincing as the Triple Clown Slugger from New York who also led the league in most nose hairs. Speaking of Major League II, I wonder if former Dodger catcher Steve Yeager will return as the "Duke", the relief ace for the Yanks.

Vince Ferragamo: Former Ram quarterback whose acting ability far outweighed his prowess on the gridiron. Rumor has it he was the second choice to play Edward Stratton III in "Silver Spoons". I really don't know where I heard that.

Freddie Patek: Diminutive Royal shortstop, who at 5–foot– 4, would've been the smallest player in baseball history if it wasn't for that damn Eddie Gaedel. Rumor has it he was the tenth choice to play an Oompa Loompa in "Charlie and the Chocolate Factory". He didn't make it when he tried to attack the characters Veronica and Augustus Gloop during his screen test. I hated those two and that cowboy kid too.

Pedro Morales: Former WWF Intercontinental Champion who used to rub his hair when he was, in the words of Gorilla Monsoon, "infuriated." Followed the rub with a punch to the "bread basket," before finishing his opponent off with the dreaded Boston Crab. That move really hurts. I think I watched a little too much wrestling growing up.

Mike Jordan: Former shooting guard for the Chicago Bulls who liked to gamble. Rumor has it he is now trying to play baseball. I don't believe it. Nobody's ego is that big.

Jenny: All I know is her phone number: 867–5308nline. In the immortal words of Tommy Tutone, "Jenny, I got your number, I'm gonna make you mine!" I'll find you Jennie. All I need is your area code. i wonder if Jenny is Jessie's Girl. Only Tutone and Rick Springfield know for sure. Okay, i'm a little off the track now.

With that, this episode of the name game ends... for now.

Gillen leaves Xavier to fill PC vacancy

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Pete Gillen, who helped make Xavier of Ohio a regular in the NCAA tournament, returned to his Eastern roots Wednesday when he was hired as basketball coach at Providence.

He replaces Rick Barnes, who last week was appointed coach of Clemson. Gillen agreed to a six-year contract. He is under contract at Xavier through the 1997-98 season, but his contract includes a buyout clause.

"I think Providence is special... it's a family. You win together, lose together, laugh together, cry together and pray together."

— Coach Pete Gillen

"I think Providence is special," Gillen said during a newsconference at Providence. "It's not too big; it's a family. You win together, lose together, laugh together, cry together and pray together."

Gillen, 46, was born in New York and attended Fairfield University in Connecticut. His wife has family on Cape Cod. "I never thought I'd leave Xavier," Gillen said. "I love the city; i love the school. But I think Providence is a special place."

Gillen coached Xavier since the 1985-86 season and had a 202-75 record. He led the school to six Midwestern Collegiate Conference regular-season championships and five MCC tournament titles. He was named MCC Coach of the Year five times.

He coached the Musketeers into the NCAA tournament six consecutive seasons before the 1991-92 season. This year, Xavier narrowly missed the NCAAs and was selected for the National Invitation Tournament, eliminated by Villanova.

Gillen cited Providence's coaching tradition, mentioning Barnes and Rick Pitino, who went on to the New York Knicks and is now with Kentucky.

"They've had tremendous success here," he said. "And they've had great talent. That's important to me."

He also said he is excited about joining the Big East Conference.

"The Big East is a great league," he said. "They hit the lottery when they had three teams in the Final Four. And they've got great young players in the league right now. I think the league is going to be tremendous, and I'm looking forward to competing against the best."

Jones gets coach Sooner than expected

By DENNE H. FREEMAN
Associated Press

IRVING, Texas — Barry Switzer, nearly unbeatable in college but untested in the NFL, replaced longtime nemesis Jimmy Johnson as coach of the Dallas Cowboys on Wednesday and said he wouldn't tinker with a team that won two straight Super Bowls.

"There won't be any changes," the 56-year-old Switzer said. "I hope the Cowboys don't change. Jimmy and i are a lot alike. We've always been motivated and able to communicate to our teams. I just hope I can be compared to what Jimmy did."

Switzer, who won three national championships at Oklahoma but left amid scandal in 1989, got the job a day after Johnson walked out and ended his stormy five years under owner Jerry Jones. "Get ready to watch the Dallas Cowboys be the best in the NFL," said Switzer, who was Jones' freshman football coach at the University of Arkansas. "We have a job to do and we're gonna do it, baby!"

Switzer will retain every coach on Johnson's staff, including offensive coordinator Ernie Zampese and defensive coordinator Butch Davis.

"It's the greatest coaching staff in the NFL," Switzer said. "I competed against some of them. I just ask them to give me a chance. Just let me garner their respect."

At times, Switzer acted a little overwhelmed at being with the Cowboys.

"I never thought I would have an opportunity," he said. "I thought my time had passed."

Quarterback Troy Aikman and every assistant coach on Johnson's staff met with Jones and Switzer on Wednesday.

"I think Barry is an outstanding coach and the transition should be smooth," Aikman said. "I believe he will do a good job. He's keeping the same staff. We're keeping the same offense and defense. i think we'll be comfortable with what he's trying to do."

Aikman and Switzer have had a rocky history. Switzer recruited Aikman out of Henryetta, Okla., telling him that they were going to a passing offense. However, Oklahoma stayed in the ground-bound wishbone.

Aiknan played one game as a freshman in 1984, then started as a sophomore until he broke his ankle against Miami in the fourth game of the season. He transferred at the end of 1985 to UCLA, where he found immediate stardom in a passing offense and eventually became the Cowboys' No. 1 draft pick in 1989.

Aikman said he was grateful to Switzer because "he was very helpful getting me to a university to do what I do best." Running back Emmitt Smith, who said on Saturday "if you fire Jimmy, you fire me," had calmed down after talking to Johnson. "He said Jerry treated him well with his contract. If Jimmy is satisfied, I'm satisfied," he said. "There is no need for me to moan and groan. I have to make the best of the situation and keep moving."

Wide receiver Michael irvin, who said, "hell no" when asked if he would play for Switzer, was back at Valley Ranch slamming doors and declining interviews.

Smith said Irvin would "learn to deal with it."

When Jones mentioned Switzer's name in a bar during a tirade against Johnson at Orlando last week, it infuriated Johnson to the point of seeking a break from Jones.

Jones and Switzer had trouble getting their stories straight on when Jones first called Switzer. Switzer said, "I got a call last week from Jerry asking me if I wanted to coach."

Jones had said his first contact with Switzer was on Monday, when the tiff with Johnson was boiling. Jones backtracked to say he called Switzer last week "to avoid embarrassment about mentioning his name."

"This thing has the chance to really be fun and really be exciting and, most importantly, it's going to be successful," Jones said. "I think the excitement of being part of the Dallas Cowboys will be sustained. I think we're going to be competitive dollars and sense wise."

Switzer and Johnson were assistants at Oklahoma, where Switzer dubbed Johnson "Jimmy Jump-Up." They were rivals when Johnson became head coach at Oklahoma State, losing every year to the Sooners the five seasons he was there.

After Johnson moved to Miami, he handed Switzer his only loss three years in a row, including the 1988 Orange Bowl for the national championship.

A year later, Switzer resigned after a scandal at Oklahoma that included NCAA probation, three players charged with rape, another charged with shooting a teammate and the starting quarterback indicted on cocaine-related charges.

"I get to work with 50 professionals now," Switzer said. "I don't miss the hassles with the NCAA and recruiting."

Switzer said he wanted another job in football because he missed it.

Switzer may have been hired before Johnson was fired

IRVING, Texas (AP) — Which came first: the firing of Jimmy Johnson or the hiring of Barry Switzer?

Publicly, Johnson left the Dallas Cowboys on Tuesday and Switzer took over Wednesday.

But Switzer may have slipped up when he casually mentioned receiving a call from owner Jerry Jones last week, about the time the owner and Johnson got-into the spat that finally severed their love-hate relationship.

During Jones' barroom blasting of Johnson at the NFL meeting in Orlando, Fla., Jones mentioned firing Johnson and hiring Switzer. Before it could be clarified whether Switzer was contacted before or after the tirade, Jones and Switzer started changing their story.

"I was so fortunate to be lying on the couch last week for that phone call," Switzer said early in the half-hour news conference. "I answered the phone and it was Jerry Jones.

"Barry, he said, two questions: Do you still want to coach? And would you like to possibly think about coaching the Dallas Cowboys?"

Switzer continued talking about being excited about the offer and his new opportunity.

When Switzer finished, several questions were fired at Jones about when the call was placed.

"That's not the case," Jones said. "Basically, I spoke of Barry last week at the league meetings. I wanted to meet with Jimmy Monday. I didn't actually talk to Barry until Monday.

"I wanted to speak with Jimmy. I gave Barry a call and told him I know his name had been brought up. I hoped i hadn't embarrassed him. He said, 'Jimmy, you have honored me and you have compllmented me.' That's when i wanted to inquire about his interest.

"We had met about a year ago in Oklahoma City and had briefly talked. He invited me over to visit some people and it was very apparent to me then that his enthusiasm and charisma and that charm and that drive was very special...

"I visited with him Monday and he said 'call me if you need me.' Jimmy and i resolved and mutually agreed as to what we would do, then i gave him a call."

A few questions later, Switzer was asked when Jones called him about the possible vacancy.

"I can't remember exactly," he said with a smile to a chorus of laughs. "It happened obviously after the publicity had been in the paper.

Say What?

"The only difference between me and the coaches in the Big East is that they have silk suits and mine is mainly polyester."

– Providence College men's basketball head coach Pete Gillen

Army occupies Zulu land

PRETORIA, South Africa (AP) — President F.W. de Klerk declared a state of emergency and ordered the army into the Zuiu stronghold of Natal on Thursday, directly challenging the fiery Zulu leader who opposes the upcoming all-race elections.

De Klerk's move was aimed at stemming the violence in the province and ensuring Natal residents could vote. But it could result in a bloody showdown with Zulu nationalist leader Mangosuthu Buthelezi and his warriors.

Buthelezi, who also heads the Zulu-dominated Inkatha Freedom Party, called the troop deployment an "invasion" of KwaZulu, the Zulus' self-governed homeland within Natal. He said the sight of South African soldiers would only stoke his followers' wrath.

Foreign observers not welcome

KIRYAT ARBA, Occupied West Bank (AP) — Jewish settlers and Palestinian militants found common ground Thursday: Both denounced the decision to send foreign observers to Hebron.

Thousands of settlers rallied in Kiryat Arba, carrying banners reading "All of Israel is Hebron" and "Hebron, the eternal Jewish city." Some leaders said the observers would dilute Israeli control over the territories that Israeli has occupied since the 1967 Middle East war.

Leaders close to the Islamic Resistance Movement, or Hamas, said even with foreign observers, Palestinians would not be safe until the 450 settlers in Hebron were ousted from the city of 80,000 Arabs.

"Jewish settlers and security in the city of Hebron just do not go together," said Sheikh Tayseer

Clinton targets barriers

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Clinton administration took the first step Thursday toward establishing a "hit list" of countries judged to have erected the most harmful trade barriers to American products as it continued to turn up the pressure on Japan.

The administration released a 281-page report in which it cited 35 countries and four trading blocs for alleged unfair trading practices.

This report, known as the "National Trade Estimate Report on Foreign Trade Barriers," will serve as the basis for targeting a much smaller list of nations by Sept. 30 for possible trade sanctions if they do not agree to remove the offending barriers. While nations from Argentina to Australia were cited in the report, administration officials left no doubt that the primary focus was on Japan.

Education plan enacted

WASHINGTON (AP) — Half a decade after states began trying to improve their public schools, they finally have some financial support from the federal government.

President Clinton signed the Goals 2000 Educate America Act into law on Thursday and by July 1, the first $105 million will begin flowing to states that apply for it.

"This is the beginning. it is the foundation. Today we can say America is serious about education," Clinton said just before signing the bill on the outdoor basketball court of a San Diego elementary school.

The law requires participating states to develop — but not implement — education reform plans that set voluntary standards on curriculum, student performance and on the resources, materials and teacher preparation necessary to ensure that all children have an opportunity to learn.

The bill authorizes $647 million this year for education reforms that move toward that goal, including $400 million in grants to states and local school agencies.

House may up funding

By BEN GEMAN
Collegian Staff

The fight to keep the cost of attending the University of Massachusetts within reach of working and middle class families continued yesterday as campus representatives appeared before a House Ways and Means Committee hearing to request an increase in funds for the state university system next year.

A $21.8 million increase in the state's allocation to the UMass system in fiscal year '95 was requested at the committee's Hearing for Public Higher Education in Springfield by UMass President Michael Hooker, Student Government Association member Matthew Pavesi and Graduate Employment Organization member Tris Carpenter.

This increase would represent an approximately seven percent rise over this year's state contribution.

Hooker told the committee that in October he guaranteed students a zero percent rise in tuition and fees if the state's contribution increased by six percent, and that any subsequent increases over six percent would result in a rollback of tuition and fees.

"The students, the labor unions and the administration are all working together toward this goal," said Pavesi last night. "This has to happen. We need this or else UMass will remain inacessable to working and middle class families in the Commonwealth."

At the hearing, Pavesi told the committee about students he knows who are having trouble affording their education and may be unable to return to UMass if costs continue to rise.

"The university has to be accessible and affordable to all students. The state legislators must know that and realize that it's their constituents that are suffering," said Pavesi last night. "We won't know the budget situation before June or July, but this is the first step and the most important step."

Carpenter told the committee that inadequate state funding causes a decline in the number of teaching assistant positions available to graduate students and forces campuses in the UMass system to scale back the number of courses they can offer.

While the House Ways and Means Committee is expected to make a recommendation to the state senate on the request for increased funds in about two weeks, a final decision will not come until this summer when the house and senate vote on the final draft of the state's budget.

Governor Weld's budget spokesman, Dom Slowey, said Wednesday that the governor's budget only calls for about a $4 million increase, which would be placed in a special Higher Education Reserve Fund.

Associated Press reports contributed to this story.

Liquor sale approved

HADLEY — Having made their point, Hadley selectmen voted to allow the University of Massachusetts to sell liquor at an April 13 basketball banquet.

Selectmen approved the one-day license Wednesday in a 2-1 vote.

Two weeks ago they had postponed a vote saying they wanted to make sure the university realized they were unhappy with the school's opposition to a $1 tax the town wants to put on tickets to non-university events at its hockey and basketball arena.

Selectman Glenn Clark, who voted for the license, said he didn't want to sour relations between the university and the town.

However, selectman Anthony Waskiewicz, who cast the sole dissenting vote, said most of the team was too young to drink legally and supporters ought to set an example by not drinking.

A year has passed since the death of Tara Hartnett, but her memory still lives on in the minds of her family, friends and faculty. They participated in the Tara Hartnett Memorial in the campus center concourse, yesterday, in hopes to educate the University of Massachusetts community about relationship violence.

On March 20, 1993, Tara Hartnett, a 21–year–old UMass student, was found burned inside the ruins of her Sunderland home. Hartnett suffered from multiple stab wounds but died of smoke inhalation.

James Cyr Jr., a former UMass student and Hartnett's ex– boyfriend, is charged with murder but has pleaded innocent to charges of murder, arson, violation of a restraining order, and assault with a deadly weapon. Cyr is currently awaiting trial and faces life imprisonment if convicted.

"My daughter was condemned to death and no one is being held responsible for their actions anymore," said Judith Hartnett, Tara's mother.

Tara's mother remembers how nervous Tara was the first time she came to UMass. Tara was convinced she would hate the dorms, fail all her classes and make no friends. However, she said, her daughter became involved in campus life and made wonderful friends.

Unfortunateiy, Tara's mother said, this school and her friends had more time with her in the last years of her life than she did.

According to Tara's mother, in the past year she has been in and out of court trying to get custody of Tara's almost 2– year–old daughter Meghan, which she has since accomplished. It will take a coupie more months for the trial to begin against Cyr and the waiting is very hard, she said.

"I need justice so I can tell Tara that it is over," Tara's mother said. "Only then can I start to get over the pain."

According to Jo–Anne Vanin, the dean of students, the administration is very fortunate to have such a strong community. A community that works together to educate others about the reality of violence against women.

Victims of domestic violence are so fearful they remain "silent" but as a community we can break this silence, Vanin said.

"It's time to open our hearts and minds to educate others in effort to stop this violence," Vanin said.

Chancellor David Scott was scheduled to speak but was detained by a budget hearing in Springfield which ran late. On behalf of the chancellor, Dr. Marcellette Williams, the deputy chancellor, said that every five seconds a woman is beaten.

Domestic wars is the number one trademark in our society, Williams said. In our society violence has become so commonplace that unless it is very "ghoulish" society doesn't take it seriously, she

Everywomen's Center, community fight abuse

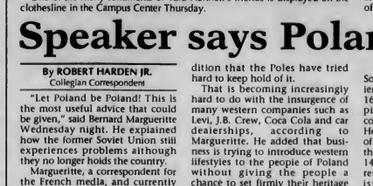
A woman is battered every 12 seconds in America.

Every day, four to five women are murdered as a result of battering.

Battering is the leading cause of injury to American women, with one million women seeking treatment at doctors' offices and emergency rooms.



According to statistics from the American Medical Association, 37 percent of all obstetric patients are battered during pregnancy.

Battering is one of the most frequently committed crimes in America. Groups on the University of Massachusetts campus and in the community are available to help women who are or were involved in abusive relationships.

The Everywoman's Center helps define battering, using a cycle of violence which includes three phases. The first phase is tension building, during which the abuser uses verbal harassment and psychological humiliation. This leads to the second phase, violence, including a physically, sexually or emotional-in memory of Tara Hartnett, the Everywoman's center at the University of Massachusetts and the Dean of Students Office co–sponsered a "Day to Remember," inviting the UMass community to remember Hartnett, as well as the fact that it was relationship violence that put an untimely end to this young woman's life.

The day included resource tables and a memorial on the concourse of the campus center in the morning, and several events in the afternoon to raise awareness of reiationship violence.

The afternoon events included a Multi–Media room in which the Academy Award winning documentary entitled "Defending Our Lives" was being shown. The documentary is made up of women who have been incarcerated because they killed their batterers sharing their stories. On the wall hung 28 silhouettes of women who had been killed by their partner or ex–partner, as well bulletin boards holding the myths and facts of relationship violence.

A Self–Defense workshop was offered in another room, but unfortunately, noone attended. In response to this, Nancy Rothenberg, a Martial Arts teacher who was in charge of the workshop said that the lack of attendance was due in a large part to denial that violence against women really is an epidemic in this culture and needs to be dealt with. "They know it's out there, but it is not something that is discussed among peers."

Speaker says Poland still has problems

By ROBERT HARDEN JR.
Collegian Correspondent

"Let Poland be Poland! This is the most useful advice that could be given," said Bernard Marguerite Wednesday night. He explained how the former Soviet Union still experiences problems although they no longer holds the country.

Marguerite, a correspondent for the French media, and currently an associate professor at Harvard University, spoke at the School of Management on the current situation in Poland.

One of the biggest problems that Marguerite spoke of was the invasion by the west. He said Poland has a rich culture and tradition that the Poles have tried hard to keep hold of it.

That is becoming increasingly hard to do with the insurgence of many western companies such as Levi, J.B. Crew, Coca Cola and car deaierships, according to Marguerite. He added that business is trying to introduce western lifestyles to the people of Poland without giving the people a chance to set firmly their heritage which they were able to maintain under Soviet ruie.

He said with this western invasion came anti–western attitudes. This in turn has spawned hate groups such as Anti– Semites, who feel that the Jews are responsible for the downfall of Poland.

With the dissolution of the Soviet Union came another problem — unemployment. Currently 16 percent of the country is unemployed and 40 percent of the country is below the poverty line. He said with these problems most of the country has little liking for their new government, only about 14 percent of the people have any respect for the government ministries. The problem, said Marguerite, is that people thought that they would be rid of communist ruie.

Marguerite said Poles found out after gaining their freedom that they had to deal with a whole new set of problems. The people want the problems fixed and fixed quick. Most don't realize that it will take time to rebuild Poland, he said.

Marguerite said the best chance Poland has to regain its strength is to re–establish a feeling of Solidarity, like that present during the early '80s.

Marguerite projects that it could take 30 to 40 years to reconstruct the country. With those years, Marguerite sees the possibility that Poland could be an important focal point in Central Europe, the Baltics and Ukraine, yet none of these things wil happen unless Poland is left alone.

Poland already has a line of credit from the World Bank and they have used less than half, Marguerite said. The Polish people want to have the country that is theirs and with very little interference from the west.

Marguerite said there are many kinds of capitalism. The U.S. system is not right for the Polish culture, but there has always been a tradition of love for the States, it is Polish cuiture to be good friends. He said when President Kennedy was shot people were crying in the streets, and when Robert Kennedy came to visit, the people carried him in his car through the streets.

In closing, Marguerite said he could not stand to stay away from Poland for very long He loves Poland more than his own country or any other for that matter.

responsible for bringing the Clothesline Project to UMass. The Clothesline was in another room and people were invited to design their own tee-shirts during the display. "It's like hanging out dirty laudry for people to feel the impact that battered women are not just statistics, they are people." Rothenberg said.

Irma Gonzalez, the coordinator for the Educator Advocate Program at the Everywomen's Center, said of the day, "People don't know what relationship violence is, even people that are informed think of it as domestic violence; husband beating wife, when in fact, 1/10 teen dating relationships is violent."

Myths

- Battered women are to be blamed if they don't leave the relationship.
- Rarely do battered women leave the abusive relationship.
- "Battering" overstates the case, most women are just "slapped around" a little.

Facts

- The only one to be blamed for abuse is the abusive partner.
- 63% of battered women do leave the abusive relationship.
- Battering is the #1 cause of injury to women in the United States.

said.

Over three million women are battered in our society and almost a third are killed by their male partners, Williams said. Through participating in volunteer programs like the Everywoman's Center and educating yourself and others, is a start in helping reduce the statistics on domestic violence, she said.

"If you care about this issue, then get involved," Williams said. "If you are not part of the solution then you are part of the problem."

According to Dawn Melchionda, a UMass graduate and close friend of Tara, a day doesn't pass by when she doesn't have an empty feeling inside. Tara gave her a precious gift of friendship that was so strong, she wonders if the pain will ever end.

"All the dreams that you (Tara) hold for Meghan, I hope becomes a reality," Melchionda said.

ly violent assault. The third phase, the honeymoon phase, is a period of apology, guilt and promises.

According to Patricia Mota Guedes, who is involved in the Educator/Advocates Program at the Everywoman's Center, raising awareness of the issues, educating others and working in programs such as the Educator/Advocates or the Counselor/Advocates are some of the ways to prevent domestic violence.

The Everywoman's Center provides a 24-hour hotline, support groups, short-term counseling and referrals to local resources for survivors. All services are free and confidential.

"Prevention of domestic abuse really starts in the home," said Bob Mazer of Amherst. "Violent images in the media affect children when they see abuse in their own homes."

Battering is not just a women's problem. Local men's groups that help combat battering and sexism include Men Active for Change (MAC) and Wild Intrepid Men Protesting Sexism (WIMPS).

"We see violence all through society," said Macer. We need to educate children about abuse, and schools are starting to teach conflict resolution to prevent violence."

"Women need to decide on their own, with the help of others, to leave an abusive relationship," said Melanie DeSilva, a member of UMASS Power, a group with an agenda of political activism to satisfy the diverse needs of women in the campus community.

"It is an attempt at survival to stay in an abusive relationship," said DeSilva. "The strategy for leaving is long-term and complex."

Women do not have to battle domestic abuse alone. Local resources provide help, and every indiondary schools, the program reaches from the rural countryside to the inner city.

"The problems we're addressing in these school systems to create quality education for all children represents a microcosm of the kinds of problems that exist in American education," said Sinclair.

This is the second donation from the Cosbys of $50,000 to the program. "With the help of Dr. Camille Cosby, we are assisting young women who are parents while they are in school by teaching them how to care for their babies and creating health clinics in schools so these women and their children can have good health services," said Sinclair.

Another part of the program is a project where older students are paid to tutor younger elementary students in math and reading.

The benefit is that these marginal elementary students have a chance at catching up and doing better, and as Sinclair said, "Older kids benefit as well. They fell very good about being a service to the older kids."

A highlight of the program is college scholarships are provided to high school seniors who would otherwise not have the money to attend college.

Other members of the Advisory Board include local Dr. Norma Jean Anderson, and former wife of Malcolm X, Dr. Betty Shabazz.

Both of the Cosbys received their doctorate degrees from UMass.

Angst central theme in today's music

Angst. In the music world, the term is virtually omnipresent. Every musician has angst, every songwriter has written a song filled with angst. Some of our most popular musicians of today are completely overrun with angst. Eddie Vedder, Kurt Cobain, Billy Corgan and Trent Reznor all live, breathe and personify angst. So what is this word? Why is it so completely applicable to music? Why do I love this word so darn much?

Angst is great word because it sums up so much distraught feeling in only five letters. Feelings of angst can be classified not only as melancholia or anxiety but a deep yearning for something, an object generally unattainable. What makes this little word so multitalented is that the emptiness and want created by the feeling can cover all bases. Whether it be lost love, lost childhood, lost sanity — the word angst applies to them all.

When Mr. Cobain screeches through "Rape Me," Eddie wails on about his "Rearviewmirror" or the head Pumpkin whines that "the killer in me is the killer in you" they are expressing a multitude of feelings, involving regret, anger and sadness. But the easiest and best way to address all of these emotions when writing is by using that little word; you guessed it — angst.

I think it has only taken a few years of absence for us to realize how important and unique The Pixies were to the music world. Some of today's best bands, including Sugar and Pavement openly point to Black Francis, Kim Deal and Co. as being major influences. But truly, no one has ever created their own world of lyric and music, and lived in it so well as the Pixies. Trick the world indeed.

Well, as we all know Spring Break '94 has come and gone. While many were bathing in the warm sunlight, the latter of these two music men was bathing in the radioactive UV rays of the television. After watching so much MTV that I could possibly be used for experiments (I swear it's addictive), I have come to the following conclusions about the 24-hour video station and music in general.

Is their any human being on this planet at the current moment more annoying than that dork Eric that hosts MTV's dance show The Grind? He went from the resident "hunk" on The Real World to one of the most overblown egos on television today (only second to MTV VJ Bill Bellamy). I swear I'm not a violent person, but...

Remember when MTV just showed videos? No lip-synching game shows, no silly cartoon characters, no real life dramas. Just videos. Not only has the station bombarded us with absurd "Generation X" shows, but they have also decided to categorize all sub-divisions of music for us. We now have rap shows, R&B shows, alternative shows, and rock shows. Thank God they have labeled our music for us. We wouldn't want any grunge fans watching En Vogue by mistake. They might... like it.

The only positive thing I found on MTV is The Jon Stewart Show. Watching Jon babble on with his guests in his characteristically goofy manner is like looking into the mirror. He represents the dorky yet funny college every-man. Plus, he can make even the stalest of guests give a funny interview. Networks take note.

On a non-MTV note, I was fortunate enough this past week to hear Vanilla Ice's new album Mind Blowin'. I say fortunate because it was one of the funniest experiences I have had in quite some time (though I believe it was unintentional). Our friend Robbie Van Winkle is back, this time sporting dreds, a bagful of weed and a gangsta attitude. Ice, Ice, didn't anyone ever tell you that if you have to change your image, there was definitely something wrong the first time around. Mind blowin'? I don't think so.

On a positive note, I've come to the conclusion that New Jersey's Yo La Tengo is the greatest band in the world (this means their latest album has spent the most time in my CD player this week.) Of course this may change over the weekend. I'll keep you posted.

Theater breaks communication walls

By MARNI E. HELFNER
Collegian Staff

New WORLD Theater and the Office of Disability Services recognize that deafness crosses cultural boundaries. They are presenting The Revival of Black Women's Stories: One Deaf Experience, a collection of Black Women's Stories presented in American Sign Language.

Because people first identify culturally, and then as a deaf person, it is hard for people to comprehend the need for cross-cultural theater.

"Cross-cultural programs help people to understand that people are different even within the community," said Corinne Brennan-Dore, coordinator of deaf services. "For example, some hearing impaired read lips, while others use sign language; it varies from person to person."

Michele Banks and other members of the Onyx Theater Company will present a series of short stories and poems from hearing and deaf Black women writers. The performance will be in American sign language with voice interpreters. Featured writers include Alice Walker, Toni Morrison, Maya Angelou, Gayle Jones, Ntozake Shange, Lisa Weems, Anne Marie Bryan and Banks.

Banks, one of the first deaf NYU graduate film students, is also the director of the show.

"The mission of the New WORLD Theater is to have educational programming in conjunction with the artistic programming we provide," said Erika Higgins, educational and outreach coordinator of the New WORLD Theater. "Our events address important issues... we sponsor workshops in conjunction with every event."

A panel, "Spanning Cultures: Deaf Communities of Color," will discuss the needs and experiences of the Deaf with a cross-cultural lifestyle. The panel will include various members of the Deaf ALANA community, including African-American, Latino, Native American, male and female.

"The goal of this program is to view deafness as a culture as opposed to deafness as a disability," said Higgins.

There are performances planned for Friday at 8 p.m., Saturday at 2 p.m. and 8 p.m. The cost is $3 for students, and $5 for others. The panel discussion, which is free, will follow the Saturday matinee performance.

Invitation to irritation of Diklich's Wedding

By SHAWN McDONNELL
Collegian Staff

From the moment I entered the Curtain Theater I was wary. Mingling throughout the first-night audience of Bertolt Brecht's The Wedding was a group of very uncomfortable- looking actors — sweat glistening off greasepaint, faces strained in grotesque, forced smiles. The point was to ad-lib a wedding reception — greeting guests, sharing gossip. But the pretense was unnatural, unnecessary and aggravating.

It was also a fitting prologue for the seat-shifting irritation that was to follow.

The Wedding, on its own terms, is a small treat from the German writer best known for the moral tale of the Good Woman of Setzuan — a savage comedy of manners which isn't afraid to be abrasive. The play, particularly in this wonderful translation by Martin and Rose Kastner, deserves a production where the passions sing with the power of the London Symphony. As directed by Davor Diklich for the UMass Theater Department, however, the range of the play is closer to fingernails on a blackboard — a series of whines which tire audience and actors alike.

Originally written in 1919 (but transplanted here to a vaguely contemporary setting), The Wedding is a one-hour slice of frustration fashioned from the fallout of some truly disastrous nuptials. The bride (Robyn Broderick) is five months pregnant, frustrated in her plans to plead "premature delivery" by a groom (Nic Tyler) who delayed their happy day by 25 weeks, so he could finish outfitting their dream house. The wedding guests include a hollowly charming snob (Kristin MacLeod), her simpering, harassed husband (Andrew Alabran), and two cloying lust confections (Katie Shorey, Sean Michael Casey) with Gleem smiles and rabbit libidos.

There is so much potential humor to be mined from these characters that one longs for a director such as Ben Ware (who directed the similarly focused, but more gentle, Bedroom Farce a year ago) who could wring the most life out of these grotesque waxworks. Mr. Diklich is not that director. Indeed, it is unclear why he chose to direct a satire at all. His wedding is a funeral for sombre political

Poet tells his story

Martin Espada
Augusta Savage Gallery
March 30, 1994

A crowd of approximately 60 people came to hear Martin Espada read his work, and experienced a range of reactions, from amused to shocked.

Espada has been an assistant professor of English at UMass since this past fall semester. His first works were published 14 years ago in the literary magazine Abraxs, and the poet has since had four books of his works released.

Beginning with "Imagine the Angels of Bread: 1994," Espada explained that the poem was written for NPR's commentary program, "All Things Considered." Relating the story of how the news program approached him, he told of how they offered a commission, adding flippantly how he "would do anything for one hundred dollars."

The artist proceeded with poems about his childhood, growing up in Brooklyn, N.Y., his first visit to Puerto Rico, where his family is from, as well as one of his first jobs, which illustrated the paradise, pain and joy he experienced growing up.

It is poems like this that introduce us to the author's poignant style. He manages to walk the fine line between humor and seriousness carefully and with agility, and his comedy never seems inappropriate.

There are grave sides to Espada's work, however, as he deals with issues of racism, in "The Other Alamo," and poverty in "The Broken Window of Rosa Ramos."

The range of topics discussed

Having trouble in paradise

There are some experiences in life that either make us realize just how pathetic the human condition is or give us the opportunity to laugh at ourselves. Spring break is usually chock full of such instances, and, for me, this year was no exception.

I could not figure out where the uneasy feeling in my stomach was coming from on my way to Logan Airport on that first Sunday. I was on my way to Cancun — finally — looking forward to a week of carefree fun and sunny beaches and I had this strange feeling that it just wasn't going to be that easy.

We had made travel arrangements with a questionable agency called Take a Break, which was under investigation by the Attorney General for embezzlement and fraud. Call me crazy, but I had doubts about the likelihood of the four of us ending up in Mexico.

Our flight was supposed to leave at 5:30 p.m., and my friends and I had arrived two hours early to check in and wait for take-off. After about an hour of camping out amidst our suitcases, an airline representative informed us that there would be a slight delay; we wouldn't take off until 3 a.m. We faced almost six hours of waiting until we could even board the plane, not to mention one less night in sunny Cancun.

Most of the students seemed to take the news well and, despite a few expected grumbles, jovially set out for bars or restaurants in the airport or downtown.

By 1 a.m., everything in the airport had closed, people had become tired and restless, and the excitement with which we had all arrived was drained. By 3 a.m., it had become apparent that the airline was definitely jerking us around, and that we would not see the inside of an airplane for a while longer.

Tempers were hot as hostile cries and shouts rang out throughout the frustrated group.

"Take a Break?" one kid screamed, "How about 'Gimme a Break!'" Another responded, "Yeah, or 'Take a number to beat this guy's door down and show him what he can do with his reservations.'"

After a few more anxious hours, we finally boarded the Capitol plane (never heard of it? Neither had I...) at 6 a.m. After a brief return of excitement at really being on our way, most of us passed out in our cramped seats and prayed that we'd make it to Cancun.

Nineteen hours after my initial arrival at Logan, I stepped onto Mexican soil and felt the first promising rays of sunshine on my face. The week was a blissful blur of beachgoing, dancing, snorkeling and tequila, and it made every minute of the airport vigil seem worth the wait.

The day before we were supposed to leave, we were informed that our 10:40 a.m. flight was delayed until 1:25 p.m. At least we had a day's notice and a considerably shorter delay than we'd had the first time. Besides, the airline wouldn't do that to us again — something that awful doesn't happen twice... usually.

By 4 p.m. on departure day we were delayed for an indefinite period of time, there was no airline representative to give us an explanation and airport employees who were present were receiving contradictory stories from Capitol Air. We were stranded.

If you get what you pay for, the old adage dictates, but even the lowest prices did not justify the stress of worrying that we may be unable to return home for days.

We are students and we are more or less able to adapt to rough situations and transitions fairly easily. However, this does not mean that we do not have the right to good service and respect throughout our dealings with agencies and businesses in the "real world."

"We are students, and we are more or less able to adapt to rough situations and transitions fairly easily. However, this does not mean that we do not have the right to good service and respect throughout our dealings with agencies and businesses in the 'real world'."

Emily Marino

Almost a week later, I can and do laugh about "being stranded in a Mexican airport for thirteen hours," as many of my friends who have heard the story will agree. In between chuckles, however, I warn students to be aware of fly-by- night operations like Take a Break and Mickey Mouse airlines like Capitol.

There are a slew of people just waiting to take advantage of our lack of experience and good nature, and we shouldn't forget that, as consumers, we have as much right as anyone to demand quality and respect from service providers that count on our hard-earned bucks.

Siblings aren't simply rivals

When I think of rivalries, many come to mind — the New York Yankees and the Boston Red Sox, Tom and Jerry, Rocky Balboa and Apollo Creed, Luke Skywalker and Darth Vader, Coke and Pepsi, Burger King and McDonald's, the Road Runner and Wile E. Coyote, the Sharks and Jets.

John Calipari and John Chaney, the Hatfields and the McCoys, David Letterman and NBC, Magic and Larry, Burt and Loni, Calvin and Hobbes, Calvin and Susie.

But to me, the one that really comes to mind is the series of battles between Danielle and Art, my sister and myself. I think anyone who has a sibling of the opposite sex will agree that the rivalry between a brother and a sister is all- out war.

Arthur Stapleton Jr.

Growing up, I had a sister to play sports with. She wasn't into playing sports. I loved professional wrestling; she did, too, for a while, but too many figure-four leglocks can be enought to deter any average fan.

On the other hand, she loved going to dance clubs on teen night, while I only dance slow in elevators. The phone is attached to her ear; I rarely use it.

I hear stories from relatives about how I reacted when my grandmother told me I was going to have a baby sister. I was three years old at the time.

"You ran out of the house, down to the beach and strolled up and down the boardwalk, chanting, 'I'm gonna have a sister!'"

The joy was there — obviously. I don't remember doing it, but when I think about Danielle, the joy returns. Hey, she's my little sister. No matter how old she gets, she's never old enough.

Maybe it's just me, but I don't want anything bad to happen to her. Whether it's having sex or using alcohol — or both — I get this queasy feeling (kind of like the one you get before an exam), knowing that it has to happen sooner or later, but you'd really like to postpone it for as long as possible.

Danielle is going to be 18 years young this June. Over Spring Break, she finally got her driver's license. Umm, I wouldn't trust my sister on a tricycle, let alone putting the pedal to the metal in the family Buick — and she asks me to go for a drive around town?

I'm sorry, I didn't mean to be insulting, but...

Then the fighting begins to surface. I never cuss at my sister, and vice versa. That's what makes it even harder to argue: the rage which builds up inside frustrates me. The end result is usually a couple of slammed doors and some screaming from my father.

Our fights have been classic — over the telephone, the television, her social life (and my lack of one), my friends, her friends... the list goes on and on. But the greatest ones of all usually involve that institution which is supposed to teach you lessons: school.

I have always been a good student, getting A's galore from grammar school throughout my stay in Hackensack High. Imagine the pressure Danielle must have felt early on. No, my parents did not use comparisons, but they were unavoidable. From the teachers. From friends of the family. Why couldn't she get good grades like her big brother?

Well, she could, but didn't. Her priorities in school were different. Danielle cared more about passing notes to the cute boy in the first row than she did about taking down notes from the teacher's lecture. That's her choice.

We are two opposites when it comes to schoolwork, and the pressure I have put on her is immense. I've tried to make Danielle realize how important education is. Hey, she's educated, it's just that her grades don't show it. But every time a piece of advice comes out of my mouth, Danielle takes it one of two ways: I'm either meddling in her business or being condescending.

But all of the fighting proves one thing to me: we're more alike than either of us would admit.

My sister's a strong person. So am I. We're both stubborn and I like to protect her. I guess it's the big brother syndrome — nobody better hurt my little Danielle. Well, she's not a little girl anymore; she's a wo... wooom... an and she will be for the rest of her life.

But I'm still her big brother — and that's forever, too.

Generation X doesn't care

We don't care.

Our nation has turned into a group of apathetic losers intent on watching situation comedies, eating fast food and gossiping about movie stars.

Let me rewind a bit. It hasn't happened overnight. It's been this way for a while, and nobody seems to do anything about it. The progression of our country into a moral abyss has been steady since the 1970s. Those who remember the Kitty Genoese murder know that our citizens are unwilling to act, even when a murder is being committed in cold blood. That was nearly 20 years ago!

Michael Morrissey

Since that time, we have been exposed to even more violence, both real and imagined, and our attitudes have slowly but definitely progressed. We are now enlightened.

Today is Good Friday for those of you non–religious types. There's certainly a larger number of atheists today than 20 years ago. Today is the day Jesus Christ was crucified, a torturous ritual of death two millennia ago. Today, crucifixion is bandied around on music videos.

Think about all the senseless violence we see that makes the news or television. Thursday, we remembered the death of a student who was allegedly stabbed and burnt to death by her child's husband. There is a man in prison convicted of killing 18 boys and doing unspeakable and unimaginable things to them.

There have been 17–year–olds who've killed their 14–year– old girlfriends, teenagers who light kids on fire because they refuse to take drugs, and husbands who kill their wives and blame the stereotypical "usual suspects." Compared with these acts, Jesus practically died in his sleep.

It isn't just violence — Americans are apathetic in their political lives. Our voter turnout ratio is lower than almost any other country. How can we be proud of our democratic system when most people barely take time to vote?

There are dozens of examples of the "I don't care" attitude. Teachers don't care; they just give their students A's or B's regardless. Parents don't care; they always knew their sons and daughters would be good-for-nothings. Kids don't care; "Beavis and Butt–head" is on in 15 minutes, and if that doesn't take them away from reality, there's always Mortal Kombat.

We read about our age bracket being Generation X. What does Generation X stand for? Nothing. What does Generation X believe in? Certainly not authority, education, family values, church or citizenship.

There's nothing there. That's why it's called X. Nobody can determine the X factor that makes us tick. Nobody can figure out what we stand for. The saying goes, "If you stand up for nothing, you'll fall for anything." That is our current crisis.

I'm not asking people to change their behavior overnight. They wouldn't even if I begged.' But I do hope the younger generation wakes up to what is going on. We have to be conscientious to the insanity going on. You can care, even if your parents or guardians or role models don't (Charles Barkley is the leader of the I–don't–cares).

Our country won't move ahead until we do. But maybe you don't care.

Hillel condemns Hebron massacre

To the editor:

The recent massacre of 29 Arabs in Hebron by the Jewish fanatic Baruch Goldstein is a horrible example of what can occur when religion, in this case Judaism — a religion of love — is used as a weapon of hatred. We, as members of the University of Massachusetts Hillel, condemn the massacre and the hatred it symbolizes. Simultaneously, we commend the Israeli government for distancing itself from the hate–filled ideology that spawned the attack.

However, we are appalled at the attention that this single, isolated event has commanded on the world scene, and the way the enemies of Israel have used this event to their political advantage. Enemies that do not only cheer at the sight of Jewish blood, but for the last 70 years with their petro dollars have actively supported thousands of terrorist attacks that have claimed over 5,000 lives.

When one Jewish madman entered a mosque and murders innocent people, every Jewish organization rose up to condemn and dissociate themselves from the act. Hillel is only adding its name to a long list. Now the question must be asked, why haven't any Arab countries, or the United Nations Security Council or, for that matter, the Palestinians condemned any of the plethora of attacks against Jews, Americans, Europeans, or the war against Israel, the ultimate terrorist action of this century? Could the answer be that the PLO, Hamas, Syria, and Iran use terrorism as official state policy? Or do the deaths of innocents mean nothing unless they are killed by Jews?

With all the massacres of both Whites and Blacks in South Africa, the parties there are still talking. The consensus is that the majority wants peaceful coexistence and that they will not let extremists steer them from that goal. Many innocent Jews have been brutally murdered in Israel since the signing of the Declaration of Principles, yet the Israeli government, the victor of all past wars, kept on negotiating, even agreeing to concede land to its defeated enemy.

On the other hand, after the Hebron Massacre, the PLO withdrew from negotiations and demanded more concessions. We are not seeking to condemn all Muslims or Arabs, but we wish to express our outrage at specific political groups and tyrannical regimes, and especially at the media for not handling the issue equitably. As Jews we have had enough of this double standard.

New memorial to honor POWs

To the editor:

Congress has designated April 9 as POW Recognition Day. Former American POWs from all wars, all services, and both female and male servicepeople are to be honored.

After as long as 50 years ago, people have forgotten the treatment American POWs endured during their internment. All POWs experienced the hell of combat before they were captured. During internment they suffered the most inhumane treatment man could inflict upon man. They were starved, had primitive housing, no sanitation, insufficient clothing, no medical treatment, taken on forced marches in tropical heat or below freezing temperatures, forced to do slave labor, tortured and many were killed. To this day the majority of the POWs that survived suffer physical and emotional trauma from the abusive treatment of internment.

The national organization American Ex–Prisoners of War, in conjunction with the National Park System, is building a museum to memorialize the POWs. The museum will contain memorabilia, artifacts and official records and documents related to POWs. The museum is being built in Andersonville, GA., which was chosen because it was probably the most infamous POW camp of the Civil War. The treatment at this camp typifies the inhumane treatment POWs were exposed to. The camp had 45,000 Union captives; 12,912 died in captivity.

The American Ex–Prisoners of War are conducting a major fund–raising campaign for the museum's construction. Costs will be aided by the U.S. government's minting of a silver dollar POW Commemorative Coin. The coin will be available sometime this summer.

It must be remembered continually what American POWs endured. We must continually nag at the world's conscience until our leaders find peaceful ways to settle disputes so such tragedies will never occur again.

Your Horoscope

By Jeane Dixon

ARIES (March 21–April 19): Quick financial maneuvering clinches an important deal. You attests to further your education begun to pay off. A community project gives you the opportunity to make friends.

TAURUS (April 20–May 20): A good day for work, trips and family unity. You can rejoice that you made a decision which improved your lot in many ways. Turn to art and literature if seeking inspiration.

GEMINI (May 21–June 20): A conference reveals that you may have to travel soon or even change your home base temporarily. If you feel envy, admit it to yourself but no one else.

CANCER (June 21–July 22): Be a peacemaker. Guard against trouble by avoiding someone who is devilish or spiteful. Someone may try to block your business efforts. Keep your temper in check while devising a new strategy.

LEO (July 23–Aug. 22): A busy work day means that good things are headed your way. This evening, your conversational skills will win you new admirers. Clarify your views when talking with a loved one.

VIRGO (Aug. 23–Sept. 22): A friend could oppose you in a financial tug of war. Opt for a common sense approach to this dilemma. A compromise will save the day. Romance is a guessing game.

LIBRA (Sept. 23–Oct. 22): A sudden upset is possible this morning. The afternoon would be a much better time to deal with family members or authority figures. A period of quiet reflection aids your thinking.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23–Nov. 21): You are in the spotlight now and can make real career progress. Seize an opportunity to demonstrate your leadership abilities in a convincing way: a co-worker's support is easy to secure.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22–Dec. 21): Diligence pays off on the professional front. Do your homework and wider public recognition will follow. A clever idea could flash through your mind this afternoon.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22–Jan. 19): Emphasize your independence in career and business matters. You have plenty to say about a financial arrangement and are not inclined to honey-coat your words.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20–Feb. 18): Take advantage of a splendid financial opportunity. Action and good luck go hand-in-hand. One of your pet theories is about to be tested.

PISCES (Feb. 19–March 20): Friends may find it difficult to get a direct answer from you regarding a real estate or financial matter. Continue to keep your own counsel.

statements that defy rational logic.

Routinely, throughout his production, all action freezes. The lights go down, and the audience stares in prolonged silence at a slide of a decapitated World War II GIs. Or the distended stomachs of starving children. Or the bare ribs of a POW.

Perhaps Diklich thinks that a liberal salting of random unpleasantness will make the show deep. But Brecht's script is not meant to be deep — it is as shallow as a mirror of shallowness, and the random unpleasantness is limited to suppertime sniping. Who could read lofty politics into a play where the wedding song is called "Well I'll Be Damned ('Here Comes Your Ghost Again')?"

There are some great people drowning in Diklich's well of stupid imagery. Scenic designer Terry Beckett has done an outstanding job of crafting the contact paper doll house furniture in which the groom places so much pride. Peter Fernandez has written an ideally tacky wedding score.

Particularly welcome is Brian C. Sparrow as the inevitable in–law with the inexhaustible supply of anecdotes springing from between nicotine–stained teeth. Sparrow is a wonderful actor and his spasms of red–faced affront at constantly being cut off come dangerously close to making this evening worthwhile.

Baseball set to take on GW

UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Junior co–captain Greg LaRocca provides great defense at shortstop for the Minutemen; at the same time, LaRocca wields a heavy bat as well, hitting among the team's leaders.

By ARTHUR STAPLETON JR.

The smell of freshly–cut grass on the infield. The crack of the bat. The sound of the impact the ball makes with the catcher's mitt. The smell of roasted peanuts?

Well, forget the grass, thanks to typical New England snowfall, and if you want peanuts, you'll have to bring your own. However, if it's baseball you desire, the UMass team is playing some.

One problem: the snow forced the Minutemen to take it on the road for their second weekend of Atlantic 10 competition, this time against George Washington. Because Massachusetts' home field, Earl Lorden Field, is covered with the white stuff, the league moved this weekend's contests to Washington, D.C. (doubleheader, today at 12 p.m. and single game Saturday at 12 p.m.).

The results in the win–loss column were not too favorable for Coach Mike Stone's Minutemen after the first eight games; not a single victory, but there were bright spots:

Rollins College 4, Massachusetts 3. Rollins, ranked No. 3 in the national Division II rankings, scored two runs on an error and three consecutive hits, overtaking the Minutemen in the bottom of the ninth inning. The Tars improved to 23–4 with the victory.

Senior Peter Ferrari pitched the entire contest for Massachusetts, allowing four runs on nine hits while striking out five and walking only three, in the losing effort.

Ohio State 8, Massachusetts 6. The Minutemen held a 5– 4 lead over the No. 18th ranked Buckeyes in the seventh inning, but two errors led to four earned runs, allowing Ohio State to pick up the win.

Freshman Jason Bennett was very strong in six innings of work.

• • • •

Massachusetts picked up not only its second win of the season but Stone's 150th of his coaching career two days ago at the University of Hartford, 6–3.

The Minuteman team is extremely young this season, carrying 10 freshmen and six sophomores on the roster. Here's a look at the Massachusetts squad, position–by– position:

First Base: Senior Jeff January and sophomore Justin Kelly should both see time at one of the hot corners this season. January is hitting .222 (eight hits, four RBI) so far in 11 games. Kelly has only seen action in five.

Junior Bill Knight, who finished off last year as the first baseman of the Minutemen, has played a majority of games in the outfield, hitting .207 with a home run and seven RBI.

Second Base: Sophomore Mark Pileski is the team's second baseman for the second straight season and has gotten off to a hot start. In 10 games, he is hitting .282 (11 hits, four RBI). Last year, Pileski injured his right thumb which kept him out of an extended period of games.

Shortstop: Junior co–captain Greg LaRocca is not only solid at the plate but in the field as well. So far this season, LaRocca has started in 10 of the 11 games, committing only three errors while compiling a .912 fielding percentage (13 put–outs, 18 assists).

LaRocca is second on the team in hitting, stroking one home run and collecting six RBI; he is batting .371 with 13 hits (a double, eight runs scored).

Third Base: Before the season began, senior co–captain Justin Howard was expected to slide into the vacancy left by Steve Corradi; however, Howard has spent most of the time as the designated hitter for the Minutemen so far, allowing freshman Ryan Thistle to start in nine contests.

Howard, who spent time among the nation's leaders in batting last season, is once again off to a good start. Starting all eleven games so far, Howard is the most complete offensive player for Stone, hitting .333 with four doubles, two triples, two home runs, seven RBI and one stolen base.

Catcher: Junior Andy Pelis returns for his second year as the backstop for the Minutemen. Pelis has started nine games this year and is very strong defensively but streaky at the plate. At times last season, Pelis carried the Minutemen offensively; but so far this season, he only has three hits in 24 at–bats, driving in four runs.

Outfield: Nelson Ubaldo, the team's centerfielder last season, has returned for his sophomore season on fire. Ubaldo is leading the Minutemen in hitting after the first 11 games, batting at a scalding .406 clip, with a double, five RBI and two stolen bases.

Freshman Nate Murphy should fill another slot in the outfield for the Minutemen. He has started all 10 games he has played in, hitting .242 with two RBI.

Pitching: Junior Jay Murphy is the only returning starter from last season's rotation and should be the ace of the staff. He is coming off the team's first win of the season against Rutgers. Freshmen Chad Sullivan appears to be solid at the number two spot behind Murphy, but if last year is any indication, Stone will use a number of pitchers to start until he finds a rotation that works.

Seniors Greg Dowd and Peter Ferrari along with sophomores John Aives and David Dart make up a formidable bullpen.

Minutewomen try to tame Lady Tigers

ARAM COMKANI / COLLEGIAN

Junior Kelly Daut is the anchor of the Massachusetts softball pitching staff.

By SEAN P. HAYDEN
Collegian Staff

Fresh from a road trip that spanned across the continental United States, the University of Massachusetts softball team returned to Amherst to find its home field still in sloppy condition and, as a result, it is forced to hit the road once again this weekend when it travels to Princeton to take on the Lady Tigers.

The Minutewomen headed south to start the break, playing in a tournament hosted by national power Florida State and coming away with a 2–3 record by winning its first and last game of the tourney.

Massachusetts started the tournament in dramatic fashion, winning its first game with a two–run rally in the top of the seventh inning and making a winner of junior ace Kelly Daut, who allowed eight hits in seven innings of work.

With two down in the seventh, it was the Minutewoman freshmen who provided the victory, as Stephanie Mareina walked and scored on Samantha Cardenas' triple, who scored the winning run when Michelle Methot singled.

After dropping consecutive decisions to Georgia State, Northern Iowa and Western Illinois, Massachusetts bounced back with a 5–4 decision over the University of Illinois– Chicago.

Down by four–run after the first inning courtesy of a UIC grand slam, the Minutewomen chipped away at the lead, sparked by a Michelle Shaw solo home run in the fourth, until they once more took the lead for good in the final frame when senior Rachel Lawson scored on a Methot single.

Daut picked up her second win of the year, giving up four runs on seven hits.

The PONY–Louisville Tournament, hosted by Cal–State Fullerton, was next on the Massachusetts itinerary and the Minutewomen and Daut began right where they left off in Florida, defeating Big Ten member Minnesota 4–2 to raise their record to 3–2 on the trip.

With a 2–1 lead in the top of the third and one out, Methot continued her strong hitting with a double to left. One out later, a Chris Martens single to center plated Methot for the eventual winning run.

Daut raised her record to 3–1 with a nine–hit, two–run performance.

The Minutewomen returned home with a 3–7 record as a result of dropping their last four decisions of the trip.

Around the horn: The top performances at the plate for Coach Elaine Sortino thus far have been turned in by a couple of freshmen.

Christine Martens leads the team with a .333 average and also has one round–tripper while fellow frosh Samantha Cardenas is hitting at a .306 clip and leads the team with 11 hits.

Lawson leads the team with four runs batted in, and is also tops with 66 putouts. ... Second baseman Tracey DuEst has 23 assists — the most on the team.

Daut sports a nifty 1.81 earned run average, allowing 13 runs in 50 and one–third innings pitched; she also has 34 strikeouts.

The Minutewomen have been outscored in every inning so far this season, with their most productive inning being the seventh, where they've tallied a total of five runs.

Lax heads to Fleet Invite

By ANDREW BRYCE

Syracuse, Brown and Hofstra.

The University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team cannot get much stronger competition than those three teams as they head to Providence, RI, to participate in what has been said to be the nation's finest in–season lax tournament in the Fleet invitational this weekend.

Notice that the two well–known powerhouse lax programs in Syracuse and Brown are listed ahead of Hofstra. Please also take notice that Hofstra is the only undefeated team in the talent–packed tournament. And note that Massachusetts must play Hofstra in a first round game today at 12 noon at Brown Stadium.

Despite it being April Fool's Day, there's no foolin' going on with the Gorillas's first round opponent. Hofstra (4–0), No. 9 in the nation, is coming off a 13–5 victory over Air Force.

The Flying Dutchmen are led by junior Kevin Jacobs and senior attackman Andy Carlson. Jacobs leads the Hofstra in scoring with seven goals and 12 assists, while Carlson leads in goals (11).

One other thing to notice: this weekend will be Hofstra's first games on the road this season. Still, No. 13 Massachusetts does not plan on taking the Flying Dutchmen too lightly. Senior captain Kenny Randazzo said the Gorillas are concentrating on and preparing for the Hofstra game only, despite the other first round tilt.

Massachusetts is led by All–America candidate Wes Depp. The senior scored five points (two goals, three assists) in the last Gorilla win over St. John's and now needs only two points to reach the 75–point plateau for his career.

The Garden City, N.Y., native has scored a goal or assist in 18 of his last 19 games. Ironically, the only team he did not score against was ... Hofstra, in a tournament game last year. Once again, there's no fooling here.

Other standouts include Gorilla juniors Mike Valente and goaltender Tom LoPresti. Valente, an All–America candidate, extended his scoring streak to 17 games with a goal vs. St. John's. LoPresti, who also had an outstanding game vs. St. John's on Saturday, recording 18 saves and only seven goals, has 32 saves and a 13.5 goals–against average heading into today's game.

MATT KAHN/ COLLEGIAN

Last season, Syracuse beat the Minutemen at Garber Field. The Orangemen went on to win the national championship.

The Gorilla offense will have to contend with senior goalkeeper Joe Romeo, who has made 57 saves while allowing just 19 goals for a 5.51 goals against average.

The 'Cuse–Brown game will pit No. 4 against No. 14, Brown in the second of two first round games. The Orangemen, the defending NCAA national champions, are coming off a 17–16 come–from–behind overtime win over No. 7 Towson State. Syracuse returns two 1993 First Team All–Americans, midfielders Rob Colsey and Dom Fin, and a Second Teamer in Charlie Lockwood.

Brown (1–3), who is playing at home for the tournament, has lost to three Top 10 ranked teams in Duke (12–11), Hofstra (10–9) and Loyola (12–9). Brown is led by sophomore David Evans, the 1993 Ivy League Rookie of the Year who has scored 11 goals and handed out six assists this season, and senior All–American goalkeeper Jay Stalfort, who has made 58 saves (.604) while allowing 38 goals.

Women's tennis set for optimistic second season

By BILL BALFOUR
Collegian Staff

After a week of training in sunny Florida, the University of Massachusetts women's tennis team has come north to begin its season.

As the season is about to unfold, Coach Judy Dixon said she is optimistic.

"I expect that we will have a winning season," Dixon said. "I'm expecting that we will win 60 percent of our dual matches."

This is only the second spring season for the Minutewomen since being reinstated last year and the rebuilding process has gone smoothly.

"The team itself has improved tremendously. Mostly in fundamentals and strategy," Dixon said.

Dixon said she originally estimated that it would take three or four years to become a top program in New England but now that timetable has changed.

"We're growing at a faster rate then I thought," Dixon said. "I now believe it's going to be two years."

Dixon said the improvement in the team's play can be traced back to fundamentals.

"We're getting better because we're paying more attention to fundamentals," Dixon said.

This season, the Minutewomen will be led by Liesl Sitton, UMass' No. 1 singles player. In two years, Sitton has lost only two matches and has reached the singles final of the New England Championships.

"She has the ability and the talent to be one of the top Eastern players in the NCAA's by her senior year," Dixon said.

Another key player for the Minutewomen will be Sonnybelle Martinez. Martinez, a walk–on, will compete as the No. 3 singles player. Dixon said Martinez can win in the three spot and will help solidify the middle of the team.

UMass' weakness lies in doubles. Many of the UMass players weren't accustomed to playing doubles when they arrived at UMass and they've had to make an adjustment.

"We've improved tremendously from the fall in that we now know proper doubles strategy," Dixon said.

This afternoon, the Minutewomen head to Vermont to take on the University of Vermont, Colgate, and New Hampshire. Dixon believes her team has the opportunity to win two of the three matches.

"If they come out of this weekend winning two out of three, I will be really pleased," Dixon said. "It will really set us in good standing for the spring."

No break for Easter

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — While thousands jammed Sarajevo cathedral on the city's first peaceful Easter Sunday in two years, fighting continued along Serb-Muslim front lines in other parts of Bosnia.

Bosnian Serb leader Radovan Karadzic ordered an investigation into events in Prijedor in northern Bosnia, where 20 Muslims and Croats were reported killed in ethnic terror.

Earlier some Bosnian Serb officials denied the killings and denounced the U.N. relief agency reporting them as biased. But the Bosnian Serbs' self-declared interior ministry later confirmed that 16 people were killed between March 29 and April 1, and said it was a "criminal act by so far unidentified perpetrators."

Perry speaks on Korea

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States is willing to risk provoking war to stop North Korea's program to develop nuclear weapons, but "we're not on the brink of crisis," Defense Secretary William Perry said Sunday.

"We do not want and will not provoke a war over this or any other issue in Korea," Perry said Sunday on NBC's "Meet the Press." "But we will take a very firm stand and strong actions. It's conceivable where those actions might provoke the North Koreans into unleashing a war, and that is a risk that we're taking."

Perry said the CIA believes that North Korea already has as many as two nuclear bombs and is continuing to develop atomic weapons. "I know they're lying when they say they're not developing a nuclear program," Perry said. "I do not know they're lying in saying ... they could very well conceive that having a nuclear-free peninsula would be to their advantage."

Easter protest for Clinton

WASHINGTON (AP) — An AIDS protester shouting from the balcony disrupted the Easter Sunday church service attended by President Clinton, his wife and daughter.

Two Secret Service agents sitting in a pew directly behind the Clintons jumped to their feet and shielded the couple after a man shouted from the church balcony, "Save your prayers for Bill Clinton."

The disruption occurred about midway through the service at the Foundry United Methodist Church, just after a reading and while the congregation was silent.

The protester, who the Secret Service identified as Luke Sissyfag, also shouted, "Where's the Manhattan Project ... for AIDS?" referring to Clinton's campaign promise to mount a federal AIDS program of that magnitude.

Locals to vote in S. Africa elections

BOSTON (AP) — Stephen Hendricks, at the age of 39, is finally getting a chance to vote as a South African.

He is one of thousands of South Africans in the United States who can join their countrymen in the first all-race elections April 26.

"All the generations that have gone before could never go forward in a meaningful way," said Hendricks, who is black. "I realize what so many of my forefathers were fighting for." The South African government is working with the Federal Election Commission and state governments to set up polling booths in the United States.

Five are slated for New York City, and three each for Chicago, Los Angeles and San Diego. There will be two booths in San Diego, and single polling stations in Boston, Houston, Dallas, Philadelphia, Raleigh, Atlanta, Miami, Phoenix and Washington D.C. "This is the first time anyone has asked us to set up polling places like this," said Jack McCarthy, spokesman for the Massachusetts secretary of state's office.

False alarms waste money

By GERI SAHN
Collegian Staff

It is Friday night, 1:30 a.m., the fire alarm sounds off in the dormitory. At 2:45 p.m., another alarm is pulled. Those two fire alarms just cost the University more than $1,000.

In the fiscal year of 1991, 118 false fire alarms were pulled on campus. The number increased in fiscal year 1992: there were 149 purposely pulled fire alarms.

DAYMION SMITH / COLLEGIAN

Plastic covers have been installed over some residential fire alarms in an attempt to cut down on prank alarms.

In response to this escalated amount, the Environmental Health and Safety put in stoppers into the highrises in Southwest Residential Area. These buildings were where most of the false alarms were being pulled.

The stoppers are plastic covers which bubble over the fire alarms. They have to be broken in order to get to the alarm.

Keith Hoyle, manager of fire safety services at EHS, said the stoppers have deterred people from pulling the fire alarms. in fiscal year 1993, only 97 false alarms were pulled.

Hoyle said the stoppers have helped save the University a great deal of money. Each stopper cost $60. Every time an alarm is pulled, and the fire truck comes on campus, the University pays the Amherst Fire Department $500.

"Not only do we have to pay the Amherst Fire Department, but we have to pay everyone else involved, such as the police, Physical Plant...It costs a lot of money. The stoppers save us from that," Hoyle said.

EHS has also put a dye on some pull stations of the fire alarms. This dye covers the person's hands and body if they pull the alarm. This will help Housing Services identify the person who pulled it.

Another major problem with false fire alarms is getting the students to leave the building when alarms are pulled. Hoyle said the alarms go off so frequently, people don't want to leave the building.

"A big problem is the attitude of the students. If the alarms are not pulled frequently, they tend to have a positive attitude in leaving the building immediately. Otherwise, they said, 'another fire alarm,'" he said.

Hoyle said 95 to 100 percent of the students in a building where alarms are rarely pulled will leave immediately. Otherwise, in buildings where it is a constant occurrence, only 50 percent of the students leave.

This semester, many false alarms have been pulled in Southwest lowrises as well, especially Pierpont Residence Hall. Over spring break, EHS put stoppers in the building and other lowrises.

So far, only about 35 false fire alarms have been pulled this fiscal year. Hoyle said the amount of alarms being pulled has been cut in half. He also said there have only been five small actual fires in the dormitories this year. These fires were caused by things such as cigarettes burning the furniture.

The fire department, in most cases, searches the rooms of the floor where the alarm is pulled. Other times they will search every

James Cyr awaiting trial

Blood samples to show if defendant was present at scene

By CATHERINE B. PULLEY
Collegian Staff

James Cyr Jr., a former University of Massachusetts student, is still awaiting trial after tests from the crime lab failed to indicate new evidence in the murder of Tara Hartnett, a UMass student from South Boston.

Blood samples were sent to a federal crime lab in Colorado to be reviewed by experts, according to Hampshire County Assistant District Attorney, David Angier. Angier said that the tests of the samples will indicate whether Cyr was present at the time of the murder and that the case will be held in a motion of pre–trial conferences until the tests are finished.

According to Angier, the process could take approximately one month, but trial could be delayed because of other cases that are behind schedule in Franklin County. Angier declined further comment on the case.

Cyr, Hartnett's ex–boyfriend, was arrested the night of the murder, at Cooley Dickinson Hospital where he was seeking treatment for cuts on his hands. Cyr pleaded not guilty to charges of murder, arson, violation of a restraining order, and assault and battery by means of a deadly weapon. Cyr faces life imprisonment if convicted. The case will be presented to the grand jury of Franklin County.

Hartnett was found in the burned ruins of her Sunderland home on the late evening of March 20, 1993. She suffered multiple stab wounds, but died of smoke inhalation.

At the time of the murder, Hartnett and Cyr were in a dispute over their daughter Meghan. One week before the murder, Cyr appeared in court to face assault and battery charges, and both Hartnett and Cyr had restraining orders against each other.

Cyr's attorney could not be reached for comment.

A memorial was held on March 31 by Hartnett's close family and friends in the Campus Center. The Everywoman's Center/ Advocate Program also held events centering around Hartnett's memory by sponsoring tables in the campus center that provided information on relationship violence and self–defense training.

Historic elections discussed

Panel focuses on inclusive elections in South Africa

By SONIA PAZ
Collegian Staff

On Thursday night, in the New Africa House, the South African Azanian Student Movement and the American Friends Service Committee of Western Massachusetts sponsored a panel of speakers. The subject for the evening was this month's free elections in South Africa.

The speakers, Mzamo Mangaliso, Zengi Mangaliso and Rickson Mboweni focused on the overall mood in South Africa, the transition process and the rebuilding process. Presently, the mood in South Africa is one of great tension. The possibility of violence is imminent in the minds of all South Africans.

In April 1993, the Freedom Alliance, a coalition of Black and White conservative interests, left the negotiating table. They have not been participating in the writing of the interim constitution.

The Freedom Alliance has the capacity to start violence in the already hard hit area of Natal. One of the consequences of continuing with the elections without the Freedom Alliance would no doubt end up in violence, thus leading up to the possible postponement of the elections.

President F.W. de Klerk, who said that if violence rises to an "unacceptable" level, will reschedule the elections.

The threat of violence will either come to pass or become a reality on April 26–28, the dates set for South Africa's free elections. The officials elected will be in power for five years.

Along with these officials, there will also be a 400–seat constituent assembly that will act as a parliament while drafting a final constitution.

As far as predictions go, due to the threat of violence, it is still anyone's guess as to who will win these elections.

> "[The ANC's] advantage is that its campaign is directly aimed towards the African population in South Africa. On the other hand, the Nationalist Party in their campaign states that they should be elected due to the fact that they have experience running the country."
> — Zengi Mangaliso

According to a recent poll, 38 percent of South Africans, who are eligible to vote, will not vote if their security is threatened.

"The biggest challenge to the ANC," stated Zengi Mangaliso, "is to broaden its base campaign. Their advantage is that its campaign is directly aimed towards the African population in South Africa. On the other hand, the Nationalist Party in their campaign states that they should be elected due to the fact that they have experience running the country.

"The Nationalist Party will not win unless they are very aggressive for Black votes," stated Mangaliso. "Promising jobs and education for the historically disadvantaged will get them support, but it will be a small amount. Blacks are skeptical of the Nationalist Party."

There is a huge amount of work that needs to be done. Besides the need for a new constitution, there is also the need for a new economic plan, and a new educational system. Also, there is the issue of the redistribution of land. Regardless of who wins or who loses, the fact remains that in order to rebuild South Africa, help from overseas will be needed. "You who stood with us when we fought," stated Rickson Mboweni, "are asking you to stay until the battle is done."

Bank lets students freeze assets

By TRACY MONAHAN
Collegian Staff

Having a Baybank card really makes college students go– getters this summer.

In order to better meet the needs of out–of–state and other University of Massachusetts students, BayBank has instituted a new "Summer Exempt" program.

This program will take away the worry of keeping checking or savings accounts open during the summer months.

Students who are not using their accounts this summer can put them "on hold" free of service charges. This process is accomplished simply by calling the BayBank 24–Hour Sales and Service Center or by stopping in at their local branch office.

According to a press release, BayBank has instituted this program to help students save both time and money. The bank will waive all service charges on any accounts placed on hold.

When students return to classes in the fall, their accounts will automatically reactivate the first time they use their automatic teller machine cards or make any other type of transaction.

Students with BayBank Student Value Packages and those with any other account are eligible for the program.

UMass students can hold their accounts by calling the sales and service number at 788–5000 (from any Massachusetts area code) or completing and returning a request form before leaving campus. The forms are available at any X–Press 24 ATM locations and at any branch office.

There is no specified cutoff date for eligibility in the "Summer Exempt" program.

Candidate wants cohesive Amherst

Hill Boss is a candidate for an open seat on the Amherst Select Board. Elections will be held this Tuesday.

By JUSTIN DOYLE
Collegian Staff

Strength in experience. Hill Boss feels his work in the town of Amherst has well suited him for the open position on the Amherst Select Board.

Boss is one of four candidates running in the April 5 elections for selectman. He ran last February for a seat on the select board, losing in a close race. Boss wants to work toward improving Amherst.

"I'm running for the Select Board because I believe in Amherst," Boss said. "Our community will continue to thrive if we work together for the good of the common good."

Boss has been active in the community since moving here from New York in 1984. He is member of the Amherst Town Meeting and he regularly attends Select Board meetings.

Boss chaired the Recall Task Force and is currently a member of the Amherst Economic Development Coordinating Committee. For the past 5 years, Boss has organized and coordinated the Shelter Sunday drive which raises money for the hungry and homeless.

One of Boss' concerns is the way the University of Massachusetts affects the town of Amherst. Boss feels that the town of Amherst is losing tax money because of services it provides the University.

"I don't expect the University to take money out of their operating expenses and pay the town for services which the town provides for free," Boss said. "The money should be coming from the state."

Boss uses off–campus housing as an example.

"The inability of the University to provide adequate housing for its own students creates a tremendous burden on the town," said Boss. "Because when the public safety people have to deal with a problem it's not the university police who go down."

Boss also feels that the Select Board needs to examine its fiscal priorities to the town.

"You've got to create priorities," Boss said. "You can't pay for every need."

room of the dormitory.

If a person does not leave the building when there is an alarm, they will not be fined. Housing will take down the student's name and give it to the Housing Judicial System for further action.

"In most cases, the person will be let go. Unless they are written up frequently. But students are not given a '$500' fine. Housing will usually make them do community service or sponsor a fire safety talk in their building," Hoyle said.

If a person gets caught pulling the alarm, it is considered a crime. In 1989, the amendment chapter 268, Sect. 32 of the general law in Massachusetts states if someone pulls an alarm they are "subject to immediate arrest."

The person is fined no less than $500 and no more than $1,000. They also can be put in prison for up to two years. In some cases, a person can be fined and imprisoned.

Housing has an award system if someone identifies a person pulling the alarm. If they go to court as an unidentified witness, they receive a $500 award.

False hopes of peace made by cease-fire

By EDITH M. LEDERER
Associated Press

LONDON — Sinn Fein, the IRA's political ally, urged Britain on Sunday to take advantage of a three-day IRA cease-fire to clarify the British-Irish initiative to bring peace to Northern ireland.

But Britain and the Republic of ireland repeated their stance that no talks will be held until the Irish Republican Army promises to stop killing for good.

"Sinn Fein should stop playing with people's emotions and deliver the end to violence that the people of Northern ireland long for," British Prime Minister John Major said in a statement. Dick Spring, ireland's deputy prime minister, dismissed the cease-fire as a token gesture. He said he saw no prospect of a meeting between the British government and Sinn Fein, the legal party that supports the outlawed IRA.

Sinn Fein leaders used a series of rallies across ireland on Sunday to press their demand for talks with Britain. The rallies commemorated the 1916 Easter uprising against British rule in ireland.

Cardinal Cahal Daly, the Roman Catholic primate of all ireland, said in his Easter sermon that the cease-fire was a sign of the IL.A's desire "to move from 'armed struggle' into peaceful political activity." He also urged the IRA to extend the truce, which is to start midnight Tuesday.

The IRA, rooted in the Roman Catholic minority in Northern ireland, has waged a violent campaign to end more than 20 years of British rule in the province. It declared its three-day cease-fire last week.

A Dec. 15 declaration offered Sinn Fein a place in talks on Northern ireland's future once the IRA has permanently ceased its violent campaign. But the IRA has been holding out for "clarification" from London.

"The declaration doesn't say it is a settlement, doesn't say it is a solution, merely says it is a first step, so it is logical to ask what is the second step, the third step or the fourth step," Sinn Fein president Gerry Adams said.

American activist held in Cambodia

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Khmer Rouge guerrilias were holding a young American woman and several Cambodians for ransom Sunday along Cambodia's southern coast, a U.S. Embassy spokesman in Phnom Penh said.

The spokesman, who asked not to be named, said Melissa Heinz and probably three Cambodians were being held in the Kampot area, and the Khmer Rouge was asking for wells to be dug for the group before it would release the hostages.

"We are following this very closely and trying with the Cambodian government to effect a release," said the spokesman, who was contacted by telephone from Bangkok. He said the hostages had not been heard of since last Thursday.

Ms. Heinz was working for Food for the Hungry International, a private organization active in Cambodia and based in Thailand's capital of Bangkok, the spokesman said.

The spokesman said he had no further details of the incident and did not give her hometown.

Other unconfirmed reports said she and Cambodian staffers of the organization were seized after they traveled to Kampot, 75 miles southwest of Phnom Penh, to negotiate the release of a Food for the Hungry vehicle allegedly stolen by the Khmer Rouge.

Numerous vehicles have been stolen from international agencies operating in Cambodia, but bandits and renegade government policemen rather than the Khmer Rouge have usually been blamed. Although wells are scarce and badly needed in the countryside, kidnappers in Cambodia normally have asked for money rather than assistance of this kind.

Khmer Rouge guerrilias continued to operate in remoter areas of Cambodia, including Kampot, despite major battlefield losses and defections.

PRINCIPLES of SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING

UNFORTUNATELY, THIS IS WHERE PEOPLE ARE PUTTING TOO MANY RETIREMENT DOLLARS.

Every year, a lot of people make a huge mistake on their taxes. They don't take advantage of tax deferral and wind up sending Uncle Sam money they could be saving for retirement.

Fortunately, that's a mistake you can easily avoid with TIAA-CREF SRAs. SRAs not only ease your current tax-bite, they offer a remarkably easy way to build retirement income—especially for the "extras" that your regular pension and Social Security benefits may not cover. Because your contributions are made in before-tax dollars, you pay less taxes now. And since all earnings on your SRA are tax-deferred as well, the money you don't send to Washington works even harder for you. Down the road, that can make a dramatic difference in your quality of life.

What else makes SRAs so special? A range of allocation choices—from the guaranteed security of TIAA to the diversified investment accounts of CREF's variable annuity—all backed by the nation's number one retirement system.

Why write off the chance for a more rewarding retirement? Call today and learn more about how TIAA-CREF SRAs can help you enjoy many happy returns.

Benefit now from tax deferral. Call our SRA hotline 1 800-842-2733, ext. 8016.

Health care woes continue

This week, a crash course in American politics.

During the 1992 Democratic primary season, each of the candidates performed expensive surveys to find out which issues were of the greatest concern to the public, and health care came out on top. For the next few months, they bickered amongst themselves about which of them would be he who would heal the sick, and when one of them became president, he made a big show of appointing a "blue-ribbon panel" to completely restructure health care.

Unfeeling insurers, doctors, and politicians might as well just drive BMWs that run on blood. People are becoming sick and dying so the health industry can turn a profit.

Peter J. Orvetti

Finally, and several months late, the committee finished its job, and the President stood high above an assembly of government officials in the House chamber, with that awesome American flag behind him, waved a pen in the air and vowed to veto any health plan passed by the Congress that did not include universal health coverage.

That vow lasted one day; then he began compromising. Now, even the watered-down, inadequate Clinton health plan will most likely fail, and something called the "Cooper plan" — read as: "more of the same" — will be enacted.

That's American government in a nutshell. Spend nearly three years debating an issue, spend millions on that debate and do absolutely nothing.

What is unfortunate is that Clinton did not need to compromise. The best of the health plans was never even seriously considered, even though it makes the most sense.

The Wellstone Bill would create a health care system in which everyone would receive care, the government would save money and we would still be able to choose our own doctors using a simple health care card.

Under the current system, 37 million Americans have no health care coverage, and 60 million Americans have coverage so poor that they cannot get prescription drugs. Individuals in one out of four families have been unable to leave their jobs for better ones because doing so would put their health plans in jeopardy.

Under the Wellstone single-payer plan, the government would allot health care resources to impoverished and rural areas in addition to well-financed hospitals. The resources already exist to provide health care to all, but they are not being properly distributed. With health as a profit enterprise, hospitals are being forced to perform complicated and unnecessary procedures simply to survive.

For example, even though the American College of Surgeons had issued guidelines stating that a hospital should only provide coronary bypass surgery if they were able to undertake a minimum of 150 such procedures each year, 37 out of 103 California hospitals performed less than 150 bypasses in 1986, rather than send the patients to more qualified hospitals. As a result, some of these hospitals had 10 percent mortality rates — twice the national average. Why, then, did they do this surgery? To make more money.

Under Wellstone, "centers of excellence" would be created where patients with serious problems could receive the very best — not to mention the most efficient — care that is available. Costs would go down, and so would mortality rates.

So much money is wasted on promoting the current incompetent, for-profit health industry that the Rand Corporation has estimated that 20 to 30 percent of procedures performed on Americans are unnecessary. Beyond this, in order to compete, hospitals actually buy more equipment than they need in order to pass inflated costs along to the ill.

Twenty–four cents of every health care dollar is spent on bureacracy in this country. Under Canada's single-payer system, only 11 cents per dollar is spent on paperwork. The United States General Accounting Office reports that the United States would save $67 billion per year if it adopted single–payer.

So it would save money, provide better care and reach everyone. Then why not do it? Because of plain old American–style greed. Unfeeling insurers, doctors and politicians might as well just drive BMWs that run on blood. People are becoming sick and dying so the health industry can turn a profit.

In Canada, the number one problem reported with single– payer is not low–quality care or high taxes. It is the number of poor Americans who enter Canadian health facilities and try to pass themselves off as Canadian citizens.

That ought to tell us something.

Easter offers time to reflect

This past weekend, Christians everywhere were rejoicing, reflecting and reminiscing in celebration of Easter Sunday. Actually, any faithful Christian would tell you that everyday should be a day of rejoicing, reflecting and reminiscing. If you really think about it, these are pretty strong words! What do people think when they hear such a bold statement?

Consider this: some Christians are not allowed to party, to dance, to evoke promiscuity and... are you ready?... have sex. Agh! No sex before marriage? How mad is God going to be? Do Christians live a life of restriction and boredom? If you've ever seen the show, The Simpsons, you've probably seen Homer's neighbors, the Flanders family. Well, not all Christians are like the Flanders.

David Chan

Probably the most common misconception about Christians is that they have no freedom to do anything. Jesus Christ is in control and, heck, who wants to be controlled? In this day and age, no one wants to be controlled.

But are these people of God really controlled? Many people in the world have some sort of god that they worship, serve or pay homage to. The god could be a celestial figure, superstition or even an earthly and physical thing. "It" could be sex, drugs, money, rock 'n' roll, Barney, horoscopes, tarot cards, idols, etc.

For example, there are some people that desire and strive for material wealth — this is their ultimate goal. To achieve this goal, they work day and night, and practically become a slave to their work. They choose to make lots of money, and they become enslaved to their work. There are also some people that choose to drink excessive amounts of alcohol or even take excessive amounts of drugs. Some become addicted and require help. Think about it...how free are these people?

Somewhere along the line, people have heard about the Bible's "do's and don'ts." What else is there left to do besides pray, go to church and then pray some more? It seems as though only the lifeless become Christians. It is true that God lays out some guidelines, but when He does this, He is like a loving parent. Parents give their children rules and guidelines for their children's own good.

Sometimes children do not understand why their parents make such demands. God has His reasons for what He does. We don't understand sometimes because we're like little children. Rules often don't make sense until after one is forced to face the consequences of having broken them.

Now, does Christianity really restrict personal freedom? Well, consider this: even after you choose to believe in God, you still have the freedom to choose whether or not to listen to God. There are tons of choices to make in life, and with each choice we have the option to do it God's way or our own way. If God controlled everybody's choices, we'd all believe in God and we'd all live in peace and harmony in Heaven. But we're not controlled and we're not perfect, and this goes for Christians as well. Christians are people who have a certain faith in God and Christ. Some have more faith than others, and this strong faith becomes the influence of a Christian's choices.

Every Christian is an individual. True, some may be boring, but there are boring non–Christians too. We all have our own conceptions on what is boring anyway. Some may find The Phantom of the Opera (which I got tickets for!), classical music, CNN, bookstores, baseball, tennis or even Lionel Richie to be boring. Well I must confess — I don't.

Take a look around you. Take a look at the people in your classes and at those that you hang around with. Some of them may be Christians. They're individuals and they encounter basically the same choices as everyone else. They have control of what they choose to do.

On one hand, money, drugs, alcohol and gambling are just some of the few things that can take control of one's life. It, and whatever "it" may be, takes control and ultimately destroys. But on the other hand, Christians choose to let God take control of their lives because Jesus Christ is the only one who can control without destroying.

Opinion

The outlook on opening day

Today is baseball's opening day. Fortunately for me, I'll be at Fenway Park to see the Red Sox and the Detroit Tigers. Roger Clemens will be on the mound for the Olde Towne Team and someone with more speed than my baby brother will be playing centerfield. Baseball seems to be a sport where everyone claims to know how to run a team. I am no exception. Here is my insight on the '94 Boston Red Sox.

A.J. Stewart

These are heady days if you're a Sox fan. With the acquisition of outfielders Otis Nixon and Lee Tinsley, along with catcher Dave Valle, the lineup is considerably strong offensively. This to complement a staff that includes a healthy Clemens and Viola. The staff also has one of the best young pitchers in baseball in Aaron Sele, and last season's ace, Danny Darwin. Dr. Death looks as good as ever, despite his age. Only Joe Hesketh remains to give Butch Hobson headaches. No one pulled harder for Nate Minchey to develop than Hobson.

The bullpen is first–rate, with Russell, Ken Ryan, Paul Quantrill, Greg Harris and forgotten man Scott Bankhead all being the object of the rest of the league's affections in the trade department. Don't be surprised to see new general manager Dan Duquette peddle Bankhead or Ryan after seeing Hesketh face Cecil Fielder and Frank Thomas a few times.

The order should go something like this: Otis Nixon will lead off, giving pitchers all kinds of worries. A true threat, Nixon will give meaning to the phrase 'bunt single.' Batting in the two hole is either Scott Fletcher or Tim Naehring. Naehring has fared well since coming back form injury late last year. He seems to be the Sox' second baseman of the future. He needs to get some experience playing it on the major league level, though.

It is awfully tough to keep 35–year–old journeyman Scott Fletcher on the bench, however. He is one of the smartest, most enthusiastic players on the team. The entire team seems to play more excited when he's in the game. Plus, he's proven himself to be a patient hitter, exactly what you need in a two–hitter. Look for Hobson to go with Naehring, who has a history of being injury–prone.

If he and Fletcher both stay healthy and are playing well, Naehring will get some time at short. Hobson will be quick to yank Valentin if he continues to play defense like a Mambo King.

Batting third will be (sigh) Mike Greenwell. Personally, I'd rather have Ron Gant on crutches. But that's not my decision. He's got the fat contract, and he'll keep believing he is a suitable successor to Ted Williams, Carl Yastrzemski and Jim Rice in left field. Greenwell couldn't be those players' waterboy.

Cleanup goes to Mo Vaughn, who is absolutely destroying the ball this spring. He leads the majors in home runs, and there isn't any reason he can't continue to do so. This is the year Vaughn becomes an All–Star. Andre Dawson will bat fifth as the DH. Not playing in the field should rest his knees and, by all accounts, his bat speed is still there. I hope the Hawk finishes out his career with a bang.

Batting sixth will be either Tinsley or Billy Hatcher, who many consider to be one of last season's team MVPs. Hatcher is the better hitter, but Tinsley can flat out fly. He had 18 triples last year in triple–A. All I ask is that Bob Zupcic never see the light of day. Now Zupcic, he could be Greenwell's waterboy.

Seven will be Scott Cooper, who has a rocket for an arm. Last year's only All–Star, he is solid at the hot corner.

Eight will be John Valentin who is proving that he can hit that ball with power. The defense needs improvement, and he has supposedly been working on it. We'll see. Batting ninth is Dave Valle, who can't possibly be worse than Tony (Mendoza line) Pena. Tony was a great catcher, but 6–4–3 is not a lucky number for a hitter.

The team figures to finish better than last year and, with the expanded playoffs, they could qualify for the postseason. Like most fans, I'm optimistic about the team's chances. Every year I keep thinking they'll be 162–0. This year, all I ask is that they're undefeated after today's opener. I'll see you at Fenway.

Letters to the Editor

Women need more than hard work

To the editor:

I find it an illustrative coincidence that Tracy Monahan's column on feminism ["A different kind of feminism," Collegian, March 31] was printed on the same day that UMass held a memorial in remembrance of Tara Hartnett, murdered one year ago in her Sunderland home. in remembering Tara Hartnett and other victims of male violence, I am concerned that Monahan's column dangerously misconstrues the ability of women to overcome sexual oppression through individual hard work.

Like many other women at UMass, I'm sure Tara was working extremely hard as an individual woman, both in her studies and in her role as a single mother. However, neither individual hard work nor a restraining order kept Tara from being a victim of a crime that daily strikes thousands of women from all over the country — violence against women.

Feminism is not an excuse for women to avoid hard, individual work while throwing around complex, political terminology. Rather, feminism strives to provide an environment of support, love and respect for women where a collectively powerful attempt can be made to combat sexual oppression of any kind, especially the type displayed in Tara's murder.

Feminism fights against what Monahan perceives as unfortunate but surmountable aspects of a woman's life — sexual harassment, glass ceilings and unequal pay scales — simply because they are symptoms of the larger problem which threatens women's existence and physical well–being — disrespect and even outright hatred of women. Tolerating, laughing–off or accepting discriminatory treatment as an unfortunate part of a woman's life incriminates us in accepting a part of this larger picture of intolerable hate.

I sincerely hope that, in the process of avoiding being associated with the misunderstood concept of feminism, women do not assume that only scattered individual hard work will reform a legal and governmental system which not only allows sexual discrimination to continue, but also grossly ignores the needs of scared, battered or threatened women. Only in collective, powerful and supportive networks can women educate, empower and protect one another while finding a voice loud enough to be heard.

Outgoing speaker praised by colleague

To the editor:

As Matt Pavesi's term as undergraduate student speaker comes to an end, as well as his undergraduate career at UMass, I would like to acknowledge a job very well done. Throughout his years at UMass, Matt has been an extraordinary student leader. He has contributed to making a once disfunctional student government into a body that works to help serve the needs of students.

As a young student senator, Matt displayed energy, enthusiasm and potentiai. Through his hard work and dedication, he gained the leadership position as chair of the public policy committee where he arranged voter registration drives for UMass students and helped promote student involvement in Amherst community service.

Due to his many accomplishments within the Student Government Association as well as his great ability to lead, Matt was elected the speaker of the student senate last spring. In this position he continued to devote his time to the students of UMass by taking a stand and helping tackle issues such as restoring partial litigatoin rights to the Legal Services Center, and the continuous fight against tuition and fee nikes.

Matt Pavesi's work, though, does not just take place on this campus — he has also been very active in the politics of the town of Amherst on a variety of issues that affect students. As a member of Town Meeting, Matt has fought for a polling place on campus and fought against town by– laws which discriminate against students.

I feel that Matt Pavesi has been an excellent example of what student leadership is all about, and i am positive he will continue to display his dedication and ability in whatever his future may hold. I would not only like to give praise to Matt Pavesi for being an incredible asset to the SGA, but also commend him for his ability to make a serious student government into a welcoming place through his warmth and friendship.

Holocaust Memorial Week

Hillel plans commemorative events

By LISA GREENFIELD
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Hillel House, in cooperation with the University and other campus groups will present programs, speakers and films in remembrance of the Holocaust from April 4 until April 8 and a special presentation by Holocaust survivor Solomon Perel the following week.

Art Spiegelman, 1992 Pulitzer Prize–winning author of MAUS: My Father Bleeds History and MAUS 2: And Here My Troubles Began, will begin Holocaust Memorial Week on April 4, at 8 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium.

Earlier in the day, Spiegelman will hold a book– signing on the Campus Center Concourse.

The Maus books, described as a combination novel/ documentary/memoir/comic book, chronicles the lives of Holocaust survivor, Vladek Spiegelman, and his cartoonist son, Art Spiegelman. The books have won several awards, including the Guggenheim Fellowship and nominations for the National Book Cntics Circle Award.

Spiegelman is the co–founder and editor of an avant–garde comic and graphics magazine, Raw, and has published articles in the New York Times, Playboy and the Village Voice.

The event is sponsored by the UMass Distinguished Visitors Program.

On Tuesday, April 5, at 7:30 p.m. in 301 Herter Hall, the German Department will sponsor the German post–war film by Kurt Maetzig, Marriage in the Shadows.

The film documents the true story of married, prominent actors, Meta and Guaiacum Gottschalk, who decided to stay in Nazi Germany despite the risk to Guaiacum, a Jewish woman.

Wednesday, April 6, in the downstairs lounge of the Hillel House, at 8 p.m., the Golden Globe Award–winning and Oscar–nominated movie Europa, Europa will be shown. Europa, Europa is based on Holocaust survivor Solomon Perel's story of passing himself off as an Aryan entering into the Hitler Youth. The film is being shown in preparation for Perel's April 19 visit.

In a recent Washington Post article, Perel said, "To this day, I have a tangle of two souls in one body...By this I mean to say that the road to Josef, the Hitler Youth that I was for four years, was very short and easy. But the way back to the Jew in me, Sholmo, or Solly, was much harder. And it still is not finished."

Holocaust survivors Sam and Sidi Natansohn will speak about their experiences on Thursday April 7, at 7:30 p.m. in the Campus Center 165–169.

Solomon Perel "breaks the silence."

The Natansohns say they speak because they feel that since they were witnesses to the Holocaust, they must challenge revisionists, honor those who did not survive, and most of all, make a difference.

Throughout the week, UMass students Robyn Novick and Lisa Rubin will display photographs of Concentration Camps that they took while in Poland. The exhibit, "Images of the Holocaust" will be from April 4 p.m. to 8 p.m. at the Hillel House, with a reception Wednesday, April 6.

The week will conclude with a non–religious commemoration service on Friday, April 7, at 12:30 p.m. in the Cape Cod Lounge. Also on April 7, at 7 p.m. in the Hillel House, there will be a commemorative Shabbat Service.

The following week, Tuesday, April 19, at 7:30 p.m. in Mahar Auditorium, Solomon Perel will give a special talk including a partial screening of Europa, Europa, followed by a question and answer period.

Perel says he was unable to speak about his unbelievable experiences for many years. After settling in Israel, he decided to share his story with the world by writing the novel that was turned into Europa, Europa.

ARAM COMEAU / COLLEGIAN

Art Spiegelman's graphic novels about his father's experiences during the Holocaust and the effects they had on him later in life can be signed by the author on the Campus Center Concourse this afternoon. Spiegelman will be speaking today at 8 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium.

• 1919 — Adolf Hitler joins the National Socialist German Workers' Party, also known as the Nazis.

• Nov. 9, 1923 — Hitler leads the Nazi party in a coup attempt against the German government. The attempt fails and Hitler is sentenced to five years in prison.

While in prison, he begins work on his book, Mein Kampf (My Struggle). The book outlines his plans for the future of Germany, including taking territory from Austria, Czechoslovakia, Poland and the USSR. He also writes that Germans are a superior from of humanity, and that they must stay "pure." In the book, Hitler also blames the Jews for the problems in the world.

• Dec., 1924 — Nine months after his trial, Hitler is released from prison.

• July., 1932 — The Nazi party becomes the strongest party in the Reichstag. (German Parliament)

• Jan. 30, 1933 — Hitler is named Chancellor of Germany.

• 1935 — Jews are declared citizens of lesser rights. In the period from 1933 to 1938, approximately 330,000 Jews flee Germany. Many who remain are put in concentration camps or are forced to live in ghettoes.

•Nov. 9 – 10, 1938 — After a German embassy worker is killed by a Jew, riots occur in Germany and Austria. Kristallnacht, or the Night of Broken Glass, results in 30,000 Jews being sent to concentration camps, 7,500 Jewish homes and businesses destroyed, 267 Synagogues destroyed and 100 Jews murdered. The Jewish community is then fined one billion Reichmarks for the damages.

•1939 – 1942 — The first stage of the Holocaust begins. 900 Einsatzgrupen SS, special soldiers, follow behind the front lines of the German army. They go to conquered towns, round up all the Jews and take them into the surrounding area. They then force the Jews to dig holes for their own graves, strip, line up next to the holes and then shoot them.

•Jan 20, 1942 — A conference is held in Wannsee to discuss the "Final Solution." Seven Death Camps are set up for the purpose of eliminating all the Jews. The camps are set up in Buchenwald, Maidenek, Chelmo, Treblinka, Belzec, Sobibor and Auschwitz.

People at the camps are forced to do heavy labor, and many who aren't killed in the gas chambers die of starvation and sickness.

•1945 — The Allied countries defeat Germany in World War 2 and free the people in the camps.

In the Holocaust, a total of 6 million Jews were killed, including approximately one million children. The Nazis also killed five million Gypsies, Poles, Slavs, Jehovah's Witnesses, priests, Communists and mentally handicapped people.

Holocaust not well taught

Museum, Schindler's List promote knowledge

By HENRY BRIER
Collegian Staff

In a poll released April 19, 1993, 34 percent of adults and 37 percent of high school students surveyed in October and November of 1992 believed it "possible" that Nazi Germany's highly–destructive attempt to exterminate Jews never occurred. Sixty–five percent of adults and 72 percent of high school students could not identify six million as being the commonly accepted figure of murdered Jews.

"That's surprising," said Arjun Bijoor, a junior electrical engineering major at the University of Massachusetts. "It's in all the history books. The [Jewish] Holocaust is synonymous with what happened in World War II."

The poll was administered by the Roper Organization, which had been hired by the American Jewish Committee. The results were publicized three days before the dedication of the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum by President Clinton.

The museum was built to increase awareness among individuals who harbor similar thoughts as those who participated in the survey. Steven Spielberg's movie Schindler's List, which is about a German SS munitions worker who salvaged the life of 1,100 Jews held captive in concentration camps, was also an attempt to educate people on what actually occurred in Nazi Germany.

The museum and Schindler's List are also vital weapons used to combat ignorant and nihilistic sentiments from propagandists who downplay the severity of the annihilation of Jews. The central figure of Holocaust deniers is Bradley R. Smith, who has successfully placed revisionist advertisements is several college newspapers. Those colleges include Duke University, the University of Notre Dame, the University of Michigan and Brandeis University, among several others.

Smith believes that the gas chambers were not used to kill Jews, but instead to delouse German clothing of fleas, lice and other unwanted inhabitants.

"I don't take these people seriously," said Damaris Hernandez, a senior communications major. "I don't waste my time listening to them."

"Those Jews disappeared," said Bijoor. "There are mass graves. There's film footage of pants and shoes in mass heaps."

There are other revisionist historians, who hide their anti– Semitism by publicly claiming that 6 million is an overblown figure, and the missing Jews have simply infiltrated into Israeli streets. Yet there are records which document the mass destruction of millions of people.

"If I saw them [revisionists] speaking, I would not give them the impression that they are inspiring me," said Hernandez. "It shows that European history should be taught more in–depth in high school."

"Maybe on the walk to work, a guard grabbed his cap away. 'Go get your cap – quick!'

"So what could he do? He ran to pick it up. And the guard shot on him for trying to escape. The guard got a congratulations and a few days vacation for stopping the escape.

"I don't know if this was how it was with Mandelbaum – only that very often they did so."

Group denies existence of Jewish Holocaust

By JENNIFER L. PRESS
Collegian Staff

After the success of the Oscar–winning film, Schindler's List, there are few who would argue the validity of Nazi Germany's plan to wipe out the Jewish people and other "undesirable" groups in Eastern Europe during the Holocaust. The film's graphic portrayal of the dehumanization and murder of the victims of the Holocaust and one man's struggle to save the lives of 1,100 Jews destined to die in a Nazi concentration camp is just as frightening and real today as it was 50 years ago.

The Committee for Open Debate on the Holocaust (CODOH), however, believes that there is legitimate evidence that proves the Holocaust did not occur, but rather is a story fabricated by Jews to gain the sympathy of the world. Groups such as CODOH are called Holocaust Revisionists, and believe the Holocaust needs to be re– examined because it may have been a hoax.

In 1991, CODOH began circulating an article called "Falsus in Uno, Falsus in Omnibus . . .The 'Human Soap' Holocaust Myth." The article, sold as an advertisement to newspapers, claims reports that Nazis used the fat of murdered Jews to make bar soap are false. The article then says that since these reports are myths, the other accusations the Jews have made regarding the Holocaust, including the existence of the Holocaust itself, must also be untrue.

CODOH has targeted college newspapers in particular with this information, appealing to student concerns of free speech and censorship. According to CODOH director, Bradley R. Smith, not printing the article is a form of censorship and it denies students "the opportunity to make up their own minds" on an important historical event.

Some campus daily newspapers, including those at Cornell, Brandeis and the University of Michigan, made the decision to print the ad because of the principle of non– censorship and the "belief that hate material should be aired and publicly refuted."

Last week, the controversy reached the University of Massachusetts. Both the Collegian and The Minuteman, received the ad and chose not to run it because of the hurtful claims it makes.

Business manager Michael McRae said the Collegian would immediately "reject an ad like that."

Dan Flynn, editor in chief of The Minuteman, said that although his paper relies on advertising, "[Printing CODOH's advertisement is] not how we would like to get the money." He also stated "losing credibility" with other advertisers as a reason for rejecting the ad.

Flynn called CODOH's accusations "ridiculous" and said he was "a bit scared" when he received the advertisement.

The Graduate Student Senate's newspaper, The Voice, which has been accused of printing anti–Semitic statements in the past, did not receive the advertisement. Editor in Chief Hussein Ibish said he was aware that the advertisement existed but if his newspaper ever received the ad, it is "likely I wouldn't run it."

Rabbi Saul Perlmutter, of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst Hillel, said, "Denying that six million Jews died in the Holocaust is not only a preposterous lie, it is also incredibly hurtful to people who live with the reality of that terrible loss everyday."

The renewed controversy over CODOH's ad comes at a time when Jews around the world are commemorating Holocaust Memorial Week, which begins today. Here on campus, Hillel and a wide range of student groups and organizations are planning events to remember the six million Jews and other people killed in the Holocaust.

German prof mourns tragedy

Dear Editor,

I should have written this letter to you earlier. I'm, since last July, a German visiting scientist in your country. I have had made a copy of your article in the Collegian (Oct. 21, 1993 p.5). After seeing Schindler's List, I feel even more guilty about the fact that my grandparents' generation had murdered your grandparents' generation; murdered, not only killed, like in a war. More than 6,000,000 people which can't be turned back to life.

What have we done? Why were there no more Schindler's? I have had to cry but what does it help that this is a German original sin now for the present and the future. We can only ask you and the Jewish community If you can forgive us but not forget, and we can be lucky if you do so and give us a chance to accept other cultures in Germany.

But I will never forget what was done with your family and the Jewish community and it remains with me nearly daily looking on the behavior against minorities in the countries especially in Germany with such a history and sin in the past.

I hope sometime you will trust us more and that again more Jewish communities in Germany, so we have a chance to get to know each other more again.

I hope you can forgive "thirteen pages filled with your family's name" and even all the other names.

In memorium of more than 6,000,000 people,
Yours,
Paul–Michael Windschief

The Holocausts closer to home

By JUAN JOSE CHACON QUIROS
Collegian Staff

The Holocaust of European Jews in the 1940's stands out as the culmination of a long history of anti–Semitism in Christian Europe.

It is characterized by a large number of people being injustly and deliberately killed in a historically short period of tinie, merely because of their group identity.

While Americans tend to think of holocausts as unfortunate events that occurred long ago; the United States has In fact been involved in numerous holocausts. Indeed, the nation itself is founded on the twin holocausts of Native Americans and Africans.

The European colonizers wiped out the indigenous peoples of North America and the Caribbean. The peoples who first greeted Columbus with smiles and friendship were robbed of their highly sophisticated achievements and killed by Europe's first global empire.

Guatemala, the heartland of Mayan civilization, became, through a vampiric extraction of resources and lives, a poor and remote fiefdoom underwriting the pleasure of Madrid and London.

Wherever Native American labor was scarce, including the original 13 colonies, African slaves were brought, by the tens of millions, to give their blood, sweat and lives.

Cattle ownership of African people remains to this day one of the gravest and most long–lasting of these holocausts, and leaves scars on many nations, including the United States. The United States has ever since employed holocausts abroad, as well as those that define its existence at home.

Another example, Vietnam, means the deaths of over two million Vietnamese to South East Asians.

The Korean War similarly resulted in an Asian holocaust at the hands of the American military.

The Gulf War against Iraq, which claimed the lives of hundreds of thousands of Iraqis and resulted in the ongoing sanctions which continue to murder Iraqi children, remain the standard for mass murder in the post–Cold War era.

Across the hemisphere, the United States, having inherited the mantel of the Spanish Empire, has inflicted war and torture on most Latin American nations.

The war in El Salvador in the 1980's claimed the lives of thousands of lives and was largely driven by American Cold War hysteria. In Guatemala, by the 1980's, 250,000 indigenous people had paid with their lives, the "liberal democracy" of its great northern neighbor.

The United States' role in the second World War was hardly free of involvement in holocausts, a war that saw the German extermination of Jews, Gypsies, Communists and gays, as well as 20 million Russians.

The United States condemned countless thousands of Jews to the gas chambers by refusing to open the country to Jewish refugees in the 1930's and 1940's and refused to bomb the train tracks that lead to the death camps.

Furthermore, the American nuclear holocaust inflicted in Hiroshima and Nagasaki remain unparalleled in deployment of the technologies of holocaust, tens of thousands of civilians being incinerated in an instant.

As President Clinton warns North Korea of his willingness to use nuclear weapons to effect "the end of their country as they know it," Asians wonder if the United States contemplates further such holocausts.

The holocaust in Bangladesh committed by the armies of Pakistan in 1971–72 was firmly supported by Nixon– Kissinger, and the Khmer Rouge reign of terror in Cambodia received vital American covert and diplomatic support.

No such review can possibly be complete without a mention of the deepening plight of the Palestinian people. Driven from their lands, stateless in a region of turmoil, perennial victims, shot down daily, their plight reminds us of the lessons unlearned of holocausts ongoing. The attempt to obliterate the nation of Palestine speaks forth in the words of men such as Clinton and Rabin, who vow they shall never know the liberty of their self–determination.

Thus, we declare that "never again" must not only apply to Jews and Germans, but be adopted by all peoples, even those who feel it never applies to them.

The Jewish Affairs Desk mourns all who were murdered in the Shoah. We can only hope that they are remembered and that their loss helps create a world where "never again" will a similar atrocity occur.

All Holocaust Memorial Week events are free and open to the public. The UMass Hillel House is located at 388 North Pleasant St, Amherst. For more information call Hillel at 549–1710.

OPEN HEARINGS OF AD HOC COMMITTEE ON CONSENSUAL RELATIONSHIPS

Wednesday, April 6, 5pm
Room 805, Campus Center
Friday, April 8, 10am and 12noon
Room 911, Campus Center

Last November, Chancellor Scott appointed a committee on consensual relationships, which was asked to review "the issue of 'consensual relationships' between persons on campus who are also bound by academic or working relationships in which there is an uneven balance of power."

Since our appointment, the committee has reviewed policies at other universities and colleges. We have discussed at length some of the many issues which may arise as a result of such relationships and have explored possible institutional responses. We have been particularly concerned with the potential for sexual harassment in such relationships, with issues of conflict of interest and abuse of authority, with the effects on third parties, and with the overall impact of such relationships on the academic environment.

Before we proceed much further, we would like to provide an opportunity for others interested in this issue to express your views. We have therefore scheduled a series of open hearings, on Wednesday, April 6, at 5pm in Room 805 of the Campus Center, and on Friday, April 8, at 10am and 12noon In Room 911 of the Campus Center. If you would like to share your views about what University policy in this area should be, please come at one of those times and talk with us. If you would prefer to voice your opinions in private or in writing, please feel free to talk to, or send your comments to, any member of the committee.

Thank you for your help with this important and complex issue.

Caleb salutes viewer mail

On the Tube
By Caleb Cochran

As the writer of this column, I have the wonderful priviledge of accepting all of the mail addressed to the "TV Editor" of the Collegian. I'm the closest thing to a TV editor that the Collegian has, so I get some pretty interesting mail. Here are some samples.

The other week I received a huge press packet from Paramount television to promote the new USA Network animated show "Duckhead." Along with biographies of each of the actors who are involved with the show (Jason Alexander and Dweezil Zappa, among others), Paramount sent along photos of the major characters and summaries of the show's plots and color slides of the characters. I was really impressed.

Over the spring break, I was watching TV with my friend Jon. We were waiting for his parents to get home so we could stop watching his little brother and go to the bars when we came across "Duckhead." Jon and I were both very amused at the show, which was about Duckhead's infatuation with these animated women with enormous chests. However, I don't think the creators of "The Simpsons" have anything to worry about. Kudos on the cool press kit, though. You're all invited to the slide show.

Last week I got a nice big envelope from NBC which included some information about some programs which will be coming up this spring. Here's the rundown.

"Lives in Hazard," according to the press release, "is a hard-hitting real-life drama that takes viewers behind the lines of an inner city war zone to meet some of the young men and women trapped there. Narrated by Edward James Olmos." Gee, this sounds like a hoot. If I want to be depressed, look at my pictures in my high school yearbook, thanks. Seriously, though, this sounds like it could be OK.

"World War II: When Lions Roared." This two part mini- series stars John Lithgow, Bob Hoskins and Michael Caine. That's a pretty impressive lineup. This sounds a bit more serious than Harry and the Hendersons, Lithgow's most famous (at least in my eyes) performance. I'm not big on mini-series however. What is the plural of mini-series? I certainly don't know.

One show that looks pretty cool is "Roommates," which stars Randy Quaid and Eric Stoltz. Anything that stars Randy Quaid can't be half bad. I enjoyed his performance in The Paper, but his best film by far is Christmas Vacation. I'd better shut up. This is "On the Tube," not "The Reel World," and the last thing I need is that Lupo kid beating down my door.

Alright, viewers. Here's the winner of the week in the NBC Spring Lineup: "Tears and Laughter: the Joan and Melissa Rivers Story." I don't make this crap up folks. The best part is that Joan and Melissa will star as themselves. I can't imagine watching this, but a Collegian colleague just told me that she won't miss it, so who knows. If I'm not picking the lint off my socks that night, I'll watch too.

Caleb Cochran is the closest thing we have to a TV editor.

Cross-cultural Chinese comedy A Great Wall entertains at Smith

By CATHY CHANG
Collegian Staff

"Why do we have to do things the Chinese way?" the All-American teenage son asks his father before the family leaves for a trip to Beijing. "It gets you nowhere."

A comedy directed by Peter Wang in 1986, A Great Wall might have looked dated when viewed last week as part of Smith College's History Video Series, but its message is still relevant to Chinese-Americans and the many other hyphenated-Americans whose cultural heritage lays overseas.

Leo Fang, played by Wang, is a computer specialist living in San Francisco with his very American wife and son. Fang is indeed headed "nowhere" as he has just been fired from his company for pouring coffee on his boss' lap after the company's decision to choose his White and less- experienced colleague to become director of his department.

The film intercuts scenes from Fang's life with scenes from Beijing, where his sister and her family anticipate Fang's visit. Two young men, Yu and Liu, represent the younger portion of China and are the Chinese equivalent of slackers, out of high school but unable to pass college entrance exams and move on to real jobs. They spend their days looking for employment, which include modelling and working in a public bath. Liu teaches Lili, Fang's niece, English and a subtle romance (nothing by American standards) develops.

When the Fangs arrive, the entire neighborhood turns out to get a glimpse of the visitors, who seem as un-Chinese as one can get. "They must be Filipino," one of the neighbors finally concludes.

Fang, having emigrated from Beijing 30 years ago, is the only member of the family who can speak Chinese. The only things Chinese that his wife possesses are her genes. She looks awkwardly out of place when the family visits the Great Wall of China, in shorts and with an Instamatic slung around her neck.

Paul, their son who in America seems to prefer spending his free time wrapped around his girlfriend and cheering on the 49ers, is a welcome distraction to Lili, who joins him in electronic video games and starts to protest her mother's previously inoffensive invasions into her privacy.

A Great Wall does manage to communicate the clash of cultures at the risk of making the Chinese seem backward and crude. There are some scenes that work to demonstrate the differences, like when Fang vigorously stretches for his morning run while Mr. Chao, his brother-in-law and Lili's father, gracefully does tai-ch'i in the courtyard.

However, some interactions between the Chinese and American characters seem obligatory and stereotypical, while others come from nowhere, such as the sudden tension of Exam Day, or the final ping-pong tournament between Liu and Paul, which was meant to be a comment on Nixon's diplomatic trip to China.

Still, A Great Wall does manage to be entertaining and its Chinese characters, especially Liu and Yu, are well-rounded and memorable. The two families part and the film concludes humorously with Fang in his yard, doing tai-ch'i and ending his routine exactly like Mr. Chao noisily did.

PUBLIC ANNOUNCEMENT TO ALL UNIVERSITY UNDERGRADUATES

All University of Massachusetts undergraduates, are hereby notified that a ratification referendum for the Student Government Association Constitution, shall be put to the undergraduate population in a general election, on or before May 1, 1994.

On Tuesday, April 5, 1994 there will be a presentation of the proposed constitution, approved by unanimous vote of the Student Senate on April 30, 1994.

University community members are invited to attend this presentation Tuesday, April 5, at 7PM in the Cape Cod Lounge. This constitution, if ratified, will have profound implications for the future of undergraduate student governance.

Please direct questions or comments to the SGA, 545-0341. Copies of the proposed constitution are available in the SGA office, 430 Student Union.

Your Horoscope
By Jeane Dixon

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A business discussion brings terrific dividends, thrusting you into the limelight. Pursue your career objectives with greater determination. Travel is favored as long as you avoid extravagance.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): The emphasis this month is on earning more money. Consult experts if seeking financial backing for a venture that promises to be a commercial success.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Work will keep you on the run. An employment offer could sound too good to turn down. Investigate thoroughly; it might make better sense to stay put. A promising relationship is put to the test.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): An open-minded attitude will bring new happiness. You win the understanding and backing of a friend who has vested you in the past. At work, speak your mind with authority. Ask down old dilemmas.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Support proposed changes at work. Efficiency could win you a more responsible position. Burn the midnight oil to turn in your best performance ever! Dress to impress when attending business meetings.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Use your head. Do not snap at others when under pressure. Heed an old friend's sage advice regarding a private matter. This pal really does have your best interests at heart. Postpone a romantic showdown.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): An associate contents something that you feared was too good to be true. Rejoice! Reach a compromise with someone who has different views. A new relationship will flourish nicely.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You gain new self- confidence when family members offer their valuable support. Many successful people followed the plan you are outlining for yourself.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Your ability to read carefully and follow directions is assessed by higher-ups. Attention to detail could put you in line for a promotion. Romantic partner's behavior may unsettle you.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your sense of humor will help you cope with what could be a difficult day. Even loved ones may act impatient. Try to avoid bringing up sensitive subjects. Clarify your views to your romantic partner.

AQUARIUS (Jan 20-Feb. 18): Take a diplomatic approach to a work problem. A business or romantic partner shares some valuable insights. Invite a close friend for dinner this evening.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You have the rare ability to see universal truths in everyday events. It is time to exercise yourself form an emotional hold. Bring footloose and fancy- free has many advantages!

an assist.

Massachusetts has another chance to play 'Cuse this season, as the Gorillas travel north to the Carrier Dome on April 30. Garber says they are concentrating on the seven games before that, though.

"You have to remember, we've been on the field for just five days. It tends to wear on you. We'll be fine," Garber said.

Gorilla Notes: Valente's consecutive scoring streak was stopped at 17 games when he failed to score against Hofstra. He began another streak against Syracuse, collecting an assist...Depp reached the 75-point plateau with his second goal of the game against Hofstra, 8:48 into the fourth quarter... Junior Jeremy Murphy, who has had three constructive knee surgeries in the past two years, injured his knee once again against the Orangemen. His status is unknown. Murphy was coming off a four-goal game against Hofstra.

Anything is better than Tony Pena.

Greg Blosser is getting better each day and should get the start in right field. If by some chance the Sox land Ron Gant, it could get interesting this fall.

If you thought Roger Clemens was done, you guessed wrong. Clemens has been impressive all spring and in his final outing had this line score; 6 IP 2 H 0 R. Aaron Sele can pitch at this level but must cut down on his no-decisions — he had nine last season. Frank Viola and Danny Darwin round out a solid starting staff. The bullpen is shaky at this point — they've been rocked all spring.

The Red Sox will hang around until mid-August which will provide us with an interesting summer and another broken heart in October.

The final analysis on the American League?
American League Champion: Baltimore Orioles.
Cy Young: Roger Clemens — Boston.
MVP: Ken Griffey Jr. — Seattle.
Rookie of the Year: Jeffrey Hammonds — Baltimore.

The Massachusetts men's lacrosse team finished second in the prestigious Fleet Invitational this past weekend, falling to Syracuse in the final, 16–9.

Gorillas mystified by Syracuse

By ANDREW BRYCE
Collegian Staff

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — To beat a team like Syracuse in a game of lacrosse, you must play an outstanding all–around game. The entire game.

The University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team played the Orangemen to a tie in the second half, 6–6, but that could not erase the 10–3 first half score in 'Cuse's 16–9 victory that captured the Fleet Invitational Tournament at Brown University yesterday.

In the talent–packed tournament, No. 13 Massachusetts defeated No. 9 Hofstra 11–8 on Friday afternoon to advance to the championship game against No. 4 Syracuse, who nipped No. 14 Brown 14–12 in first–round action.

Before the 3,684 in attendance, the strong, quick, talented and explosive Orangemen scored five unanswered goals in the first 7:25 of the game. You could say 'Cuse came ready to play.

"We obviously didn't want to let them get out of the blocks that quick," said Coach Ted Garber. "But that's the type of team they have. Once they get going, you have to try to break the momentum."

It took 12:39 for the Gorillas to put a point on the board against the tough Syracuse defense, as freshman Chris Grande scored an unassisted goal. The Orangemen then answered with an unassisted Mark Fietta goal and led after 15 minutes, 6–1.

"You have to remember, we've been on the field for just five days. It tends to wear on you. We'll be fine."
— Coach Ted Garber

The last two minutes of the first quarter seemed to sum up the first–half play. The Gorillas came down the field, only to botch up two consecutive passes. Syracuse then took control of the ball and in a matter of 20 seconds, scored a fast–break goal. Outstanding ball–work and speed. And smooth. Typical 'Cuse lax.

The second quarter was more of the same. Orangeman Roy Colsey scored a goal from Dom Finn and Jim Morrissey took a pass from Charlie Lockwood and put it in the net to take an 8–1 lead.

At 6:50 of the second quarter, sophomore midfielder Eric Bailey took a pass from senior attacker Mike Valente for a goal to make it 8–2. Syracuse then answered with an unassisted goal by Robert Kavovit at 8:36.

The Gorillas managed to score one more goal before halftime, as freshman Brendan Glass scored on an assist from sophomore middie Buddy Hoffmann at 12:23. So did 'Cuse, as Chad Smith scored his second goal of the game at 13:18 to widen the lead to seven at intermission, 10–3.

Massachusetts came out ready to play in the third quarter. After a Lockwood goal for the Orangemen, Hoffmann put one in the net, making it 11–4. After a Syracuse goal by Matt Doyle, senior attacker Wes Depp scored his sixth goal of the season. All of this in the first 2:29 of the third quarter. The Gorillas had the last word on another goal by Depp, 13:35 into the third.

With 'Cuse doubling up on UMass after three, 12–6, the Gorillas tried every effort to catch up. After a Morrissey goal, Bailey tallied a goal of his own at 3:00. Glass then took a pass from Greg Kline for a goal at 3:51, making it 13–8. Syracuse then ran off three consecutive goals in the next two minutes of play. Glass scored an unassisted goal with 31 seconds left on the clock.

Garber said he was impressed with his team's effort in the second half.

"In the second half, the kids came back and held their own," Garber said. "Their starters were still out there. I was happy with that."

"The speed at the midfield line was very impressive," Glass said of Syracuse midfielders Colsey, Lockwood and Finn. All three made the all–tournament team.

The Gorillas were led by Glass' three goals; Bailey and Depp chipped in with two each and Hoffmann had a goal and

Lax's weekend of opposites

By MATT VAUTOUR
Collegian Staff

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — Two different lacrosse teams represented the University of Massachusetts at the third annual Fleet Invitational tournament this past weekend. The players were the same but their level of play was oh–so– different.

The Friday Gorillas played inspired and passionately. Revenge was on the minds of the Gorillas as they faced–off against Hofstra, who eliminated them from last year's NCAA tournament. UMass treated the game as a must–win and dominated the contest from the outset.

The game was an upset by poll standards — the Flying Dutchmen came in ranked No. 9 while UMass checking in at No. 13. However, the Gorillas played like the better team and appeared to be throughout the afternoon.

The Saturday Gorillas looked too much in awe of the defending national champions, the Syracuse Orangemen. The Gorillas were tentative for the entire first half and parts of the second — the type of performance that does not warrant a victory against talented teams like Syracuse.

Lady Luck smiled on Coach Ted Garber's team Friday. The Gorillas played their best game of the young season against Hofstra as everything seemed to go their way. Nine Gorillas chipped in at least a goal or an assist in the 11–8 victory and six of them got two or more.

The breaks and the bounces went the way of the Orangemen on Saturday. On the offensive end the Gorilla attack hit the post on several occasions, ending UMass scoring chances. On defense, the Orangemen screened goalkeeper Tom LoPresti several times that resulted in goals he could do nothing about.

Jeremy Murphy was "in a zone" on Friday. The junior midfielder had the Midas touch against the Flying Dutchmen as he solved Hofstra goalie Joe Romeo four times to help give UMass its second victory of the year.

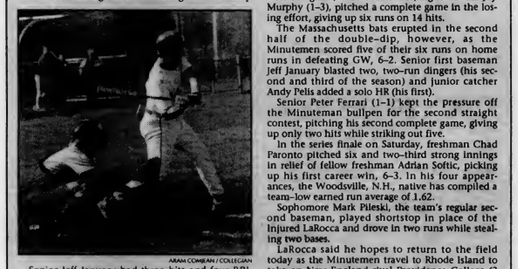
Murphy finished Saturday's game on crutches. Murphy, who has been plagued by injuries throughout his career, suffered a knee injury similar to that of UMass basketball star Marcus Camby in the second half. The extent of the injury and whether Murphy will return to the UMass line–up is uncertain at this time.

Wes Depp, Greg Bailey and Brendan Glass came to play both days. Depp, the veteran attacker, scored two goals on Friday, including the 60th of his career; he added two more against Syracuse the following day. The freshman Glass has a long way to go to catch Depp, but with two goals in each of his first three games and a hat trick against the Orangemen on Saturday, he may be on his way.

Greg Bailey assumed the role of playmaker Friday, dishing out three assists, before switching to sniper Saturday as he netted two goals in a losing effort.

The Gorillas gave 100 percent all weekend. It is easy to forget that UMass has only been able to practice on Richard F. Garber Field for five days, making it tough to practice game situations, according to Garber. Even down eight goals early to Syracuse on Saturday, UMass kept battling to cut the lead to six before fatigue and the speed of the Orangeman offense finally broke the camel's back.

Glass and defenseman Dave Murphy were named to the All–Tournament Team.



Baseball continues to roll, wins two of three at GW

By ARTHUR STAPLETON JR.
Collegian Staff

After sputtering through most of its conference season last year, the University of Massachusetts baseball team found itself out of contention for the Atlantic 10 post–season tournament.

There has been no sputtering so far this season, as the quick A–10 start for the Minutemen continued this past weekend against George Washington, with Massachusetts taking two of the three games.

The Colonials (11–11, 6–2 A–10) are still atop the conference standings, but Massachusetts (4–10, 3–2 A–10) has picked up three huge road wins (one last weekend against defending A–10 champ Rutgers) in its first two weeks of conference action.

ARAM COMRAN / COLLEGIAN

Senior Jeff January had three hits and four RBI, including two home runs, this past weekend.

Both GW and Rutgers were picked ahead of the Minutemen in the pre–season, but Massachusetts co–captain Greg LaRocca said after this weekend, he thinks his team has made a point.

"We feel like we've faced two of the top teams in the league and done pretty well. We think we're the best team in the conference and we're out to prove that," said LaRocca, who twisted his knee last week in practice and didn't play in the series.

In the first game of Friday's doubleheader, the Minutemen ran into a brick wall, namely GW's ace Bill Anderson, who limited Massachusetts to two runs on five hits, striking out 10, as the Colonials won the game, 6–2. UMass' ace, right hander Jay Murphy (1–3), pitched a complete game in the losing effort, giving up six runs on 14 hits.

The Massachusetts bats erupted in the second half of the double–dip, however, as the Minutemen scored five of their six runs on home runs in defeating GW, 6–2. Senior first baseman Jeff January blasted two, two–run dingers (his second and third of the season) and junior catcher Andy Pellis added a solo HR (his first).

Senior Peter Ferrari (1–1) kept the pressure off the Minutemen bullpen for the second straight contest, pitching his second complete game, giving up only two hits while striking out five.

In the series finale on Saturday, freshman Chad Paronto pitched six and two–third strong innings in relief of fellow freshman Adrian Softic, picking up his first career win, 6–3. In his four appearances, the Woodsville, N.H., native has compiled a team–low earned run average of 1.62.

Sophomore Mark Pileski, the team's regular second baseman, played shortstop in place of the injured LaRocca and drove in two runs while stealing two bases.

LaRocca said he hopes to return to the field today as the Minutemen travel to Rhode Island to take on New England rival Providence College (3 p.m., weather permitting).

NL races are wide–open

LA, Atlanta and Cards favorites to win divisions

The National League season is underway. No, there aren't any games at 9 a.m. today, but ESPN televised last night's season opener between the St. Louis Cardinals and the Cincinnati Reds, for those of you who've been slow in getting into the swing of baseball.

The realignment of the divisions and the new television package are just two of the many changes which have gone on in the offseason.

A slew of trades, releases and free agent pickups will make the 1994 season even more exciting than last year. With three divisions, the races are wide open and you shouldn't be surprised if a team or two rises up from nowhere to clinch a playoff berth.

Michael Morrissey's BEANBALLS

NL East: Consider this a three–team division, with two of the teams fighting for the division title and the other racing for the wild card. Atlanta and Philadelphia won their divisions last year, while the Montreal Expos (as usual) were in the thick of the race until September.

The only thing that wins divisions after 162 games is quality pitching, and the Braves certainly have that, even with the losses of Pete Smith and Jay Howell.

What they do not have is depth in the outfield, which was a luxury last season but may be an Achilles' heel this year. Deion Sanders has to produce the way Otis Nixon did, and Tony Tarasco and Ryan Klesko must show they are more than young kids with talent.

Ron Gant's unceremonial dump into the trash heap may also affect the Braves, although many of their players are locked into long–term deals. Players tend to take note when a player who has produced above and beyond the call of duty is thrown away because of money.

The Phillies lost pitching as well, but many fans asked Mitch Williams not to let the door hit his rear end on the way out. Terry Mulholland will actually be missed and is probably the reason the Phils will fall short. A weak bullpen offsets a monster lineup.

Why can't Montreal ever win the damn division? They seem to get closer every year, only to falter at the end. This year will be no different, although the wild card helps Les Expos more than any other team in baseball.

Trading Delino DeShields away for Pedro Martinez is gutsy, but he's not the frontline pitcher they can use. Kent Hill is looked to as the No. 1 starter, and he can't carry a team. Marquis Grisson, Larry Walker and Wil Cordero provide the muscle, and Cliff Floyd is looked to as the first baseman for the next decade or so.

If the Mets get strong pitching from recent underachievers Dwight Gooden and Bret Saberhagen, and if they can get 40 saves from John Franco along with offensive production, New York could finish ahead of Florida. Whoopee.

The Marlins will prove that last year's out–of–the–basement showing is an anomaly. Even with Gary Sheffield for a full season and Benito Santiago for probably his last, Florida will flounder. The good news: Ryan Bowen, Kurt Abbott, Jeff Conine and Nigel Wilson (when he arrives) will be fun to watch.

NL Central: I can't pick a team for first place that is held hostage by an owner's dog. The good old days of 1990 are long gone for Cincinnati because of the constant interference of Marge Schott. Personally, I think removing players like Chris Sabo and Bip Roberts removes any competitive fire, and replacing them with malcontents like Kevin Mitchell and Tony Fernandez makes the atmosphere worse.

My pick is St. Louis, for three reasons: 1) I've always like Manager Joe Torre and the Cards were as close as the Expos last year; 2) The Cardinals have a great offense and the only guy to hit four homers and 12 RBI in one game, Mark Whiten; 3) The division is terrible and nobody deserves to win it.

Houston looks strong as well with a rotation of Pete Harnisch, Greg Swindell, Doug Drabek and Darryl Kile — probably the best in the Central. Losing Eric Anthony will hurt, as will Art Howe being replaced by Terry Collins.

Pittsburgh will continue to go through tough times (and the city won't care) and Chicago has to start over.

NL West: My surprise team in all of baseball is Los Angeles. The Dodgers will get good years from Darryl Strawberry (if he returns from his mysterious excursion) and DeShields, and Eric Karros and Mike Piazza will shine again this season. Darren Dreifort and Chan Ho Park will have hitters scratching their heads from April to October.

The San Francisco Giants will not get the strong records from John Burkett and Bill Swift they did last year. Salomon Torres will have a good year, but the loss of Will Clark will really hurt Barry Bonds and Matt Williams' numbers.

Colorado, San Diego. San Diego. Colorado. No matter which way you slice it, these two clubs are the worst in the league. They would have trouble winning in a 14–division league.

Orioles the power of the AL

If Red Sox can land OF Ron Gant, they will contend

Featuring divisional realignment and a new playoff format, Major League Baseball ushers in its 125th anniversary this afternoon.

Pennant races are a thing of the past as the three divisional winners plus the best second place team will advance to the post–season.

The new–look American League for 1994 will feature Toronto, Baltimore, Boston, New York and Detroit in the Eastern Division; Chicago, Cleveland, Kansas City, Minnesota and Milwaukee in the Central; Texas, Seattle, Oakland and California in the West.

The new ownership in Baltimore spent its money ($43 million) to acquire Chris Sabo, Rafael Palmeiro and Sid Fernandez. Add Sabo and Palmeiro to a lineup that already boasts Cal Ripken, Brady Anderson, Mike Devereaux and Harold Baines and you have one of the league's best offensive and defensive lineups.

Mike Mussina and Ben McDonald form a strong one–two combination. The question for the Orioles is the rest of the staff. If Fernandez can regain his form of 1986 and Lee Smith can prove to be an effective closer again, the Orioles will win the division.

Last season, Frank Thomas dominated the American League, leading the White Sox to their first division title since 1983. Look for a repeat. The White Sox have the best young pitching staff in the league, anchored by Cy Young winner Jack McDowell, Wilson Alvarez, Alex Fernandez and Jason Bere.

Bill Balfour's BEANBALLS

The Chicago offense will be stronger this year despite the loss of Ellis Burks and George Bell. Julio Franco is the new DH and Robin Ventura has been placed in the fifth spot in the batting order.

The American League West is . . . well, bad. The Texas Rangers will hit a few home runs in their stadium to win the division. Nothing needs to be said about Juan Gonzalez, who now has a healthy Jose Canseco and Will Clark batting around him. I hope the fans in the bleachers can catch.

Kevin Brown is the ace of the staff, having won only 15 games a year ago. Kenny Rogers and Jack Armstrong both sported ERAs over four and Bruce Hurst figures to be the fourth starter. Pitching is the Rangers' Achilles' heel.

The wild–card team in the American League is going to be the Cleveland Indians. Their lineup features Albert Belle, Carlos Baerga, Kenny Lofton and Eddie Murray. Carlos Baerga joined Rogers Hornsby as the only second baseman in baseball history to collect 20 HRs, 100 RBI, 200 hits and hit .300 in two straight seasons. Jack Morris is part of the pitching staff — which keeps them from winning the division.

The Toronto Blue Jays have won the last two World Series, but don't expect a third. The top three pitchers for Toronto will be Pat Hentgen, Juan Guzman and Dave Stewart. None of the three posted an ERA last season under 3.87. The fourth starter figures to be Al Leiter. Ouch.

How about the Red Sox? Don't expect anything other then a good, competitive season. Otis Nixon gives the Sox speed, which is still hard to believe, and Mo Vaughn is on the verge of greatness. Dave Valle and Damon Berryhill will both provide a solid bat and glove behind the plate.

Assassination plot thickens

MEXICO CITY — At least seven people were involved in the assassination of the man who was likely to have become Mexico's next president, a special prosecutor said Monday.

The suspects include the head of local security for presidential candidate Luis Donaldo Colosio at the March 23 rally where he was slain, as well as three men hired to guard him. The prosecutor, former supreme court justice Miguel Montes Garcia, said still others may be involved.

Montes did not discuss a possible motive, nor directly address the issue of a broader conspiracy that many Mexicans believe existed.

But the announcement dramatically widens the number of suspects in Mexico's most serious political assassination since 1928. Colosio, as the candidate of the long–incumbent Institutional Revolutionary Party, or PRI, was seen as a shoo–in for the Aug. 21 election.

Second gunman involved in Hebron massacre

JERUSALEM — A police ballistics expert testified Monday that one shell found at the site of the Hebron mosque massacre was fired by a rifle whose owner has not been tracked down, reinforcing the theory of a second gunman.

During questioning of a Palestinian hospital director it also emerged that fragments from three types of bullets were extracted from victims of the Feb. 25 shootings. Justices asked to examine 10 fragments extracted from the wounded at Hebron's Ahli Hospital that hadn't been turned over to police.

Hearings of the massacre probe are expected to wind up on Wednesday, when Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin testifies behind closed doors.

Whitewater info released

WASHINGTON — More than 8,000 pages of documents from an S&L at the center of the Whitewater controversy detail its collapse under the weight of risky investments, bad loans and a lack of cash reserves.

The papers released Monday by the Resolution Trust Corp. do not focus on Bill or Hillary Clinton or on the Whitewater Development Corp.

However, they do offer a glimpse into Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan's failing fiscal health, much of which occurred under the stewardship of James McDougal, who was also a partner on the Clintons in the Whitewater real estate venture.

The documents, including records of delinquent loans, minutes of board meetings and details on investment strategies, were released under Freedom of Information Act requests by The Associated Press and other news organizations.

Term limits to be set in Massachusetts

BOSTON — Gov. William Weld and other advocates predicted Monday that Massachusetts voters will install term limits if lawmakers won't do it themselves.

"The people of Massachusetts are ready to upend the status quo in Massachusetts government," Weld told the Election Laws Committee.

The proposed law would prevent most federal and state officials from having their names printed on primary or general election ballots after eight years in office.

Supporters say the limits are needed to boot what they call arrogant, entrenched politicians out of office.

Ballot access would be limited to two four–year terms for governor, lieutenant governor, attorney general, secretary of state, state treasurer, state auditor, governor's councilor, state senator, state representative and U.S. representative. U.S. senators would be limited to 12 years, or two terms.

Republicans rumble in wake of problems

By BEN GEMAN
Collegian Staff

Internal conflicts over the organization and ideological direction of the University of Massachusetts Republican Club erupted last week, resulting in the suspension of the club amidst charges by members of mismanagement, embezzlement of funds, and threats of assault.

The future of the Republican Club, a registered student organization, remains unclear after they were suspended last Tuesday by the Student Government Association's acting registrar Matthew Pavesi.

The suspension was a result of a failure to comply with SGA by–laws requiring all RSOs to maintain updated lists of their membership.

Greg Zenon, president of the suspended club, will appeal the decision at Wednesday's SGA meeting.

According to chapter nine of the SGA by–laws, "The Registrar shall, from time to time, require RSOs to demonstrate that they meet the definition of a Registered Student Organization and comply with other Senate policy."

The constitution of the suspended Republican Club requires that all members pay dues, and because no dues have been collected for the last two semesters, they have no membership, according to SGA Attorney General Matt Malone.

Zenon has acknowledged a delay in the collection of membership dues but said Monday that it has been standard procedure for the past two years not to collect dues from members and that he does plan on collecting the membership fees.

Students affiliated with the campus chapter of the Silent Majority, an RSO which collaborates with in the publication of the Minuteman, the club's newspaper, will also be present at Wednesday's meeting to voice their complaints regarding Zenon's handling of the club, according to Silent Majority member Eric Auciello.

The decision for suspension came after a meeting on Monday, March 28 between Zenon, Pavesi, Malone and Republican Club and Silent Majority member Dan Flynn to address complaints issued by some members of the club, who had approached the SGA the week before spring break regarding Zenon's activities as president.

If Zenon is unsuccessful in appealing the suspension, than the stage will be set for reorganization following new elections.

Members who are dissatisfied with Zenon's activities as club president favor the suspension because new elections would allow them to vote for a new president.

"We want the suspension, basically," Auciello said on Sunday.

"We have reason to believe that he embezzled club funds," Auciello said, regarding money he says was to be used for the publication of the Minuteman.

Last night Auciello, Flynn and a third man who refused to reveal his identity gave the Collegian records of the Republican Club's finances from the Student Activities Office. The three claimed that the records were proof of Zenon's embezzlement of funds.

Zenon denied on Monday that he embezzled club funds.

Auciello also said Sunday that the students attending the SGA meeting to address Zenon's activities as president will argue that Zenon "neglected" the club, failed to call meetings, and keep office hours.

"What we basically have here is a situation in which every member of the UMass Republican Club except two want a change in leadership," Flynn said on Sunday.

Zenon said Sunday that Flynn is seeking to remove him as president because of political differences.

"This is his latest tactic to take over the Republican Club," Zenon said.

Zenon said he was approached the week before spring break by a member who asked him to resign because he was "not anti–gay enough," "too

Consensual relations discussed

Hearing to address student–faculty sexual relations

By GERI SAHN
Collegian Staff

Is it right for a professor to have a sexual relationship with students? On Wednesday and Friday, an open hearing will be held by the Committee on Consensual Relationships in order to let the campus community voice their opinions on the issue.

Last December, Chancellor David K. Scott appointed the committee in order to come up with a policy guide on consensual relationships. The committee was a response to the controversy over statements made by a University of Massachusetts English professor in the September 1993 issue of Harper's Magazine.

In the article, William Kerrigan openly admitted that he has had sexual relationships with his students before coming to UMass.

Many students, faculty and staff complained about what Kerrigan said. The administration did not respond immediately to the incident because the University does not have certain bans on faculty–student relations.

A relationship between a supervisor and his/her secretary is an example of a consensual relationship. Porter said another example would be the relationship between graduate students and professors.

"I think that this is an issue academic institutions are struggling with right now. As an academic institution, we have a particular responsibility to insure in an academic environment," said Susan Pearson, co–chair of the committee.

Since December, the committee has met twice. Subcommittees have also been formed in order to make the policies more specific.

One committee is responsible to make a draft of policies which focus on staff relationships. The other committee concentrates on student–faculty relations.

After the two have an outline made, they will come together to create one policy.

"We are going to try to spell out certain kinds of relationships on campus. This has nothing to do with race, sex or ethnicity, but a balance of power," said Catherine Porter, co–chair of the committee.

The committee has looked at policies about consensual relationships from other universities. Porter said many of the policies are very similar among the different colleges.

"We are very concerned about this issue. It is an abuse of power, so we need to develop a policy. Certain relationships aren't wise to have. Perceptions from others could cause problems, and problems could come in the future," Porter said.

The hearings will be held in the campus center Wednesday, 5 p.m., and Friday, 10 a.m. and 12 p.m. They will give people a chance to voice their opinions on the issue.

"The hearings are designed to hear from people to get input and any further suggestions. They are not to hear problems and solved them. They are open to anyone," Porter said.

"This policy will have an impact on students, faculty, staff and anyone else who is involved with the University. It is an important issue, and people should come to the hearing," she said.

Kelley is pragmatic

Businessman sets realistic goals

By BRIAN GORMLEY
Collegian Staff

If you are ever in a fight, Amherst Select Board candidate Larry Kelley said he is the man you want on your side.

Kelley, who owns the Amherst Athletic Club, said the business experience he has gained as owner of the fitness club makes him the most qualified candidate to allocate the town's resources.

"If the town has a $38 million budget, I can get the town best services for $38 million," Kelley said. "The problem with this town is that it tries to get $50 million worth of services out of a $38 million budget. The town has to stop dreaming."

Kelley said deciding what services he will provide at his athletic club will help him decide as a Select Board member how to service the community best.

"I know how to provide fairly for the community and deal with the clash of desires," he said. "[For example] on one end you have the parents with kids in school saying 'give the school whatever they want, give them carte blanche' and on the other hand you have the old folks with no kids in school who are saying 'no we can't afford it anymore.' We need to work it out and find a happy medium."

Kelley said one of the issues he will be working on is that because the University of Massachusetts is tax exempt, the town needs more money to compensate. He said despite the fact that the University provides jobs and a lot of business for the community, it still takes more than it gives to the community.

"The cold hard fact is that it costs the town more money to have UMass here than UMass does for the town," he said. "I agree with [Select Board Candidate] Matt Pavesi that the burden should not come on the backs of the students, but it should not come on the backs of the old folks in town who can't pay their property taxes either. We need to get more money from Boston."

From the Student Government Association to Amherst Select Board. That is the transition Matthew Pavesi, a senior at the University of Massachusetts wants to make.

Pavesi, the former undergraduate student speaker at UMass is one of four candidates running for selectman in the Amherst Town Elections being held today.

Pavesi is a activist for students who has been an Amherst Town Meeting member for the last four years. He stands on three main points and stresses that the UMass needs a connection to Amherst.

Rare strand of AIDS found in France

By PAUL RAEBURN
Associated Press

NEW YORK — A rare strain of the AIDS virus wasn't detected by a blood test used in France, U.S. health authorities said Monday. They said the strain is found almost exclusively in patients from Cameroon and poses little risk elsewhere.

No cases of the virus, known as HIV–1, group O, have been reported in the United States, authorities said.

The AIDS tests used in the United States weren't designed to detect this virus. If the virus is reported in the United States, however, the tests can be modified to detect it, said Donald McLearn, a spokesman for the U.S. Food and Drug Administration. Eleven cases of infection with the virus have been reported in France, and "almost all involve patients from Cameroon," according to a report last week in Science magazine.

On March 14, French health authorities recalled a single brand of AIDS test that was unable to detect the virus. They ordered an "urgent re–evaluation" of other tests used there, Science magazine reported.

The group O strain of HIV–1 has been known for about four years, said Gerald Myers, director of the AIDS virus genetic database in Los Alamos, N.M., and an authority of the "family tree" of the human immunodeficiency virus.

The group O virus differs from both HIV–1 and HIV–2 and resembles the chimpanzee AIDS virus, Myers said.

So who is this for?

Elections urge student to vote

They are not exactly the presidential elections, but to the residents of Amherst they are just as important.

From 7 a.m. to 8 p.m. today the voting booths are open for the Amherst Town Elections. Any student registered to vote in the town is urged to vote.

The ballot includes two questions pertaining to the town and candidates for moderator, selectman, school committee, elector, Jones Library trustee, housing authority, redevelopment authority, county commissioner and charter commission.

Stapleton talks tough

Candidate voices civic concerns

By JUSTIN DOYLE

Financial concerns in the town of Amherst are a chief concern for William Stapleton, candidate for Select Board.

Stapleton is one of four candidates for Selectman in today's Town Elections. Stapleton has no political experience but has worked within the community and at the University of Massachusetts.

Stapleton has been on the Amherst Redevelopment Authority, the Housing Task Force, and a Board member of the Hitchcock Center at the Fine Arts Center at UMass. Stapleton is also one of the founding members of the Amherst Club.

"I'm running as an expression of civic concern," Stapleton said. "I think I can bring sound judgement and fiscal responsibility (to the select board)."

"I think the Select Board flounders a lot over financial matters of one kind or another, and certainly in their presentation to the town meeting," Stapleton said. "It becomes very complex when you're discussing the fiscal budget and I hope I can shed some light on that."

Stapleton feels the major issue before the town is the allocation of scarce resources.

"Every year we seem to have to go for a dead over–ride for funds, not capital expenses but operating budgets," Stapleton said. "And that's increasingly hard for the residential property taxes of the town, which is the source of all our funds to cope with."

Run for charity is on the horizon

By AMY PARADYSZ
Collegian Correspondent

This is the second year student Scott Trahan has directed the annual road race formerly called "Run For Runaways."

In the past 14 years since the race has begun it has benefitted the Covenant House in New York City, a shelter for runaway youth. Trahan, a summer employee of Camp Horizons, said the race will probably change charities each year now.

Camp Horizons hosts 400 summer campers with various disabilities including autism, down syndrome and cerebral palsy. There is a job-finding program, a landscaping program that hires those with more severe handicaps and a group home with 24-hour care for other campers.

"[The race proceeds] goes to a really great cause. The more people who turn out the better," said Trahan. He expects about 300 runners, but admits participation depends on the weather. Last year there were 250-300 participants and almost $4000 was raised, despite poor weather. The goal this year is $5000.

Freshman Mike David from Pi Kappa Alpha service fraternity has been working on publicity and prizes. The fraternity has helped with the race for years and, according to David, everyone will participate in some way this year.

Other sponsors include Sigma Kappa, Mortar Board Honor Society, UMass Greek Council, Tau Beta Pi, Commuter Area Government, Teams Project and Smith College.

Also on the Camp Horizon agenda is a 10 K (6.2 mile) road race, "Run For the Horizon," which will be held Saturday, April 16 to benefit individuals with mental handicaps at the camp located in South Windham, Conn.

Several student groups are cooperating to sponsor the event, including the Newman Student Association, Pi Kappa Alpha and Circle K. Registration for runners and walkers began yesterday at the Campus Center Concourse and will continue through next week.

Those who want to take part but don't want to don't want to run should consider signing up to walk or to fill one of 60 staff positions.

Registration is $5 in advance and $7 the day of the race. In addition, participants are asked to get sponsors by the kilometer. Every runner, walker and staff member will receive a t-shirt in exchange for the registration fees. All proceeds will directly benefit Camp Horizons campers.

The race starts at the fields on the north side of the UMass Alumni Stadium at 10 am for runners and 9:30 for walkers. For more information, contact Scott Trahan at 546-4164.

Rhythm Nations imports fashion, music and poetry

Dancers at last Friday night's Rhythm Nation.

By JUAN JOSE CHACON QUIROS
Collegian Staff

Rhythm Nations takes place every year at Smith College and commemorates the cultural heritage of nations all over the world. This year's edition took place last Friday in Greene Hall and, as usual, it recreated with music, song, dance, poetry and fashion the cultures of most of the international students present in this valley.

The event sponsored by the International Students Organization of Smith College, began with a fashion show. Women from Mexico, Bangladesh, Malawi, Japan, Pakistan, Kenya, India and Brasil, among others, wore traditional costumes from this countries.

Moji from Sierra Leone used a boubou, Seon from Nigeria wore an ero and buba, Alexandra from the Philipines showed to what extent pineapple fibers can bring beauty to a dress, Triptee from Malaysia modeled a saron kebaya made from batik.

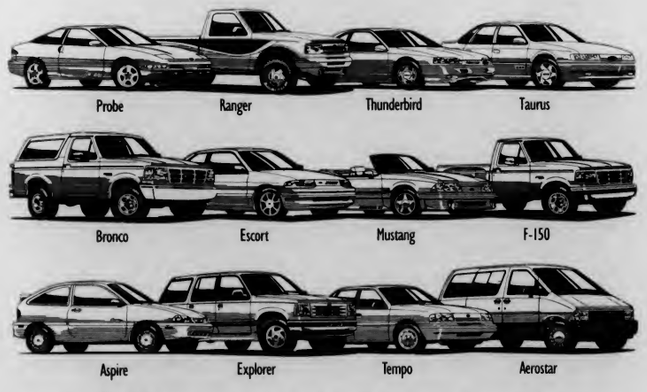
The second part of the night consisted of a cultural show. Maja Razlog and Lada Soljan from Croatia made a powerful contrast by first singing a party song from Bosnia and then a version of the Ave Maria.

Sung in Latin, the interpreter brought tears to the crowd with a crisp voice and melocolic and emotional tone. The song was particularly appreciated given the current turmoil in Bosnia and Croatia.

It was followed by a section of dance performances from Japan, Pakistan, Bulgaria, Bangladesh and Brasil. The latter, from Hampshire College, was a variety of the stick fighting dance. The dancers used sticks in order to clash against each other, the rhythm given by the beat of drums. At some points, the dance got a little physical, as the dancers kicked each other in the head and chest.

Junghen Luo, Fiona Fong and Elif Akcetin from Singapore, Hong Kong and Turkey performed three songs. Luo used her soprano voice to startle the auditorium with a song in which the singer tries to find "her own audience."

Machiko Hoshino did not sing but she played a piano piece from the contemporary Japanese movie "Merry Christmas Mr. Lawrence," based in a novel by Vander Post. Sakamoto, the composer, is famous for the music from the "Last Emperor" and the opening ceremony of the Barcelona Olympics.



Ginger Sullivan from Trinidad and Tobago danced Bongo choreographed by Monty Thompson. This dance begins at the funeral of a gambler. It is an interpretation of death as a passage to a new phase of being.

Smith's African Students Association Choir followed with songs from the African continent. The choir also performed the closing song of the evening "To all the women of the world."

From the Netherlands a small play was staged by Sabein Onvlee, Kees Kleywegt and Mariette Nollen. Poems depicting the "boring nature of that land" were read during the play.

In yesterday's issue of the Collegian, the story about fire alarms [False alarms waste money] was incorrect. The University does not pay the Amherst fire department. The Collegian regrets the error.

"I want to be the connection between the town, the university and the students," Pavesi said. "UMass needs student representation in the town; not only to bring our issues to the forefront of town government, but so that we can have a say in the laws."

One of Pavesi's main concerns is the apartment complexes in the South Point and Brittany Manor area. According to Pavesi landlords in these areas are neglecting the housing and the residents are living in virtual poverty.

"Students and low income families are living in poverty, and unless something is done about it, problems will continue to exist and more money will be pumped into to solving them," Pavesi said. "Send the building inspector in."

"Amherst has to improve the communities first, and a cheap and cost effective way of doing that is by forcing landlords to take care of their property," Pavesi said.

Pavesi also feels that increasing the property tax is not the answer to Amherst's budget problems.

"The biggest thing is that the town doesn't have much money," Pavesi said. "Instead of raising property tax which hurts people on fixed incomes, the students and the elderly, the town should better use its existing resources."

Pavesi also wants a polling place on campus so that students will be encouraged to vote. According to Pavesi there are approximately 1000 registered voters on campus.

Hey! You Just Finished Classes! WHAT are you Going to do NOW?

- Spend your days asking people if they want fries with that.
- Wear expensive, hot, scratchy work clothes to a desk job you're way overqualified for.
- Sit at home and watch TV until your parents notice.

Why Do That When You Could Be Doing This:

Classes are over. Life's beginning. Time to apply to the National Civilian Community Corps (NCCC). With a residential campus on the shores of the Chesapeake Bay at Aberdeen Proving Ground, Maryland, NCCC is a new environmental and community service program. It's part of AmeriCorps*, the President's new national service initiative.*

If You're 18-24, You're Eligible

If you're age 18-24 and are interested in helping conserve and protect America's communities and their natural resources, then consider applying to NCCC.

You'll spend 11 months restoring wetlands, conducting workshops for schoolkids and doing other important projects that really do make a difference.

But There's More! As Part of NCCC You'll:

Do great work and get great benefits.

- Housing, meals, health care, uniforms all provided free of charge.
- Earn a monthly cash benefit.
- Receive close to $5,000 to pay for school or student loans.
- Gain valuable training and leadership skills.

Call today for your application: 800-94-ACORPS

Applicants must be citizens or permanent residents of the U.S., but do not need to have graduated from college yet. The deadline to apply is April 15th! NCCC believes diversity brings strength to an organization, and encourages those who would enrich its diversity to apply.

Cartoonist on hand to sign books

Spiegelman also gives lecture about Holocaust works

By MARNI E. HELFNER
Collegian Staff

Despite all the technical difficulties that were encountered, Art Spiegelman, author of Maus, A Survivor's Tale, My Father Bleeds History, and Maus II, A Survivor's Tale, And Here My Troubles Began, lectured last night in the Campus Center Auditorium.

Sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program, Spiegelman was invited to speak as part of Yom Hasho'ah Vehaguvrah, also known as Holocaust Remembrance Week.

His books concern the tale of his family, specifically his father, at the hands of the Nazis and his experiences in Auschwitz, a Nazi concentration camp during World War II. It also concerns the delicate balance between past and present, and the relationship Spiegelman had with his father, Vladek.

Spiegelman spoke for approximately two hours, were he combined his lecture with a series of slides of his books. He explained how he combined the ideas of the traditional vertical and horizontal in comics, and how the definition of comic lead him to develop new ideas in framing his story.

Spiegelman described how he looked up "comic" in the dictionary, and how he followed through the dictionary to "narrative" to "story" to the Latin "historia," which relates to the stained glass pictures in churches. From there, Spiegelman explained how he tried to frame his images in that manner and create a story within a building.

An example that he showed was from a drawing of a building where immigrants in Eastern Germany were attacked and the building was burnt by neo-Nazis. The frames of the text were placed into a figure of the building itself.

It was this discussion of the act of the creation of his work that helped many listeners to better understand his work. "I could better understand some parts of the book because I had a better understanding of the technical layout of his book," said Maria Kubik, senior English major.

Several times throughout the lecture, Spiegelman encountered technical problems with the slide projector, and with great ease, he had the lights brought up and received questions until the problem was fixed.

The questions posed ranged from "Do you smoke on stage to get attention?" to questions regarding his work as historical text, to queries about his style and development as a cartoonist.

He answered all his questions with humor and wit, and often left the audience laughing at his retort or answer.

Spiegelman also commented on how his work was accepted or criticized, "It's safe to accept comics as art...it contains elements outside of critical radar."

He ended the slide show early to provide for additional questions, and at one point the members of DVP requested that the question period end to facilitate the reception after the lecture.

Professor James Young, who teaches a cross-listed Comparative Literature/Judaic Studies/English course entitled "representing the Holocaust", commented on Speigelmen's lecture, "I love the way Art makes his own...bringing these ideas to performance. We get to watch a mind at work and so see the process and the unfolding of art."

Holocaust Memorial Week

Earlier in the day, Spiegelman signed copies of his work in the campus center. He was greeted with long lines of students and faculty who were willing to wait to have their books signed. As a treat, Spiegelman drew pictures of mice in every book he signed.

With the auditorium filled to capacity, and standing room only, DVP estimates of the evening's attendance were approximately six to seven hundred.

Biodegradable plastics praised

By JESSICA TAVERNA
Collegian Staff

The production of biodegradable plastics could impact the waste disposal problem. Such production could reduce landfill sites around the country and replace them with compost facilities for easy and efficient disposal of 75 percent of household waste, according to Robert Lenz, professor of polymer science and engineering at the University of Massachusetts.

Lenz said if companies used these plastics the price would be costly, but the products would decompose over a span of six months, instead of being closed away in landfill "tombs" for years on end.

During Lenz's presentation at Memorial Hall last Thursday, he emphasized the importance of "nature's recycling," wherein the theory lies that "everything nature produces, nature can destroy."

By utilizing a certain type of bacteria whose molecular makeup enables it to self-destruct under certain conditions that could be provided through compost facilities, fumes from incineration could be cut out and a greater percentage of refuse would be eliminated, Lenz said.

Research was initiated by Lenz and colleague Clinton Fuller, a biochemistry professor at UMass, several years ago. Since that time, a compost facility was constructed on campus and is slowly drawing the attention of both the media and the industry, Lenz said.

The program is run under a "land grant" from the state, as a source for field study geared towards "education in service to society," Provost Glen Gordon said.

JESSICA TAVERNA / COLLEGIAN

Robert Lenz.

Other countries have already begun to use these new materials, like Japan who purchases 600,000 pounds of it a year from England. Though, according to Lenz, the U.S. industry has failed to get involved as a result of short-term patterns.

"This event gave some honor to the very good faculty and gave the audience a good chance to learn about this higher technology," Chemical Engineering Graduate Student Winyng Shen said.

"In the field of chemical sciences on campus, this is probably the strongest collection of programs we have and it is among the top ten in the country," Gordon said.

Remember the Holocaust

This week the University marks Yom Hasho'ah Vehaguvrah, also known as Holocaust Remembrance Day, with various events across the campus. Yet, even today, there are still people preaching Holocaust revisionism.

Holocaust revisionism is a term that includes different groups, such as The Committee for Open Debate on the Holocaust (CODOH) who "...deny that the German State had a policy to exterminate the Jewish people by putting them to death in gas chambers or by killing them through abuse or neglect."

Marni Helfner

There are also neo-Nazi groups that deny any part of the Holocaust ever happened. Perhaps the most tragic thing these groups have in common is the belief that the Nazis did not have a plan to extinguish the Jewish race.

I am of Jewish descent. I am an atheist by choice, and a Jew by culture. I was raised with a decisive history of my culture and people. The one thing I have had driven into me for years is that the purpose of the Nazis' Holocaust was to remove all traces of Judaism and other "undesirables" from the planet. While both sides of my family have suffered from persecution because of their Judaism, my mother's side suffered the most. Both of my grandparents were born and raised in Germany.

One of the things that my grandparents have suffered since their emigration to the United States during the war is a conflict within themselves. My grandmother, who spoke German until the day she died, saw herself as both a German and a Jew.

When the Nazis came to power in the thirties and forties, the tide turned against her and other Jews, and Nazi propaganda said there was no way she could be a German. A woman who had always been proud of her German heritage was suddenly told that she was evil, and that Jews were the cause of the demise of Germany.

The Nazis slowly began to take away her rights. Jews could no longer hold businesses, property or political office. Suddenly, she found herself no longer a citizen of the proud country she had been born and raised in.

The most horrifying aspect of this destruction of personal identity was the Nazi order that all Jewish passports be changed. At this point, a large portion of my grandmother's family escaped to the United States and Mexico.

Those who remained behind perished at the hands of the Nazis.

In the late 1980s my grandmother returned to her hometown in Germany for the first time since she'd left. My family was split; my grandmother wanted to forgive and never forget, and my mother wanted her to neither forgive nor forget. My grandmother saw the home she was forced to leave to many years ago, and the evidence of a once rich Jewish culture was gone. Only one Jew remained, and the culture and spirit of the town had changed.

My grandmother returned to the United States more confused than ever. She had gone home hoping that she would be able to find some peace with her identity, and had instead found that what was could never be again.

Holocaust revisionists want to deny the extensive damage that happened to my grandmother. Groups like CODOH and The Institute for Historical Revision try to take away the history of what happened to six million.

Over the past several months, I have been reading the various pieces of "literature" sent to the Collegian by groups like CODOH, or even more ominous pieces of mail that come without return addresses. Everytime I pick up a piece of this garbage I am sickened. Sickened by the lies, misrepresentations and attempts to disguise this blatant anti-Semitism as legitimate historical debate.

CODOH propaganda uses terms like "maelstrom," "German proper," and "Holocaust lobby." They send slick newsletters to college and high school newspapers, trying to present themselves as legitimate sources of information. They place full–page advertisements designed to appear as part of the newspaper. They don't want the reader to think that they might be separate from the real world.

Revisionists deny that the Nazis wanted to destroy the Jewish people and remove them from Germany and the world. Today, when people ask me my heritage, I say Latvian, Polish, German and Jewish. More often than not, the person responds, "I thought you couldn't be a German and a Jew? Didn't the Germans try to kill all the Jews?" Then I carefully have to explain how it works, and explain that the two can co-exist.

Friday is Holocaust Remembrance Day, a day to remember why thousands of people died at the hands of the Nazis. Do not allow them to be so easily forgotten.

Marni Helfner is a Collegian columnist.

Dating outside your faith

Every boy I have dated has come under the same scrutiny by my family. in between asking his name and whether he's a nice, decent human being comes the "is he Jewish?" question.

In the midst of a searching–for–my–identity/questioning– the–world phase, I fell in love with a non–Jewish boy. We didn't mean to fall in love; that was almost three years ago.

Unfortunately, no one in my family is satisfied that I've found a sweet, intelligent man who treats me with respect and love. He isn't Jewish, so he will never meet their standards.

My parents have always instilled in me pride for who I am, especially my faith, and I always took in the Judaism they fed to me. But around the time I met my beloved, during the transition of moving away and adjusting to college, I began questioning everything.

I regard myself as a rational, moral person and I do not doubt that my children will be raised with a deep love and respect for the Jewish faith and culture.

Lisa Greenfield

After a year of distancing myself from Judaism, for the purpose of being able to question it, I decided to do something. I began writing on Jewish affairs for the Collegian, which led me to Hillel. For the first time in my life I feel as though I am a working, vital part of the Jewish community.

Over winter break, i took a tour of Israel. The slightly self–righteous tour leader provided several programs and advice about the need to date/marry Jewish. She reiterated all the arguments I have heard, and I think many are valid:

Jews should stay together to combat the self–hatred and denial within the Jewish community. it's easier to raise Jewish children if both parents are Jewish. Acceptance and relationships are easier among people of the same faith. Values, beliefs and priorities are supposedly similar.

Someone once said to me, "If you marry someone who is not Jewish, all you will ever be to him is a Jew." My response is that if I marry a man, all I will ever be to him is a woman. I do not plan on sacrificing any of my womanhood in marriage, and I will no sacrifice my Judaism either. Besides, if I marry a Jew, I may be rejected because I'm not Jewish enough, or I may be too Jewish.

I understand the need to remember and honor my history and culture. Judaism is an important part of my identity. I plan on giving my love for Judaism to my children regardless of who I marry. If my beloved were Jewish, the only thing that would be easier is acceptance from others.

Religion seems to be dying in our society. I do not think this is right or wrong. All I know is that two Jewish parents do not necessarily raise a perfect Jewish child. i know many people who have rejected Judaism even though both parents were perfectly good Jews.

My judgement, morality and loyalty have continually been questioned on this issue. I regard myself as a rational, moral person and I do not doubt that my children will be raised with a deep love and respect for the Jewish faith and culture.

If anyone has a problem with my interfaith relationship, i feel they lack the understanding of themselves and have never questioned the sincerity and depth of their beliefs. I think everyone needs to examine what they honestly feel and believe.

My point of view on interfaith relationships may sound selfish. I care about being honest to myself. Sometimes I forget, but there does exist a reality that I cannot save the world. I cannot singlehandedly wipe out prejudice.

My identity and future are secure; I know exactly who I am and what i will be. My devotion and commitment to Judaism is firm. i do not claim to be a model Jew. I try to be a good human being, which is all I can ever promise. I cannot live for others who do not approve, which goes for my family, my mate, and everyone else.

Flaws of socialism thinking

Smash the state. Wrestle ownership of the means of production away from the oppressive capitalist ruling class. Break up world dominance of multinational corporations. Power to the people.

No, I have not turned into a communist. The above slogans are cries of radical socialists across the world. What i intend to do is to show how dated this type of political thinking is, and how it fails to confront some of the world's most pressing problems.

Andrew Davidson

During the 18th and 19th centuries, British political philosophers developed the concept of ownership and property rights. Democracy as we know it was founded upon a system of property rights; people's right to political freedom evolved directly from their right to property.

Socialists, however, believe in rolling back the evolution of society and abolishing one of the most important concepts of political rights which our polity depends upon. They feel that the concept of ownership exacerbates the differences between those who own means of production and those who exploited by the capitalists who depend on the concept of ownership to exploit those workers.

If this thinking sounds outdated to you, you aren't alone. Have you ever heard of the tragedy of the commons? Imagine, if you will, if there were a large stock of fish in the campus pond, which we will assume to be owned collectively by the students of UMass. A bunch of people decide to start fishing in order to keep themselves fed. With 19,000 undergraduates, however, the pond could soon become depleted of its supply of fish.

The problem is, however, that no one has the incentive to stop fishing — if they do, they won't have anything to eat. Without a system of ownership, there is no one whose name is emblazoned on the title of the pond, and therefore no one to make sure that the pond is well stocked in the future. Everyone who depends on the pond for fish is too myopic to realize their short term need for food, without proper planning, is what will end up depleting their natural resources.

Which brings me to my point: socialism, while it sounds utopian in theory, has had a very shoddy institutional history. While it may serve to redistribute income to a certain extent, it tends to centralize power even more than in the capitalist system it intended to replace. And since its ultimate goal is not efficient production but an equitable distribution of income, socialist economies often overproduce even more than do capitalist ones. (can Russia do anything besides produce outdated military hardware and flood world aluminum markets?)

if you are reading this, then you probably have spent some time in the Happy Valley, which means you've probably been in a discussion with a local socialist. Tell them that the problems of Eastern Europe prove that socialism is flawed, and you'll probably hear this type of response: "Oh, yeah, but that's not real socialism – not the way Marx (or Lenin, or Trotsky) meant it to be. That kind of socialism is much better than the capitalist system under which we live."

To say that an ideal system is vastly superior to a practical example is like comparing apples and oranges. The socialist movement has the distinct advantage of being able to use their entire efforts to criticize the current system being used.

But the real world examples of how socialist ideals have been institutionalized proves that socialist thinking is in many ways incompatible with the realities of the world in which we live.

In the industrial world of Engels and Marx, the revolutionary concept of overthrowing power may have seemed like a good idea. But with the advent of the 40–hour week, child labor laws, and anticipated health insurance, the basis for the motivation behind the socialist movement is becoming increasingly obsolete. And as we approach a new era, a new set of problems will arise which, without a respect for the need for property rights, the socialist agenda will completely ignore.

While socialist thinking may solve the problem as to what kind of input the working class has on production decisions, by shunning markets, it is unable to tackle what could be our most pressing problem in the next century: resource management.

While the market does potentially have flaws that threaten the future of our natural resources, if we force markets to pass on the true costs of all externalities to those who should be paying for them (tradeable pollution credits are an excellent example), then we could potentially avoid a crisis in resource management. Socialist thinking, by being unable to address this type of issue, is completely outdated.

Letters to the Editor

Not impressed by new bank program

To the editor:

Congratulations to Tracy Monahan on her front page article on the BayBank "Summer Exempt" program ["Bank lets students freeze assets," Collegian, April 4].

Ms. Monahan did a fine job explaining a new service provided by that huge, impersonal, commercial bank that will allow us tiny, insignificant students to avoid paying checking account fees over the summer. The bank is offering to "freeze" your account so that you can avoid all their hefty service charges. What a deal!

But wait, the University of Massachusetts Student Federai Credit Union, located on the main floor of the Student Union Building, offers a virtually free checking account to all UMass students. For a one–time, five dollar membership fee you gain your financial freedom. The credit union offers most of the same services as those large banks (money orders, traveler's checks, etc.).

I must extend my deepest sympathies to BayBank — It must be very difficult to produce multi–million dollar profits and compete against credit unions whose only goal is to serve their members on a not–for–profit basis.

And another thing about big banks...

To the editor:

This is in response to the article on the local bank which is beginning the "Summer Exempt" program this summer. At first, when I was reading the article, I wasn't sure what it was talking about. I was asking myself, "What the hell does this mean? Freeze your account so you don't have to pay?"

Then I remembered how it used to be before I joined the UMass Student Federal Credit Union. I used to get hit with all sorts of charges from my bank (like the $.75 charge for each check after my seventh each month).

Now I don't.

Equestrian team deserves support

To the editor:

Thirteen may be an unlucky number, but is it an excuse to leave the UMass Equestrian Team, out of the Collegian? "Winter teams set standards for greatness" [March 29] mentioned 12 teams for setting the standard for UMass sports, but conveniently left out the Equestrian Team.

The UMass Equestrian Team quietly became the number one ranked collegiate equestrian team in the nation midway through this season. And this past Saturday, the UMass Equestrian Team clinched first place in this region.

For the first time since 1974 the Equestrian Team will be going to Nationals. The team is also sending 14 of its 27 riders to Regionals to compete for a chance to go to Nationals individually.

Sue Shallcross captured High Point Rider honors, and will be competing for the Cacchione Cup, a prestigious award given to the best individual rider in the nation.

The Equestrian Team, under the leadership of Coach Wendy Ciccio, worked hard since try–outs in September without any recognition from the University. They competed with only the support of each other, their parents, and a few friends. They became No. 1 while the University agonized over Maryland's upset of our basketball team. Let's not let them go to Nationals without our support.

A voice from Israel: who are we kidding?

By Amnon Denker
Special to the Collegian

There has not been anything more disgusting for a long time than the alleged "inner reckoning" engaged in by politicians, intellectuals, rabbis and many of our leading lights in the wake of the Hebron massacre. What we saw was an orgy of self–embellishment and self–aggrandizement, an embarrassing display of chauvinism and slimy enthnocentricity which drew its inspiration from the same dirty sources from which the murderer and his friends had drawn their deeds and declarations.

In a conscious gesture of deep horror and a desire to distance themselves from the killings, they all voiced their condemnation on the basis that the deed was so very un– Jewish, so very un–Israeli, so very untypical of "us." It allegedly ran counter to all we were and did in 2,000 years. It was so irregular and alien to us that their gentle souls could not grasp at all how such a horrific thing could have come from amongst us.

We ... blew up houses, broke arms and legs, shot at children, killing hundreds of them...

Amnon Denkner

After all, it was implied that we were so very lovely and so very just that it was hard to imagine that the man was a Jew and an Israeli like the rest of us. It was said that we were, despite everything, still a fine lot and a light upon the Gentiles — and the nasty red stain we now carried merely served to show just how pure and white the rest of our garment was. Even this terrible incident did not teach us a little modesty, or make us a step down, even for a moment, from the wobbly stool we like to preach to the other nations from.

Oh, how wonderful we are. What other nation would have engaged in a mental reckoning like we did? Aren't we just marvelous? Well, my countrymen who are absorbed in narcissistic self–admiration that they guard their wars as if they were pearls, take for instance the Germans. They did their mental reckoning and then held huge, spontaneous mass demonstrations, after the cases of racist murder which took place there last year, on a bigger scale than there.

Okay, so they are Germans. And we are Jews, who were so lovely, blew up houses, broke arms and legs, shot at children, killing hundreds of them, humiliated and provoked people, broke into homes, smashed furniture, trampled human dignity under out boots, tortured when there were reasons and when there weren't for so very many years.

We, the Jews, are feeling pure yet we expropriated homes and fields, confiscated property and treated those under our rule with contempt and racism for years, while calling ours an "enlightened occupation." It was an exercise in self–love and self–delusion, which led us to claim such things as "if the Americans or the British were in the territories they would have done far worse things."

We, who are so very wise and just, still got ourselves into the morass of the occupation and trampled another people under foot, hating and oppressing it. We settled on its land and planted maniacs in the midst of their towns. We feel we are so great, nevertheless, that it seems to us a real miracle that such a Baruch Goldstein emerged from amongst our ranks. He is not, or course, one of us, but some type from Brooklyn who only due to some regrettable administrative error was given officer rank and a machine gun.

We the Jews who during the most violent and stormy demonstrations of, for instance, the stone–throwing and road blocking ultra–Orthodox, did not fire a single shot, not even in the air, would fire at any Arab demonstration. There would be dead bodies on the ground after that, for here we are dealing with people who are not lovely and not just, who had to be handled with firearms.

So, let us get on with the "moral reckoning" and the "internal debate about values" and all the other bullshit, to prove to ourselves and to others that we are lovely and clean. Let us appoint an investigating committee so we can look so very just and moral and strict with ourselves — but let us not do the one thing which would be the most rational moral and realistic thing to do: let us not admit that we are a nation like others, that our weapons are no purer than those of other nations, that our spirit is no more immune to racism and chauvinism, that there are amongst us cruel people and psychopaths and murderers and torturers. Let us admit that when the tribal drums are banged our eyes become bloodshot and we stop in our tracks.

Of course we won't admit that, for we are the people chosen from amongst all others. And there is something else we won't do: we shall not save ourselves and withdraw from the heart of Hebron or the lunatics from Josephs's Tomb in Nablus. We shall show the world that we are not just fair and lovely, but also firm and always stand up for our beliefs. For the Lord chose us and blessed us over all nations.

Instead, let us look in the mirror and admiringly kiss the image reflected there. Let it never be said that we feel sadness or regret like other nations. No, never! For we are Jews and Israelis — which is more than just people.

Carol Andreas on Peru's Revolutionary Women

For too long and by too many, women have been portrayed as either innocent victims of revoCarol Andreas on Peru's Revolutionary WomenCarol Andreas on Peru's Revolutionary Womention is acknowledged at all, as shapes of patriarchal leaders of violent struggles. The revolution in Peru, led by the Communist Party of Peru (PCP), belies both of these myths. Women have been the practical and theoretical leaders of the revolution at all levels, from armed guerrillas to the party's central committee.

Carol Andreas is the author of When Women Rebel: The Rise of Popular Feminism in Peru, and a professor of sociology at the University of Northern Colorado. She has written extensively on the participation and leadership of women in the Peruvian revolution, in direct refutation of the vicious, bourgeois lies that the PCP is a sexist organization which targets and suppresses feminists.

The following excerpts are from the April issue of MIM Notes, from an interview the Maoist International Movement, MIM conducted with Dr. Andreas in anticipation of her visit.

MIM: Many First World feminists, such as the editors of Ms Magazine, insist that violence is a male trait and that the PCP specifically is a patriarchal movement. Based on your work with women in Peru, how do you respond to this charge?

Andreas: Certainly men have been acculturated to be predators, and imperialists have used the macho appeal to get the public's cooperation in adventures such as the Gulf War. On the other hand, struggles against colonialism and neo–colonialism have always been most successful when women have taken the lead and overcome whatever fears and inhibitions they have in order to overthrow oppressors by whatever means necessary.

Women in the Communist Party of Peru have provided outstanding leadership since the party's early years in the 1970s. The PCP has distinguished itself from other political parties in Peru, where women's roles have characteristically been marginal or subordinate.

MIM: Why should the masses of women in Peru support the PCP? What kind of support from women does the party in fact enJoy?

Andreas: Because the war in Peru is a People's War, based in the countryside, where women predominate as poor peasants engaged in subsistence agriculture, and the party has found a natural base of support among women. The main issue at stake in the war is opposition to the government's policy of promoting "export–led growth," which brings benefit only to a few, especially those linked with foreign–owned companies. Women have been the first to suffer the effects of Peru's linkage with big banks and multinationals. As a group, poor women have an enormous stake in developing a self–sustained economy and in restructuring political control from the ground up.

MIM: What is the particular relationship of indigenous women to the revolution?

Andreas: Ever since the European conquest, indigenous women have been raped and degraded by conquerors, and men have been bought off to a certain extent by giving them authority over women. in indigenous communities, women's subordination has been incomplete, although most have been kept illiterate. In times of crisis, women have been empowered to lead in struggles to reclaim community land, water rights, and cultural prerogatives of native peoples. The PCP has recognized this tradition in a way that reformist unions and political parties have not, incorporating women's empowerment as a central part of its structure.

MIM: Do you think that the fact, and nature, of the participation of women In the revolution will affect their status when the Fujimori regime is finally defeated?

Andreas: if women do not lay down their guns, I think they will be able to maintain and build on gains won during the course of revolutionary struggle. In order for this to happen, they will have to be highly conscious of the danger of an anti–feminist backlash after the defeat of imperialist forces. I would hope that feminist movements — which, for all their weaknesses, are more developed than ever before on a global level — could play a supportive role in this regard.

MIM: The "Amerikan" media presents the PCP as having an anti–abortion position. Can you elaborate on (or refute) this claim?

Andreas: I know that the party has criticized bourgeois feminists for putting primary emphasis on legal reform and, on the struggle for abortion rights. Birth control programs have also been criticized as manipulative and exploitative of poor women, who need to win state power before a generalized improvement in the health and welfare of the population can occur. Within the party, both birth control and abortion are practiced. The PCP was the first political party in Peru to develop a comprehensive women's rights program at an all–female national conference held in 1975, before the movement initiated armed struggle.

MIM: What can you tell us about the treatment (and resistance) of women prisoners?

Andreas: Women political prisoners in Peru are systematically raped and tortured when they are first arrested. They are also subjected to beatings and deprivations of all sorts on a regular basis. Some of them are being held in solitary confinement. Over the years, authorities have admitted that PCP women rarely break under torture. The morale of prisoners remains high in spite of constant threats, degradation and assaults to their physical well–being.

Twilight of the second revolution

By Ilan Stavans
Special to the Collegian

Graham Greene, the British author of Power and the Glory, was commissioned to visit Mexico in 1938, a couple of decades after the Socialist Revolution of Pancho Villa and Emiliano Zapata, to find out how ordinary people reacted to the brutal anti–clerical purges of President Plutarco Elías Calles.

His journey took him to Talarco and Chiapas, where churches had been destroyed and priests shot to death or driven out of the region. As he interviewed peasants, soldiers and believers, he nurtured a deep hatred. How could a world like this end in anything but war, he wrote.

Images of the chaotic 1910 revolution: Salinas de Gortari and his party are quickly losing control of the situation.

Ilan Stavans

More than 50 years later, his views have become awkwardly prophetic. The relative civil tranquility and balancing political acts prolonged by the Institutional Revolutionary Party over the last few decades have pushed Mexico to the brink of unstoppable violence.

While the country underwent a drastic transformation from a pre–industrialized nation at the turn of the century to a competitive force in today's world economy, in numerous ways things have remained the way Greene experienced them.

The uprising of Indian peasants looking for the most basic improvements to their daily life has put Chiapas again on the political map and, as Greene's time, talks of secession from the centralized Mexican government are not uncommon in the Yucatan peninsula. An anti–clerical animosity against left–wing priests, particularly those sympathizing with Liberation theology, has infiltrated political circles. The dates and names of public figures might have changed, but the rest remains untouched. History in Mexico is cyclical. What we are witnessing is the foreseeable result of a long gestation.

The assassination on Wednesday [March 23] of Luis Donaldo Colosio, the ruling party's presidential candidate, is the latest addition to a troublesome political puzzle that began in January when the North American Free Trade Agreement went into effect.

The peace talks led by Miguel Camacho Solís and the approval of preliminary constitutional changes to make democracy a reality are the introducing chapters in the history of Mexico's second modern revolution.

Subcomandante Marcos, the mythical leader of the Zapatista National Liberation Army has quickly become a symbol of resistance for the lower class and the rioters in Mexico City, when demonstrators supporting opposition leader Cuathemoc Cardenas clashed with the police, are another example of middle–class impatience and lack of trust in government officials.

Prominent Intellectuals such as Carlos Fuentes and Octavio Paz have lost credibility: the army, accused of civil rights abuses during its Chiapas performance, is nervous and anarchy is in the air.

The months until the August elections promise to be ignitable. Mexico was born out of historical rape and has no democratic tradition. Morality is not only ambiguous but malleable. Since colonial times federal, state and local institutions have been intrusive, tyrannical, dogmatic and intransigent. Corruption and fraud, the law of the land are impossible to eradicate.

In power since the early '30s, PRI has perfected a dictatorial system where dissent is welcomed only to be quickly erased from public debate.

The 1994 transition will certainly be bloodier. Mexican politics have become a time bomb and war might be inevitable. Images of the chaotic 1910 revolution come to mind: Salinas de Gortari and his party are quickly losing control of the situation, Subcomandante Marcos has accused opposition leaders of inefficiency and lack of diplomatic vision, lone killers supported by reactionary politicians are on the lose.

While the Clinton administration has reason to worry, caution is a key element. Although a stable neighbor is obviously in Washington's best interest, the most sensitive approach to the situation is to leave Mexico's political fate to its citizens. After all, NAFTA, orchestrated by President Salinas, was first approached as a popular panacea and has now come to represent evil among Mexicans — an emblem of foreign manipulation.

it is to be hoped that democracy will prevail, even if liberty, freedom and justice for all have always been abstract ideas in Mexico.

How could a world like this end in anything but war? Graham Greene understood the nation's labyrinth path in 1988: democratic change in Mexico is a synonym of violence.

Free trade question examined

Developing World should establish new priorities.

By JUAN JOSE CHACON QUIROS
Collegian Staff

Free Trade Agreements (FTAs) are rapidly achieving the status of economic saviors of the world. The European Union, the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA), Mercosur, Caricom, Mercomun, they are all members of the free trade club.

A common characteristic of FTAs today is their regional composition. In every Free Trade Zone in the world today, countries are very close geographically. For industrialized countries, this characteristic seems like a good idea but for industrializing countries it takes away most of the benefits of trade.

People seem to associate free trade to neo–liberal economic thinking. It is wrong to think that way. Although free trade is an important characteristic of neo–liberal theory, developing countries can use trade without the need to adhere to a neo–liberal set of policies.

Neo–liberal thinking wants free trade, since industrializing countries have abundance of cheap labor and industrialized countries have abundance of capital. Therefore, the tale goes, labor intensive activities should take place in industrializing countries and capital intensive activities in the industrialized ones.

However, for this relationship to work it necessitates the safeguard of such economic relations among countries; not a very good recipe for economic development. The establishment of an FTA is the culmination of this process, the institutionalization of neo–liberal thinking.

The first element to consider is that free trade between developing countries and industrialized nations is not beneficial to developing countries. Is not a question of jobs, it's a question of directing production away from the internal market. It creates dependency on the volatile prices of cheap exports and expensive imports. If developing nations were to base their investment decisions on volatile prices they would be sacrificing long run growth.

Free trade is good, but for different reasons. The establishment of FTAs will only be beneficial to developing countries if these agreements can help the participants to reap the best elements of free trade. Therefore, if we establish an FTA with our geographic neighbors we can achieve some benefits.

However, it will also mean competing in many economic areas where these countries are similar. Why should two countries with similar composition of exports engage in a trading relationship? Are we going to trade bananas for bananas. Of course not! Let's establish free trade with countries outside of our regions. The transportation costs are higher but if developing countries can pool resources to create a transportation network, they would no longer depend on companies from Europe or North America when measuring the risks and benefits of export activities.

The benefits of trade can be huge if it takes place between developing countries of different regions. China, for example, has been trying to increase trade with Latin America but the United States is standing in the way, protecting their own economic interests.

If Latin America was to establish an FTA with China, it will gain more than Mexico with NAFTA. Why? Because the Latin America and China both have relatively cheap labor but that work force is not dedicated to the same production activities. They would not compete in the same markets, therefore they can complement their activities: You make the tea, I'll bring the sugar!

The notion that the choice is between labor and capital is completely misplaced. The choice is between a model that gives incentives to lower wages in order to compete in international markets, and a model that emphasizes production in activities that can meet the needs of the local population and complements the production activities of people in other countries.

Yes to Free Trade! No to the industrialized countries! It's about time we deal with ourselves.

Garden no average film

THE REEL WORLD
by Jon Lupo

Living in an oppressive house seemingly at the edge of nowhere (actually London's neglected Docklands), a father obsesses over an odd-looking garden of swirling brick and concrete. He's filling in the few remaining patches of grass with concrete because weeds threaten to overtake it. As Dad pours the wet concrete, upstairs, 15-year-old Jack masturbates, reaching his climax as Dad has a heart attack and dies.

Not your average movie? Thankfully, no. Andrew Birkin's The Cement Garden, is written by Ian McEwan, who also penned the source novel for 1991's The Comfort of Strangers. Like Paul Schrader's eerily magnetic Strangers, Birkin's atmospheric telling of Garden is perversely bewitching, a film that seduces the viewer into its spell without condemnation or sensationalization.

The storyline of Garden involves actual, implied and figurative incest, but McEwan and Birkin aren't interested in being lurid. Rather, the film peeks in between the cracks of this taboo and then upends it to the point where, at the end, it becomes less disturbing and more brave, even courageous.

After Dad dies, Jack (Andrew Robertson) and the rest of the family — teenage Julie (Charlotte Gainsbourg), younger kids Sue (Alice Coulthard) and Tom (Ned Birkin) as well as sickly mom (Sinead Cusak) try to adjust. When mom dies, Jack and Julie bury her in the basement in a cement-filled locker, afraid of being sent to an orphanage.

Soon, Jack and Julie are engaging in a dangerous kind of flirting game. Sue is writing letters to her dead mother in her diary and young Tom is dressing up like a girl when playing with a friend of his (the pair pretend they're Jack and Julie — and end up sleeping peacefully together in a makeshift playhouse). But while Jack is continually re-reads a sci-fi novel (the title is something along the lines of Journey to Oblivion), Julie's dating a thirtysomething developer (Jochen Horst) who stars asking questions about the smell coming from the basement.

Make no mistake, The Cement Garden isn't going for some kind of over-the-top/John Waters kind of comedy; this is all heavy stuff, played out with an assured allegiance to its characters. The house soon attains a gothic aura — the dirty dishes piling up in the sink, the once immaculate garden overrun with neglect. But the unity of this family remains, however skewed. There's a recurring image the mother and father walking with a young Jack and then, later, a young Julie that seems to suggest the incestuous longing is less in the present tense than a continuation of the past.

Yet however much the manifestations of incest play a part of the film, it isn't director Birkin's major theme. Gender is the real key to this film, and this exploration leads quite logically to the film's incest. It isn't a coincidence that little Tom wants to try being a girl, or that later, her reverts to an asexual infant. Or that it is Julie wither the short, more "masculine" haircut and not Jack, with the long locks, who launches into a monologue about the double standards of dress in one of the film's more pivotal scenes. This is a Garden in which gender can be questioned, and one whose themes can blossom, thorns and all, into more loaded issues.

Birkin's camera dwells (some may think too long) on intimate, frightful and sometimes opaque images; cracks in the concrete, shattered glass, heavy dust. While Birkin seems obsessed with these lingering snapshots, he still remains close to the story. And though the film is indeed stylized,

This evening the Fine Arts Center will present a unique collaboration between jazz music and contemporary dance. The performance will explore the boundaries of space and rhythm between the two arts, accenting the talents of renowned jazz pianist Billy Taylor and one of the hottest and most audacious choreographers in the country, David Parsons.

Dr. Billy Taylor is celebrating his 50th year in jazz and may be heard on numerous recordings. His first recording for GRP Records, "Dr. T" reached the top of the Billboard Jazz Chart. His brand new release, "It's a Matter of Pride," features long-time friend, saxophonist Stanley Turrentine and includes music from Step Into My Dream. Taylor also is in his 14th season as jazz correspondent on "CBS Sunday Morning with Charles Kuralt" for which he has won an Emmy Award.

David Parsons was a leading dancer with the Paul Taylor Dance Company from 1978-1987. Parson's has also made guest appearances with the New York City Ballet, the Berlin Opera and the White Oak Dance Project. He has choreographed works for the Paul Taylor Dance Company, the American Ballet Theater, Ballet Metropolitan, the National Ballet of Canada and Ballet Chicago. Of the eight performers in Parson's company, UMass alum and former dance major Patricia Ann Kenny will be gracing the FAC stage this evening.

The program will begin with the David Parson's Company performing two pieces Nascimento, with music composed, arranged, and conducted by Milton Nascimento and Parson's signature piece, Caught. The Billy Taylor Trio will then take the stage, with new band members Charles "Chip" Jackson on bass and Steve Johns on drums, to perform Paraphrase and His Name Was Martin, by Billy Taylor. Also being performed will be Cubano Chant, by Ray Bryant and The Man I Love by Gershwin. Both groups will then come together for their collaborative piece Step Into My Dream.

Step Into My Dream is an expression of different moods and genres of music. The piece possesses nine sections in its exploration of the blues, Brazilian, Cuban and West indian rhythms, rap and a waltz with a jazz backdrop.

As part of the FAC's educational outreach program, both David Parsons and Billy Taylor will be presenting lecture demonstrations to the Reid and Herberg Middle Schools in Pittsfield and Kensington School in Springfield as part of the ARTSTART program.

Tickets for this evenings performance are $23, $18, and $13, with half-price tickets for Five College students. Tickets for children 16 and under are $10. Call the Fine Arts Center Box Office at 545-2511.

Borderland plays bash in Van Meter

By JOSHUA BOYD
Collegian Staff

Borderland & Mocha Java
Van Meter Residence Hall
April 2, 1994

You needed to have fun on Saturday night. With approximately 2,347 of your friends home for Easter weekend, you needed to do something. If you saw the "Funk Bash" at Van Meter, you most likely did have that so desired fun.

The show started off with the startling duo of Gypsy Rodgers and Leila Nolet, as they sang such songs as Simon & Garfunkel's aptly optimistic "59th Street Bridge Song (Feelin' Groovy)" and a Southern blues-inspired original, "The Blues Are Gone."

Mocha Java played their set like they truly were made of caffeine. This five-piece group threw together rhythmic jams in a clash of explosive riffs and psychedelic vocals. With percussionist Todd LaChance inserting clicks and congas here and there, the chemistry most of the time had a positive reaction. The audience pulled up to the hemline of the "stage," but only when excited by the band's request. But there were still enough happy faces and manic dancing to ensure this band a good future.

After LaChance, conga player Chip Dunne and two others hammered away bubbling percussion jams, Borderland's energetic show took the stage. Borderland, who has been playing in the Happy Valley for about five years now, first formed when guitarist and lead vocalist David Spigone and lead guitarist Jason Buhl played as an acoustic duo in their high school in Easton, Mass.

When they came to the Valley, they got together with amazing harmonica player, John Gibney, as well as bassist Chris Houston with a jumble of ex-drummers, they formed the electric blues/funk/rock machine they are today. Up to just a couple of months ago, the drummer jumble went on, until the band acquired Jeff Woods, who Buhl describes as a "funky drummer."

Saturday night's show proved Borderland's musical prowess. Spigone and Buhl shared the lead guitar slot throughout the show, both providing licks that were filled with blues and funk mastery. The cover of the classic bluesman Freddy King's song "Pack it Up" was an early high point. Originals such as "Loosen The Grip" and "Girl, You Sure Got Troubles" may lead one to hypothesize that Spigone is, in fact, pioneer bluesman Buddy Guy's illegitimate child.

John Gibney gave his harmonicas and lungs quite a beating much to the enjoyment of the dancing crowd. Borderland is one of the bands that give the Pioneer Valley scene a good name.

Members of other local bands Meristem and Square Pyramid were there taking in the show, giving you an example of the unity and support between the bands in the area. In the end, everybody was truly "funked up."

Healthy tips greet spring with a smile

By PEG MITCHEL
Collegian Correspondent

Okay, so every day this week you've been in an early morning rush, you get around to eating breakfast at noon, a snack at about dinner time, and more often than not you find yourself satisfying your craving for food sometime between 10 p.m. and 2 a.m.

A week later or less you wonder why your body feels quite a bit heavier and more sluggish than usual. Has this cycle been going on all semester?

Your first thought is a quick fix. Perhaps you'll try the starvation method for a week, in order to break this unhealthy cycle. Besides, everyone else you know is boasting about some new, incredible spring outfit or bathing suit they just bought. Stop right here.

If this sounds like you, begin by identifying the problems in your eating habits. Next, what is your goal? Is it to lose body fat and increase lean muscle mass? is it to simply lose weight? Or, do you want to know what types of foods are the better choice? In any case, most of you want quick results. But how can you set yourself up for a victory that will last?

Finding a diet to fit your energy needs takes some planning. But for starters there are several basic and important tips to consider. According to Consumer Reports(October 1992), nutrition experts believe there is strong evidence that high fat foods are a significant cause of weight gain.

Take a mental note on what types of foods you consume during the day. Does fat make up a large percentage of those foods? Last spring, the U.S. Department of Agriculture officially launched the Food Guide Pyramid plan for healthful eating. Its recommendations involve a daily plan of six to eleven servings of bread, rice, cereal, and pasta; three to five servings of vegetables; two to four servings of fruits, two to three servings of skim milk, yogurt or cheese, and two to three servings of meat, poultry, fish, dried beans, eggs, or nuts. Use fats and oils sparingly — sauces, butter, mayonnaise products, and fried foods.

Replacing high fat foods with the foods mentioned above will not only decrease your fat intake, but provide you with high fiber and protection against coronary heart disease.

Think about your goals. Consider a healthier diet, avoid eating late at night, and stick to some type of aerobic and resistance exercise. Fifteen to thirty minutes of aerobic activity three to five times a week, followed by a circuit training program is the best approach for a total body workout. Set yourself up for a victorious season!

Slowdive induces coma

Elvis Costello's latest release also disappoints

Elvis Costello
Brutal Youth
Warner Bros. Records

For about 15 years rock's "angry young man" Elvis Costello has been making some of the finest pop music around. The problem today is that Elvis in neither angry nor young anymore, so why is he is so dead-set on conjuring up the past with his latest release Brutal Youth?

For the first time since his 1986 classic Blood And Chocolate, Costello has reteamed with his old backing band, The Attractions, and results are more or less predictable.

What Costello gives us are 15 nicely polished pop tunes, that are clever as they are catchy, but are unfortunately as exciting as your parents' record collection.

The problem is that we have heard every one of these songs before. Tracks such as "Kinder Murder" and "20% Amnesia" reek of the intricate melodies and clever wordplay that Costello has been serving up for years. But while at one time these songs would have sounded fresh and relevant, they now sound boring and dated.

Elvis Costello has more than proved his abilities as an elite pop craftsman throughout the years. That is why it is hard not to realize that Costello probably could have written the tracks on Brutal Youth in his sleep. The sad thing is, he probably did. C+

Portastatic
I Hope Your Heart Is Not Brittle
Merge Records

Mac McCaughan must be one busy guy. Aside from fronting the alternative-wonder band Superchunk, running his own record label and working on side projects with members of Tsunami, he now delivers his first solo project under the pseudonym Portastatic.

I Hope Your Heart Is Not Brittle is basically a low-key affair, providing a desperately needed breath of fresh air from the more aggressive punk-anthems that McCaughan is usually noted for.

Playing virtually every instrument himself, McCaughan has managed to create an album that nervously balances the line between rock and folk, without ever sounding retro in the least. Songs such as "Naked Pilsners" and "Gutter" flow gently along, held in tow by McCaughan's delicate strumming and nervous warble, never threatening to become bogged down by the pompous angst that many of today's bands rely upon (i.e. Stone Temple Pilots).

While none of the tracks on I Hope Your Heart Is Not Brittle will rise up and become underground smashes, they do prove that McCaughan can write powerful tunes without the aid of power chords and distortion pedals. How many of today's flannel-clad misfits can claim that? B (M.Audette)

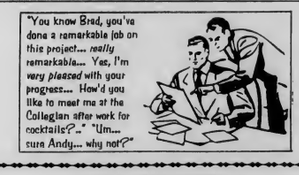
SBK Records

If I were any less excited by this record, I would be dead. No album has inspired such total ennui as this dream-pop band's latest effort. The songs are longer and slower than traffic jams on the Central Artery. Then again maybe they are just short songs that are so static that they seem like epics.



Now, I understand that I shouldn't expect raging punk or slap-happy rock anthems when indulging in Slowdive's music. What I do expect is something to hold me to a song, some unhinged twist or other, some musical epiphany that makes me want to listen.

Other dream-poppers, such as Stereolab or My Blood Valentine, make music that takes the basic genre's aesthetic of droning guitars and angelic vocals, and add personal and exciting twists, new sounds, and obscure melodies. Slowdive use simple melodies and stale song structure that sounds like Ride on Valium or something.

Songs such as "Sing," "Machine Gun," "Here She Comes" and "Siouvaki Space Station" become indistinguishable on an end to end listen. Granted, the ear candy can be enticing for the first minute of the song, but then nothing changes, and the yawns begin.

Slowdive have make a seriously boring album that can induce sleep in the most hyper individual. Insomniacs take note. D (B. Babineau)

Empowerment focus of group

By VANESSA AMIN
Collegian Staff

If you want to help empower women and the University of Massachusetts community on women's rights and equality, then the Progressive Organization for Women's Rights (P.O.W.E.R) is for you to join.

According to Stacy Malone, a political science/journalism major and member of P.O.W.E.R., the battle for women's rights is not over because women are still underpaid, under represented and are still being raped. Through this organization, women have a chance to understand themselves as strong women and start to exercise their rights, Malone said.

Our group is as diverse as possible which gives different views and perspectives on issues, Melanie DeSilva said, a social thought and political economy/communications major and a member of P.O.W.E.R. It does not matter what one's race, ethnicity, religion and culture is, women all have the same concerns like equal opportunity, sexual harassment, and violence against women, that need to be addressed, DeSilva said.

"For women to be free, you have to be anti-racism, anti- homophobic, pro-religious diversity, and have to fight for classism," DeSilva said.

The media has constructed a negative stereotype of feminism, Malone said. There is no definition or model for being a feminist. A woman working for women's rights is a feminist, she said.

"There is no reason why feminism can't be considered positive on campus," Malone said. "Feminism is in the heart of every woman who wants freedom."

According to DeSilva, male supremacy has put a negative stigma upon feminism because some men don't want equality for women. A feminist issue is not just about women, DeSilva said, saving the environment and animal rights is a feminist issue.

Sexism is an "umbrella" for all oppressions, Malone said. Feminism is a positive start in ending sexism so women can be respected as human beings rather than victims, Malone said.

This organization, which consists of approximately 35 members, gives women an opportunity to ask questions regarding their rights, Malone said. Our society does not ask questions like why women don't shave their legs or why women are underpaid, DeSilva said.

"No one asking questions can lead to ignorance and ignorance is comfortable," Malone said.

This group has sponsored the Tara Hartnett Memorial and an up coming event Take Back the Night March on April 14. For the future, this group is organizing rallies and speakouts that focus on women's rights.

"P.O.W.E.R. is not going to let the university s--t on women anymore," Malone said. "We should be treated with respect."

Women fight for potty equality

By JONATHAN YENKIN
Associated Press

BOSTON — Women have fought for equal pay and equal rights. Now they are setting their sights on another battleground — the bathroom.

Tired of standing in long lines, women activists are pushing a bill to get equal access to public restrooms by gaining an unequal number of lavatories — at least twice as many.

The bill, introduced for the first time in Massachusetts, is modeled on laws enacted in several other states that have granted "potty parity" to women.

"When you go to the beach, when you go to the theater, when you go anywhere, you stand in line and men don't," said Rep. Patricia Jehlen, D-Somerville, who is sponsoring the bill.

The legislation would only apply to facilities that are built after Jan. 1, or undergo major renovations, and have seating capacities of 500 or more people.

That would include entertainment facilities, convention centers, airports and other transportation terminals. Also, large restaurants and nightclubs meet the seating capacity threshold could be included.

In those facilities, women's lavatories would have to outnumber men's by at least 2-to-1.

Jehlen said studies have shown men typically spend 84 seconds going to the bathroom, while women average about three minutes. This discrepancy is not because women spend time primping themselves in front of mirrors, she said. "It's because they have different construction."

According to Jehlen's staff, seven states have adopted potty parity laws, including California and Michigan.

pro-choice," and "too pro-Weld," Zenon said on Sunday.

At the March 28 meeting, Flynn threatened to physically assault Zenon, who claims to have contacted the UMass police and the dean of students regarding Flynn's threats.

"I don't feel safe as long as he can freely be in the same areas I can," said Zenon.

Flynn acknowledged threatening to assault Zenon at the March 28 meeting.

"Greg has lied continuously and has embezzled money from the conservative alliance. If he had been dealing with someone less level-headed than myself, the consequences of his actions would have gained him more than a threat," Flynn said last night. "Nevertheless, I regret it."

it's never at the expense of its characters.

Anchoring the strong cast as Jack is Andrew Robertson, who manages to be innocent and revelatory at the same time. Hardly the leering, lecherous brother, Robertson instead manages a quietly wondrous performance. At one moment Jack sheds his clothes and runs through the sweeping rain. On paper it seems like script-demanded epiphany, but Robertson pushes the sequence into the realm of heavenly exuberance.

Equally smart in the less-detailed role of Julie is Charlotte Gainsbourg. Like Jack, she doesn't play the typical; she's not an overt temptress. Her scenes with Jack are refreshingly mature, as Gainsbourg magnifies her character's androgyny. In many ways, she's much more of an enigma than Jack; that is, you can always see her mind whirling. In the end, she reveals a tender knowingness that's extraordinary to watch unfold.

The best thing about The Cement Garden is that, by the end, it achieves a lyrical honesty that few movies even attempt. It's this reluctance to underline or sensationalize that makes the film so daring. There's a tenderness here that's amplified by its refreshingly un-affected performances. With its mature subject matter keying into the painful transition from youthful innocence to adult responsibility (and the ensuing guilt complex), The Cement Garden tells a gentle and wise story that triumphs just because it had the guts (and the talent) to be made this well. real estate allocation as Amherst and what sort of payments in leu of taxes occur there, is a necessary part of economic revitalization of Amherst, according to Stapleton.

Stapleton also endorses student representation in town.

"The students make an enormous voting block if they care to exercise that, and I know that there have been student members at town meeting," said Stapleton. "I think that's a good thing, and I endorse any increase in that kind of representation we can get."

Teen sentenced to life for first degree murder

NEWBURYPORT (AP) — Rejecting an insanity defense, a jury on Monday found Richard Baldwin, 17, guilty of first-degree murder in the November 1992 killing of 15-year-old Beth Brodie with a baseball bat.

Brodie's family cried as the verdict was returned and her father, Stephen, told the court he wished Massachusetts had the death penalty.

Since it does not, Judge John Murphy Jr. sentenced Baldwin to a mandatory life sentence without parole.

Baldwin, of Peabody, was charged with the November 1992 slaying of Brodie of Groveland, a sophomore at Pentucket Regional High School.

"Poor Richard Baldwin. He'd had a bad day and Beth had to pay for it," Brodie's father told the court during a victim impact statement. "How ironic Beth wanted to be a lawyer and help people like him."

"It's unfortunate in this state we don't have the death penalty, because that's the least he deserves," Brodie said. He said Beth Brodie wouldn't want Richard Baldwin executed because she was forgiving.

"But I am not that forgiving," Brodie said. "Please, your honor, put this animal away forever."

Baldwin's attorney, Hugh Samson, read a statement on behalf of the teen-age killer.

"There's nothing I can say to relieve the pain I caused. I would give my own life if it meant Beth could come back. I cannot expect forgiveness from anyone but God. I didn't ever mean to hurt Beth or anyone else," Baldwin said in the written statement. "I know how much you hate me and hope you can get on with your lives," Baldwin told the Brodie family in the statement.

Your Horoscope
By Joann Dixon

ARIES (March 21–April 19): The full in your love life will end soon. All your hard work to arrange a lucrative business deal will pay off. Creating a relaxed atmosphere at home will lead to deeper family rapport.

TAURUS (April 20–May 20): Career progress comes in small increments now. You need a favor, but the first person you ask may not be able to help. Do not take this refusal personally.

GEMINI (May 21–June 20): A job promotion is likely if you improve your skills. A long-distance financial transaction could prove disappointing. Pay close attention to details; it could mean the difference between success and failure.

CANCER (June 21–July 22): Valuable insights can be gained if you are observant today. Show others the courtesy you expect to receive. Return telephone calls promptly. Hard work brings unexpected benefits.

LEO (July 23–Aug. 22): Keep away from speculative financial ventures — even a calculated risk may backfire. Stay with what you know rather than changing fields. Those searching for love could find it nearby.

VIRGO (Aug. 23–Sept. 22): Your artistic or creative talents are in full force today. Write down clever ideas before they are lost forever. You and your partner speak the same language.

LIBRA (Sept. 23–Oct. 22): Keep your spirits up even if your finances are in a slump. A setback is strictly temporary. Domestic life holds more interest than in the recent past. New developments and changes are under way.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23–Nov. 21): Great things are possible today! You feel something special in the atmosphere. Do not ride roughshod over someone's feelings. Tenderness is the answer to a loved one's doubts.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22–Dec. 21): Mental and artistic endeavors are favored. You will receive good news about a project which has concerned you deeply for years. You find satisfaction in a job done well.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22–Jan. 19): If you steer a middle course today, everything should turn out fine. Quarrels are brewing for those who take minor matters too seriously. Stay calm.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20–Feb. 18): Too much passion or too great a hurry could land you in hot water. Take care of your duties without going out on a limb. Travel is favored for both business and pleasure.

PISCES (Feb. 19–March 20): Brooding over the inevitable will not help you bounce back. Do your best to nudge Lady Luck while she is in your corner! Better communication will make romance more rewarding. Drink more whiskey.

Baseball team dominates

Bennett, Minutemen crush Friars, 13–3, in home tilt

By ANTHONY GUIDO
Collegian Staff

Freshman Jason Bennett pitched seven and two–thirds strong innings as the University of Massachusetts baseball team overwhelmed Providence College from the outset, winning 13–3 in its home opener at Earl Lorden field.

"It was nice to get the win, we played well. It was a pretty good home crowd," Coach Mike Stone said.

Massachusetts (5–10, 3–2 Atlantic 10) took advantage of control problems from the PC (15–8, 4–2 Big East) pitchers all afternoon. Friar starting pitcher James O'Brien lasted four and one–third innings, giving up five earned runs.

Junior right fielder Bill Knight led the way with a two–run home run, finishing with three RBI. Junior catcher Andy Pelis broke out of a 4–for–30 batting slump by going three– for–three with three singles and a run scored.

Co–captain Greg LaRocca made his return to shortstop, after missing the previous three games with a twisted knee, going one–for–three with an RBI double. Sophomore left fielder Ryan Jette set the table with three stolen bases to go along with three RBI.

"Jette gets on base, he's real tough to throw out when he starts running," Stone said.

Jette led off the first inning with a walk and a stolen base, moved to scoring position on a Justin Howard sacrifice fly to center field. After a walk to Knight, LaRocca followed with a double and the Minutemen led 2–0 after the first.

ARAM COMEAU / COLLEGIAN

The University of Massachusetts baseball team (5–10, 3–2 in Atlantic 10 play) shined in its home opener, demolishing Providence College 13–3.
